Christie*, 42 Vt. 121, 1 Am. Rep. 313, where a vendor of land to induce the sale stated the quantity as of his own knowledge, and the vendee relying on such statement purchased, the statement being untrue, although not to the knowledge of the vendor. It was held that the vendor in representing as a fact that as to which he only had a belief was guilty of fraud and liable to the vendee for the damage sustained.

S. 265, 1 Meg. 292, 38 Wkly. Rep. 33. In the case last cited defendants were directors of a tramway company, which had power by a special act to make tramways, and with the consent of the board of trade to use steam power to move the carriages. In order to obtain the special act, the plans of the company required the approval of the board of trade, and the directors assumed that as their plans had been approved by the board before their act was passed the consent of the board to the use of steam power, which they had to obtain after the act was passed, would be given as of course. They issued a prospectus in which they called attention to their right to use steam power as one of the important features of their undertaking. The consent of the board of trade was refused, the company was wound up, and a shareholder brought an action of deceit against the directors. It was held that as the prospectus expressed the honest belief of the directors they were not liable, even though it was a belief for which no reasonable ground existed.

So in Loewen v. Harris, 57 Fed. 368, it was held that concealment by the owner of a business enterprise of a decline in its profits between the date of his agreement to sell and the signing of the contract of sale was actionable, when the purchaser had no opportunity of discovering the decline, and had agreed to buy on the faith of representations as to the prior rate of profit, telling the seller that he would not buy if there had been a decline. And in Cable v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 111 Fed. 19, 49 C. C. A. 216, it was held that a statement made in an application for life insurance, whether a warranty or only a representation, speaks from the time of the delivery of the policy, and if after the statement is made a material change occurs in the condition of the applicant, covered by such statement, before the contract is consummated, an absolute duty rests upon the applicant to make disclosure of the fact. have remotely or indirectly contributed to the transaction, or may have supplied a motive to the other party to enter into it. The representation must be the very ground on which the transaction has taken place. It may be stated as a rule that it is always material if, had it been known to be false, the contract would not have been entered into.²²

(II) REPRESENTATION AS TO ONE OF SEVERAL MATTERS. A misrepresentation as to one of several matters, which is material, or a representation including several matters which is false in one material point, is sufficient to vitiate the whole agreement.²³ It is not sufficient for the party to show that there were other representations or inducements in operation, without further proving that the agreement was due to them only, to the entire exclusion of the false representation.²⁴ And although the misrepresentation affects part only of the agreement, it in general vitiates it in toto; the party who made it is not entitled, by waiving the part affected, to enforce the rest.²⁵

Deceit which does not deceive, it has been said, is not fraud, and it would seem as reasonable to defend an action brought for the price of goods on the ground that the seller was a man of immoral character as to maintain that a contract was voidable by reason of a deceit practised by one party but in no way affecting the judgment of the other.²⁷

A. 121, the holder of a policy of life insurance determined to surrender it and obtain its surrender value, at the same time taking a new policy. For the purpose of effecting the change he went to the office of the agent of the company, where he was examined by its physician, who rejected him as an applicant for new insurance on the ground that he had an affection of the heart. At the same time the physician stated to him that the disease was not in itself dangerous and would not cause his death, but would prevent him from obtaining insurance in any other company, and advised him to retain the policy he then held. The insured, however, surrendered the policy, and he and his wife, who was the beneficiary, executed a release thereof. In fact his disease, as the physician knew, was likely to cause his death at any time, and did so within a few days thereafter. It was held that the wife could not avoid the release because of the false statement made by the physician, as it was not the inducement to its execution, nor intended to be so, although if the physician had stated the truth within his knowledge, it might have prevented the surrender of the policy.

makes false representations to the buyer as to their quality, but the buyer in making the purchase relies on a test of their quality made of one selected by him.²⁹ So one who contracts for the purchase of real estate after representations and statements of the vendor as to its character and value, but after he has visited and examined it for himself, and has had the means and opportunity of verifying such statements, cannot avoid the contract on the ground that they were false or exaggerated.³⁰

(iii) REPRESENTATION KNOWN TO BE FALSE. A representation which the other party knows to be untrue cannot have induced the contract or have been relied upon by him and is not a ground for avoiding it.³¹

(iv) LAPSE OF TIME. The fact that a considerable time elapsed after a representation was made, and before the party complaining of it acted, does not necessarily show that he did not act upon it.³²

(v) RIGHT TO RELY ON REPRESENTATIONS—(A) In General. There are certain representations, known as "dealer's talk," on which persons are not supposed to rely, and which cannot be set up as fraud. Of this character are representations amounting merely to commendatory expressions or exaggerated statements as to value, prospects, and the like, as where a seller puffs up the value and quality of his goods, or a man, to induce another to contract with him, holds out flattering prospects of gain. They are not such statements as reasonable men are in the habit of relying upon in making up their minds to enter into the agreement, and do not constitute fraud.³³

(B) Where Means of Knowledge Are at Hand. Where the means of knowledge of the truth of the representation are at the party's hand, he will be presumed to have had such knowledge, and the court will not generally relieve him.³⁴

tions are made by one, and the other has not equal facilities for ascertaining the truth, he has a right to rely upon them, and his neglect to investigate does not affect his rights.³⁶ So a party has a right to rely on a statement made by the other party as to a matter within the latter's knowledge, where the only other information obtainable would be a statement of another.³⁷ In general where a misrepresentation has in fact been made, the burden of proof lies upon the party making it to show not only that the other party had the means of information, but that he relied upon his own information or judgment and was not in fact misled by the misrepresentation,³⁸ unless it was understood that the other party should make an investigation and act upon his own judgment.³⁹

j. Damage Must Be Shown. As in an action for deceit,⁴⁰ so also in order to avoid a contract for false representations, it is essential that the party complaining shall have been prejudiced or injured by the fraud.⁴¹ Thus it has been held that a purchaser cannot recover damages for fraud when he was induced to pay less than the actual value of the goods,⁴² and that a party cannot avoid a security which he has given for a debt clearly due, because he was induced to give it by the false representations of the creditor, made in ignorance of the facts, rather than from a settled purpose to deceive.⁴³ It has also been held, although there are conflicting decisions, that a representation that was false at the time it was made, but which by a change of circumstances had become a true representation at the time it was acted upon, cannot be set up as constituting fraud.⁴⁴

3. EFFECT OF FRAUD—a. Contract Voidable and Not Void. On discovering the fraud by which he was induced to enter into a contract, the party defrauded may elect whether he will treat the contract as binding or refuse to be bound by it; but until he so elects it continues valid. An agreement procured by fraud is voidable and not void.⁴⁵ A contract obtained by fraud, being voidable and not resentations made by the other party to induce the trade, unless some fraud was practised upon him by the other party which prevented his making a full, fair, and complete examination of the property.

Conflicting decisions.—It is also held that fraud avoids a contract ab initio, and the party committing it can take no advantage of it, nor acquire any rights or interest by means of it, and therefore if the vendor of mortgaged goods, knowing of the mortgage, conceal it from the vendee, the vendee may, on discovering the fraud, treat the contract as void and rescind it by returning or offering to return the property and demanding that given in exchange for it; and that the vendor cannot defeat his right to rescind by afterward procuring a release of the property from the mortgage. *Merritt v. b. Remedies of Party Defrauded—(1) AFFIRMING CONTRACT AND SUING FOR DAMAGES. When a party has been induced to enter into a contract by false and fraudulent representations, he has several remedies. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350, 352, 353, where the court said: "There may be a waiver of a right to recover damages for the loss resulting from false and fraudulent representations by an express affirmance. It is essential to such a waiver, that the party should possess full knowledge of the fraud practiced upon him; that he should intend to confirm the contract and abandon all right to recover for the loss resulting from the fraud. . . . We fully recognize and approve the rule that a party may retain what he received, stand to his bargain, and recover for the loss caused him by the fraud. . . . We neither hold nor mean to hold, that affirmance by retention of the thing bargained for cuts off an action for damages. We do hold that, where a party with full knowledge of all the material facts does an act which indicates his intention to stand to the contract and waive all right of action for the fraud, he can not maintain an action for the original wrong practiced upon him. Where the affirmance of the contract is equivalent to a ratification, all right of action is gone. . . . It is only equivalent to a ratification when made with full knowledge of the fraud and of all material facts, and with the intention of abiding by the contract, and waiving all right to recover for the deception."

(E) Suing For Breach. If the party defrauded elects to rescind he cannot sue for breach of the contract.⁵⁶ Nor, having made a sale on credit, can he bring assumpsit for the purchase-price, for if he sues in assumpsit he affirms the express contract entered into between the parties, and where there is an express contract the law will not imply another.⁵⁷ If there be fraud on the part of the purchaser in respect to the purchase, the vendor may elect either to affirm the sale and sue for the price, or to treat the sale as void and follow the goods or proceeds.⁵⁸

(III) REFORMATION IN EQUITY. The jurisdiction of equity to reform an instrument on the ground of mistake⁵⁹ embraces also the jurisdiction to reform in the case of fraud.⁶⁰

(IV) CONTRACTS UNDER SEAL. At common law it was held that in a suit on a sealed instrument fraud could not be set up except as to fraud in the execution of the instrument,⁶¹ but the remedy was to resort to a court of equity to have the deed set aside.⁶² In England, however, since the act of 1854 giving courts of law power to entertain equitable pleas, such defenses have been permitted, and since the judicature act of 1873 giving the courts of law full equitable powers, the question is no longer a doubtful one.⁶³ In the United States, in the code states at least, a plea of fraud to a sealed instrument would now be good.⁶⁴

62. In Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. (Va.) 358, 366, 8 Am. Dec. 746, it was sought to defend against a deed in an ejectment suit on the ground that the defendant had been defrauded into making the deed by false statements in respect of the consideration. The court refused to consider the special finding of the jury showing such fraud, saying: "Such circumstances go to shew a want of consideration; and a defendant can not avoid a solemn deed on that ground, by parol, in a Court of law. In that Court, and on such an instrument, the principle that fraud and covin vacates every contract, is to be taken in subordination to another principle, namely, that the party is estopped from averring a matter of the kind against a specialty."

tiff cannot by reply set up fraud in the obtaining of the release, but must bring an independent suit in equity to rescind the release for the fraud;⁶⁵ while in others it is held that the plaintiff may intercept an affirmative defense of release by a count in the petition setting out the fraudulent procurement and asking its cancellation, although he should not be required to do so, nor be reverted to a separate bill in equity for such purpose, as the whole question can logically be determined when the release is pleaded by the defendant, if it is pleaded, by an issue of fraud raised by the reply and tried by the chancellor before the action at law is tried.⁶⁶ In other states the whole question, including the fraud in the release, is one for the jury.⁶⁷

c. Limitations to Right to Rescind—(i) MODE OF ELECTION. The election to rescind may be by express words or by acts evidencing an intention to treat the contract as not binding.⁶⁸

(ii) LACHES. The party may lose his right to rescind by not availing himself of his right within a reasonable time after discovering the fraud,⁶⁹ or after he might have discovered it by the use of due diligence.⁷⁰ So in equity unreasonable delay in taking steps to set aside a fraudulent contract will have the effect of affirming it.⁷¹ Laches, however, are not imputable to the party defrauded, until he has had such knowledge or means of knowledge as he was bound to avail himself of.⁷² And some courts hold that mere want of diligence in discovering the fraud does not deprive the injured party of his right to rescind; that he owes the defrauding party no duty of active vigilance, and that if he acts promptly after actual discovery of the fraud it is sufficient.⁷³

(iii) RATIFICATION BY ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS OR OTHERWISE. The party defrauded will generally lose his right to rescind if he takes any benefit under the contract or does any other act which implies an intention to abide by it or an affirmation of it⁷⁴ after he has become aware of the fraud.⁷⁵ Bringing an action on the contract or endeavoring to enforce it after knowledge of the fraud is an affirmance of it and will bar rescission.⁷⁶ So is continuing in the use or occupation of the property⁷⁷ or performing his part of the contract.⁷⁸ A waiver of the right to disaffirm does not require a consideration, such as is necessary to support a contract. A waiver may often take place in consequence of laches merely or in consequence of acting inconsistently with the idea of insisting on the right which is waived.⁷⁹ As we have seen, affirmance of a contract procured by fraud does not waive or bar the right to maintain an action or counter-claim for the damages sustained by reason of the fraud.⁸⁰

Illustrations.—Where a person by deceit induced another to purchase land, paying part cash and giving two notes for the balance, one secured by a mortgage on the land, and after discovery of the fraud the purchaser paid part of the balance by deeding a lot to the vendor and gave a new note and mortgage for the remainder, and defaulting on this, gave a new note and mortgage for the amount of the old one and interest, it was held that his acts subsequently to discovering the fraud amounted to an affirmance of the contract. *Ruhl v. In cases of mistake.—It has been held that avoided when the other party cannot be restored to his status quo: For a contract cannot be rescinded in part and stand good for the residue. If it cannot be rescinded in toto, it cannot be rescinded at all; but the party complaining of the non-performance, or the fraud, must resort to an action for damages."⁸²

(v) CONTRACT MUST BE RESCINDED IN TOTO. A rescission must be in toto. A party cannot affirm a contract in part and repudiate it in part. He cannot accept the benefits on the one hand while he shirks its disadvantages on the other.⁸³

(vi) RESTORING CONSIDERATION—(A) In General. It follows as a general rule that in order to rescind a contract for fraud, the party defrauded must restore or offer to restore the consideration which he has received under the contract.⁸⁴

the same rule applies in the rescission of contracts for mistake. The rule is as to two innocent parties who have performed acts under a mutual misunderstanding that the court will allow either to turn back, if he can take the other back with him; in other words the one party may unravel the contract if he can put the other party in statu quo. Therefore the buyer of a chattel who would rescind the sale on this ground and get back his price must restore the chattel to the seller, unless he can show that it is of no intrinsic value, and its loss, no injury to that party.

Thus where a person has been induced by fraud to buy goods, in order to avoid the contract upon the discovery of the fraud, he must return the goods; and if he does not or cannot do so he must pay the price, or at least the value of the goods. After consuming the goods wholly or in part the buyer cannot avoid the contract by which he obtained them, because he can no longer return them.⁸⁵ If the party cannot return any property received, he must offer to account for it at the price at which it was estimated in the contract, with interest thereon from the date of receiving such property.⁸⁶ If he has expended work, money, or material in the improvement of the property before discovering the fraud, he may restore the property and recover for what he has expended.⁸⁷

(B) Exceptions to Rule. To the rule that one rescinding a contract for fraud must restore what he has received under it, there are exceptions. He is not required to return a thing which is utterly worthless,⁸⁸ as for example a forged note.⁸⁹ So where the property is diminished in value by natural causes or rea-

Compromise and settlement for tort.—This principle applies equally in a case of a

Time of offer to restore.—As a rule the offer to restore comes too late if made for the first time at the trial. Herman v. Haf-fenegger, 54 Cal. 161. If a defrauded purchaser has taken the note of a third person in payment, it will not be sufficient to produce it at the trial and offer to restore it then. Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551; Crossen v. Murphy, 31 Oreg. 114, 49 Pac. 858. It is held, however, that if the vendor has taken the vendee's own note in payment, he need not offer to restore it before rescinding, but it will be sufficient if he delivers it up at the trial.

sonable use, or has been necessarily destroyed or diminished in discovering the fraud, it need not be returned.⁹⁰ And so it is where the property has been destroyed or taken from him without his fault.⁹¹ If the defrauded person, by reason of the wrongful conduct of the wrong-doer, is rendered incapable of fully restoring the latter to his former position, to that extent such restoration is not necessary to a rescission.⁹² It has also been held that a vendor may rescind the contract without tendering to the vendee the portion of the purchase-money paid, sideration is totally worthless, the question arises whether this means worthless to the defrauded person or absolutely without value to any one. In Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 283, 286, 34 Am. Dec. 56, which was a suit on a note given for an ox, defendant alleged that plaintiff made false representations as to the ox; that the ox was diseased, of no value, and worthless for any purpose, but did not offer to return the ox. The court said: "If that property was of no value, whether there was any fraud or not, the note would be nudum pactum. The defendant's counsel, not controverting the general rule, objects to the qualification of it. He says, that the ox, though valueless to the defendant, might be of value to the plaintiff, and so the defendant would be bound by his contract, although he acquired nothing by it. But a damage to the promisee is as good a consideration as a benefit to the promisor. If a chattel be of no value to any one, it cannot be the basis of a bargain; but if it be of any value to either party, it may be a good consideration for a promise. If it is beneficial to the purchaser, he certainly ought to pay for it. If it is a loss to the seller, he is entitled to remuneration for his loss. . . . He cannot rescind the contract, and yet retain any portion of the consideration. The only exception is, where the property is entirely worthless to both parties. In such case the return would be a useless ceremony which the law never requires. The purchaser cannot derive any benefit from the purchase and yet rescind the contract. . . . And, if the property would be of any benefit to the seller, he is equally bound to return it." And in Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551, 558, it was said: "The defendant contends that the stocks were worthless; and therefore it was unnecessary, as it would be useless, to return them. Such unquestionably is the rule of law, if they were absolutely of no value to either party. But it is not sufficient that they were of no intrinsic value, or of no market value. If they were capable of serving any purpose of advantage by their possession or control, or if their loss was a disadvantage to the tenant in any way, he was entitled to have them returned. This rule is held with great strictness in actions at law; as in the case of the casks that contained worthless lime (Conner v. Henderson, 15 Mass. 319, 8 Am. Dec. 103), and the sack that covered the rejected bale of cotton (Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205, 104 Mass. 494)."

Insolvency of maker of note.—One may rescind by offering to return notes in the condition he received them, notwithstanding the maker of the notes has become insolvent between the time of the contract and the time the fraud was discovered. Whitecomb v. Denio, 52 Vt. 382.

if it appears that the value of the goods claimed does not exceed the balance due the vendors.⁹³ So where plaintiff sought to rescind a contract of sale on the ground of fraud, he was not required to return payments made on account of the sale, where defendants had disposed of more than enough of the goods to cover the amount paid.⁹⁴ Since the doctrine that one must restore what he has received is so frequently used to shield the party guilty of the fraud, it is not strange that the courts have endeavored to put some limits to the doctrine itself. Hence we find several modern cases in which it is ruled that what was received need not be restored, but only credited on the demand, where plaintiff was entitled to receive it irrespective of the assent got by its delivery to him.⁹⁵ If a buyer's offer to restore the goods received by him under a sale induced by fraud is met by an absolute refusal of the seller to receive them if tendered, he will be relieved from St. 59, 27 Atl. 67, where it appeared that a firm of retail dealers by fraudulent representations induced plaintiffs, wholesale dealers, to sell them goods; that goods were sold at various dates during the succeeding six months; that for about two thirds of the goods notes were given; that some of the earlier notes were paid, but the remaining notes and the book-account were not paid; that the purchasers of the goods confessed judgments to other creditors, and plaintiffs, having identified certain of the goods levied upon, notified the sheriff that they had rescinded the contract of sale, and claimed the goods. On an interpleader the evidence tended to show that the purchasers had received from customers who had purchased some of the goods, more than the amount of the notes paid to plaintiffs. It was held that plaintiffs were not bound to refund the amounts of the notes paid to them. And see Mead v. Welch, 67 N. H. 341, 39 Atl. 970, where it was held that persons who had performed services under a contract which they were induced to make by fraud might rescind the contract and recover the reasonable value of their services, without restoring a sum advanced to them on the contract, where such sum was less than the reasonable value of the services performed.

App. 79, 105, where a portion of the consideration received on settlement was not paid back when it was sought to rescind the settlement, and the court said: "It is not the law that a party who has been induced by the fraud of the other party, to release his right of action against the latter, must restore the consideration which he has received for the giving of the release, in order to be entitled to set up the fraud in avoidance of the release in an action upon the cause of action thus released. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120. It is true, as a general proposition of law, that one, who is induced by fraud to enter into a contract with another, must, within a reasonable time after discovering the fraud, notify the other party of its rescission, and restore to him whatever consideration he has received under it. But he is not bound to restore to the other party what he has received under it, where the other party is indebted to him in a larger amount."

The origin of the old rule lay in the fact that a common-law court could not rescind, but could only treat as void that which was absolutely void ab initio; and therefore one who had received anything under a fraud practised in gaining assent must return to the rogue what the rogue had given him before he could begin to reclaim what the rogue had got from him. Equity never did require this. A bill in chancery offered to return if the court should so decree. Hoyt v. Jacques, 129 Mass. 286; Bloomer v. Waldron, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 361; Barker v. Walters, 8 Beav. 92; Jervis v. Berridge, L. R. 8 Ch. 351, 42 L. J. Ch. 518, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 481, 21 Wkly. Rep. 395. The best-considered cases in equity go far to bear out the proposition that there is a remedy in equity to ask the court to rescind without requiring an absolute return before suit, wherever such a return would operate to enhance the completeness of the fraud or abandon the little indemnity that already exists.

(VII) RESCISSION AS AGAINST THIRD PERSONS. As a contract induced by false representations is voidable and not void, and is valid until rescinded, if third parties, bona fide and for value, acquire property rights in goods obtained by fraud, these rights are valid as against the defrauded party.⁹⁷ But if the contract is not voidable but void, as where the fraud was as to the identity of the other party, and there was no intention that he should have title, even a bona fide purchaser from him gets no title.⁹⁸ And the same is true where possession only and not title is obtained by the defrauding party.⁹⁹ Even where the contract is merely voidable, the person defrauded may on rescinding recover property which he parted with from a third person, if the latter is not a purchaser for value, or if he purchased with notice of the fraud.¹

96. Milliken v. Skillings, 89 Me. 180, 183, 36 Atl. 77. In this case it was said: "The word 'offer' is frequently used by courts and text writers as synonymous with 'tender,' and it may be properly so used with reference to articles capable of manual delivery and actually produced. . . . But with respect to heavy articles of merchandise situated at a distance from the place to which they must be transported if restored to the vendor, the phrase 'offer to return' is more commonly and more aptly employed to express a willingness, or to make a proposal to rescind the contract and return the goods. It is not sufficient, however, for a buyer who has taken delivery of the goods at the vendor's place of business, merely to express a willingness or make a proposal to return the goods, or simply to give notice to the seller that he holds the goods subject to his order, or to request him to come and take them back. If he would rescind the contract, he must return or tender back the goods to the seller at the place of delivery unless upon making the offer so to do he is relieved of the obligation, as stated, by a refusal to receive them if tendered."

E. Duress — 1. DEFINITION. Duress is that degree of constraint or danger, either actually inflicted or threatened and impending, which is sufficient in severity or in apprehension to overcome the mind of a person of ordinary firmness.² It consists not merely in the act of imprisonment or other hardship to which the party was subjected, but in the state of mind produced by those circumstances, and in which the act sought to be avoided was done.³ Of course the agreement must have been entered into because of the imprisonment, or of fear of the threatened injury or imprisonment; otherwise there is no duress.⁴

2. EFFECT. A contract made under duress is voidable and not void, for the consent is present, although not such a free consent as the law requires.⁵ And the limits to the right of rescission of a contract obtained by fraud⁶ apply likewise to agreements voidable for duress. Thus if a person having been constrained by duress to make a contract afterward voluntarily acts upon it or in any way affirms its validity he precludes himself from afterward avoiding it.⁷ And duress

Involuntary action.—A contract would be void if the party were under an actual physical constraint, as if his hand was forcibly guided to sign his name or perhaps, as suggested by Pollock, if he were so prostrated by fear as not to know what he was doing, for in these cases there would not be a consent not free, but no consent at all. 3. COMMON-LAW DIVISIONS OF DURESS—a. In General. The common law divides the subject of duress into two classes: (1) Duress by imprisonment, and (2) duress per minas. This classification was uniformly adopted in the early history of the common law, and is generally preserved in the decisions of the English courts to the present day.¹¹

b. Duress of Imprisonment. Duress of imprisonment arises where a person is actually imprisoned (1) for an improper purpose without just cause,¹² (2) for a just cause without lawful authority,¹³ and (3) for a just cause and under proper authority but for an improper purpose.¹⁴ Hence it is only where the imprison-

but there must be a reasonable ground for apprehension that the threats will be carried into execution, and it must also appear that the threats operated upon the mind of the party so as to overcome his will.²¹ So a threat to prosecute at some indefinite time in the future would not be duress, particularly if the threatened person knew that the other had no present means of executing it by arresting him, and that he had a defense and could make it.²² Written securities extorted by means of threats of prosecution for criminal offenses of which the party threatened was guilty in fact, but which were in no manner connected with the demand for which compensation was sought, may be avoided.²³ On the other hand the law does not permit a criminal who has stolen property to defend against the debt, or its written acknowledgment or securities given for the debt, on the ground of threatened prosecution or imprisonment.²⁴ But in a suit to set aside the transaction the court may order a rescission or reconveyance on payment of the actual sum due.²⁵

There is no distinction in this respect between a deed and an agreement not under seal; and with regard to the former, the law is laid down in 2 Inst. 483, and Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 61, and the distinction pointed out between duress of, or menace to, the person and duress of goods. The former is a constraining force, which not only takes away the free agency, but may leave no room for appeal to the law for a remedy: a man, therefore, is not bound by the agreement which he enters into under such circumstances; but the fear that goods may be taken or injured does not deprive any one of his free agency who possesses that ordinary degree of firmness which the law requires all to exert."

constitute a ground for setting aside a contract made under its influence. The reason given for this is that the constraint which takes away free agency and destroys the power of withholding assent to a contract must be one which is imminent and without immediate means of prevention, and such as would operate on a person of a reasonable firmness of purpose. To avoid a contract on the ground of duress, the threats, according to the common-law doctrine, must be such as to strike with fear a person of common firmness and constancy of mind, and a person threatened with loss of property ought to have sufficient resolution to resist such a threat and to rely upon the law for his remedy.²⁸ As we shall see, however, this doctrine has been much modified by the later cases on equitable principles.²⁹

d. What Is Not Legal Duress. Duress by mere advice, direction, influence, and persuasion is not recognized in law.³⁰ Nor can a charge of legal duress be predicated upon a threat to injure one's credit,³¹ to withhold payment of a debt, to refuse performance of a contract,³² or to foreclose or exercise the power of sale on a mortgage;³³ a threat of arrest or arrest on civil process on a legal claim, when such arrest is allowed by law;³⁴ or a threat of, or the bringing of, a lawsuit or civil process.³⁵ Nor can a charge of duress be based upon merely speaking wrongly to a woman, without threats of personal violence,³⁶ mere vexation and annoyance,³⁷ mere pecuniary distress,³⁸ or the refusal to surrender property on which one has a lien.³⁹ And there is no duress where a man induces his wife to mortgage her separate estate by threatening to withdraw himself from her society if she refuses,⁴⁰ where a husband threatens that unless his wife signs his note as surety he will poison himself,⁴¹ or where a widow of a decedent threatens that she will take his body to a certain place for burial, unless his mother assigns a policy on his life.⁴²

of the law legal duress existed only where there was such a threat of danger to the object of it as was deemed sufficient to deprive a constant and courageous man of his free will and the circumstances requisite to that condition were distinctly fixed by law; that is to say, the resisting power which every person was bound to exercise for his own protection was measured, not by the standard of the individual affected, but by the standard of a man of courage.⁴³

b. Modification of Rule. Later there came a slight modification in the amount of resistance which a person was bound to make, it being changed from that of a constant and courageous man to that of a person of ordinary firmness.⁴⁴ But with this modification duress in the common-law courts was a matter of law and subject to the exact legal test just mentioned, and oppression or threats not amounting to duress within the rigorous rules of law, regardless of whether the oppression actually deprived the oppressed party of the exercise of his free will, was remediless except by an appeal to a court of equity, where a remedy was obtainable on the ground of undue influence.⁴⁵ The later cases, however, do not apply the strict doctrine of the common law as to duress, but apply the equitable doctrine in actions at law.⁴⁶

c. The Modern Doctrine. This modern doctrine holds that there is no legal standard of resistance which a person acted upon must come up to at his peril of being remediless for a wrong done to him, and no general rule as to the sufficiency of facts to produce duress. The question in each case is, Was the person so acted upon by threats of the person claiming the benefit of the contract, for the purposes of obtaining such contract, as to be bereft of the quality of mind essential 43. Coke Litt. 253; Pollock Contr. 554. And see 1 Bl. Comm. 130, 131, where it is said: "Whatever is done by a man, to save either life or member, is looked upon as done upon the highest necessity and compulsion. Therefore, if a man through fear of death or mayhem is prevailed upon to execute a deed, or do any other legal act: these, though accompanied by all the other requisite solemnities, may be afterwards avoided, if forced upon him by a well-grounded apprehension of losing his life, or even his limbs, in case of his non-compliance. . . . The constraint a man is under in these circumstances is called in law 'duress.' . . . A fear of battery, or being beaten, though never so well grounded, is no duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages: but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life or limb."

S.) 414, 21 L. ed. 457 (where it was said: "Unlawful duress is a good defense to a contract if it includes such degree of constraint or danger, either actually inflicted or threatened and impending, as is sufficient in severity or apprehension to overcome the mind and will of a person of ordinary firmness"). And see the following cases:

45. "The court of chancery besides a concurrent jurisdiction in cases of legal duress exercises an extended jurisdiction to grant relief in various cases of pressure which did not amount to duress at common law." Leake Contr. 354.

46. The expressions in some of the cases to the effect that the threat must be such as to overcome a person of "ordinary firmness of mind" or of "ordinary courage and constancy of mind" is hardly supported by any actual decision to that effect. Indeed the law as thus stated would seem to reverse the usual order of things and instead of protecting the weak against the strong, to throw its mantle around the strong and leave the weak and helpless beyond the pale of its protection. On the contrary the later cases "consider the quality of the contracting mind, and therefore hold the apparent, yet unreal, consent of a subject or timid person, or person of inferior intellect, as invalid as that of the strongest and most independent understanding, though the latter would not have been to the making of a contract, and was the contract thereby obtained?⁴⁷ Duress then, according to this class of cases, includes that condition of mind produced by the wrongful conduct of another, rendering a person incompetent to contract with the exercise of his free will power, whether formerly relievable at law on the ground of duress or in equity on the ground of wrongful compulsion.⁴⁸

d. Threats of Bodily Harm. The early common-law rule, as we have seen, was that, while a threat against one's life or to do bodily injury was of such a nature as to render the act done under its influence an act done under duress, yet the threat of bodily injury must be of great bodily harm, the loss of a limb or mayhem, and that a threat of a mere battery was not legal duress, for the reason that it was not sufficient to overcome the mind and will of an ordinarily firm and courageous man.⁴⁹ But the later American rule holds contracts induced by threats and fear of a battery voidable on the ground of duress.⁵⁰

e. Threats of Injury to Property—(i) IN GENERAL. According to the modern doctrine threats of destruction of property or duress of goods under oppressive circumstances will avoid a contract on the ground of duress, because in such cases there is nothing but the form of agreement without its substance.⁵¹

(ii) PARTIES NOT AT ARM'S LENGTH. Where the parties are not at arm's length, but one of them is in a position to dictate, the courts will treat agreements which are influenced by threats of injury to or withholding of property as made enthralled where the former was." Bishop Contr. § 719.

Absence of right to property.—The fact of duress of goods depends upon the right of a party to demand them as his property. Where one has in fact no right to demand goods except upon performance of terms and conditions imposed by law, it is not duress for a treasury agent to refuse to deliver them except upon those conditions. A compliance with the conditions by the owner, although thus exacted, must be deemed voluntary. Block v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cl. 461.

Real property is not in duress unless there be an illegal demand made against the owner, coupled with a present power or authority in the person making such demand to sell or dispose of the same if payment is not made as demanded. Mariposa Co. v. Bowman, Deady 228, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,089.

under duress,⁵² as for example where a common carrier refuses to deliver or transport freight already in his possession, unless the shipper will sign a special contract;⁵³ where illegal charges are exacted from a customs officer as a condition of the delivery of property;⁵⁴ where a banker refuses to honor a customer's check, unless he accedes to a false and fraudulent claim;⁵⁵ where one with the necessary power threatens to prevent the clearance of a vessel;⁵⁶ where a gas or water company refuses to furnish gas until a promise which it has no right to exact is made;⁵⁷ where a state institution refuses to admit a student unless a payment of an illegal fee is made by him;⁵⁸ and other like cases.⁵⁹ An order of a military commandant in time of war, after martial law has been declared, requiring an act to be performed by a citizen which is contrary to his inclination, constitutes duress, although no threats or demonstrations of violence are used at the time the act is performed.⁶⁰ And the position of a public officer is generally such that persons acceding to illegal exactions on his part may be said to do so under duress.⁶¹

Exercise of right not duress.—Where a baker, being deserted by his journeymen, applied to a bakers' union for other journeymen, and was refused aid unless he would execute his note to the union for a sum charged by it for its assistance, it was held, in an action on the note, that it was no duty of the union to supply defendant with journeymen, and that their refusal so to do, except upon an agreement for compensation, did not constitute duress. Graboski v. Gewerz, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 528, 44 N. Y. St. 127.

If

5. WHO MUST IMPOSE DURESS. Duress, to avoid a contract, must be the act of the other party himself or his agent, or must be imposed with his knowledge, and taken advantage of by him for the purpose of obtaining the agreement. Duress by a third person will not avoid a contract made with a party who was not cognizant of it.⁶³

6. UPON WHOM DURESS MUST BE IMPOSED. As a rule an agreement cannot be avoided because the duress was imposed on a third person. In other words the law does not regard one person as under duress who enters into a contract to relieve another person and not himself.⁶⁴ Thus the duress of a principal will not excuse, and cannot be pleaded by a surety;⁶⁵ and a servant cannot avoid a deed made by duress to his master nor conversely.⁶⁶ Nor can a bill of sale be impeached by the seller's creditors, or by an officer attaching in their behalf, on the ground of duress of the seller.⁶⁷ An exception to the general rule is where the subject of the duress is the wife, husband, parent, child,⁶⁸ or other near my goods have been wrongfully detained, and I pay money simply to obtain them again, that being paid under a species of duress or constraint, may be recovered back; but if, while my goods are in possession of another person, I make a binding agreement to pay a certain sum of money, and to receive them back, that cannot be avoided on the ground of duress."

F. Undue Influence — 1. DEFINITION. An exact definition of the term "undue influence" is not easy to frame, although frequently attempted by judges and text-writers.⁷⁰ Perhaps the best is that of Holland, who says: "Undue influence consists of acts which, though not fraudulent, amount to an abuse of the power which circumstances have given to the will of one individual over that of another."⁷¹

2. EQUITY JURISDICTION. Equity has always a jurisdiction to set aside agreements which have been induced by undue pressure or influence on one of the parties. An abuse of confidence will not be permitted to work profit to one and injury to another. Contracts made between persons in certain relative positions are treated in equity as subject to the general presumption of weakness on the one side, and oppression or advantage taken of that weakness on the other, and the transaction cannot stand, unless the person claiming the benefit of it is able to repel the presumption⁷² by contrary evidence, proving it to have been in point of fact fair, just, and reasonable.⁷³ So, as we have already seen, in case of any

Unfair dealing.—It has been suggested that "unfair dealing" is a more accurate expression to describe the acts which equity condemns than the term "undue influence." Harriman Contr. 259. relation of a confidential and fiduciary character which gives to one of the parties an undue advantage over the other the law requires the utmost degree of good faith in all transactions between them. Consequently any misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact, or just suspicion of artifice or undue influence, will induce the interposition of equity, and the vacation of any transaction between the parties under such circumstances.⁷⁴ It is not necessary that the undue influence shall have been due to extraneous circumstances, but it may have arisen in the course of the same transaction in which it was exerted.⁷⁵

3. CLASSIFICATION. The cases in which undue influence may arise are conveniently classified under three heads, namely: (1) Where a family or confidential relationship exists between the parties; (2) where there is a mental weakness in one caused either by age or illness; and (3) where one of the parties is necessitous or in distress.⁷⁶

4. DUE AND UNDUER INFLUENCE DISTINGUISHED. Solicitation, importunity, argument, and persuasion are not undue influence, and a contract is not to be set aside merely because the one party has used these means to obtain the consent of the other.⁷⁷ Influence obtained by persuasion and argument or by appeals to the affections is not prohibited either in law or morals and is not obnoxious even in courts of equity, and may be termed "due influence."⁷⁸ Nor is the case changed because the parties stand in confidential relations to each other.⁷⁹ The line between due and undue influence, when drawn, must be with full recognition of the liberty due every true owner to obey the voice of justice, the dictates of friendship, of gratitude, and of benevolence, as well as the claims of kindred, and, when not hindered by personal incapacity or particular regulations, to dispose of his own property according to his own free choice.⁸⁰ But on the other hand influence attained by flattery, importunity, superiority of will, mind, or character, which gives dominion over the will of another to such an extent as to destroy free agency or to constrain him to do against his will what he is unable to refuse, is such influence as equity condemns as undue.⁸¹

A faithful wife ought to have very great influence over her husband, and it is one of the necessary results of proper marriage relations"); Millican v. 81. Maryland.—Layman v. Conrey, 60 Md. 286.

5. PRESUMPTION OF UNDUE INFLUENCE. Where a relationship of a certain character is shown, or the circumstances of weakness, necessity, or distress are proved, equity will hold the agreement as procured by undue influence, and will relieve the promisor unless the other party is able to show that everything was fair, just, and reasonable.⁸² In some cases in order to raise the presumption of undue influence it is only necessary to show that the parties occupied a certain relation toward each other. The relation alone, being confidential, raises the presumption.⁸³ In others the confidential character of the relation must be shown.⁸⁴ Thus it is universally held that a gift or voluntary conveyance between parties standing in the confidential relation of child to parent is prima facie void, and will not be upheld except upon proof that it was the free, voluntary, and unbiased act of the person making it. This is so, because a child is presumed to be under the control of parental influence as long as the dominion of the parent lasts, and while that dominion exists it lies on the parent, maintaining the gift, to disprove the exercise of parental influence by proof that the child had independent advice or in some other way.⁸⁵ So as to the relationship of attorney and client where the transaction is called in question by the client.⁸⁶ In other cases the proof of the actual exercise of undue influence is required or it must be shown that the relations of the parties were actually such as to imply dominion or control of one over the other.⁸⁷ Where fiduciary relations, mental weakness, or other circumstances of like character are not shown, the burden is on the plaintiff who seeks to avoid the contract for fraud or undue influence.⁸⁸

6. PARTICULAR RELATIONS — a. Family Relations. A large class of cases where agreements and other transactions have been set aside on the ground of undue influence are those where the party benefited stood in such a family relationship to the other as to render the latter peculiarly subject to influence. The relationship of husband and wife⁸⁹ and parent and child⁹⁰ are two of the most important of these. But the rule is by no means limited to persons in these relations. It extends to any case in which one member of a family exercises a preponderating influence in the family counsels, either from age, from character, or from other circumstances.⁹¹

Qualification.—The principle as to the necessity of persons seeking independent advice before making disposition of property to attorneys, agents, or trustees, arises only in cases where these parties are seeking to obtain some benefit or advantage for themselves. If they are not seeking such advantage, and the conveyance is not for their benefit or at their solicitation, but is made to them in trust for a benevolent or charitable use, it will be sufficient that the grantor had an opportunity to obtain independent advice, that she was not prevented from doing so, that she fully comprehended what she was doing, and that it was her own voluntary act. Bowdoin College v. Merritt, 75 Fed. 480.

of undue influence.⁹⁵ So the burden rests upon one claiming to be a spiritualistic medium to show that a contract made by him with one having implicit belief in the existence of the powers claimed by such medium was free from undue influence.⁹⁶

(v) PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT. The relation of physician and patient is a confidential one of the same character as those just described.⁹⁷

(vi) PERSONS ENGAGED TO MARRY. The principle also extends to parties about to marry, in the making of antenuptial contracts. As to persons engaged to marry, it is said that owing to the confidential relations which exist between them, an antenuptial contract which appears to have been unfairly procured will be set aside.⁹⁸ Although in most of the cases relief was sought at the suit of the woman,⁹⁹ the same doctrine has been evoked for the protection of the man against the woman.¹

(vii) OTHER CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS. Other confidential relations may arise which do not fall under the special titles already enumerated, but as to which the same principle will be applied.² This principle, as was said in an

Woman acting independently.—Where the woman, it appears, was quite independent of the man, and wholly disregarded his advice and wishes, a contract will not be set aside merely on account of the confidential relation. Falk v. Turner, 101 Mass. 494.

1. Taylor v. Rickman, 1 N. C. 278. And see Rockafellow v. Newcomb, 57 Ill. 186, 192, 194, where an intended husband, at the woman's solicitation, deeded her a piece of land worth seven thousand dollars for one worth seven hundred dollars, and she afterward declined to marry him. The court said: "A woman can always exercise an undue influence over the man she professes to love. . . . She had an undue influence over him and took advantage of the relation between them;" and set aside the conveyance.

English case, applies to every case where influence is acquired and abused; where confidence is reposed and betrayed.³ In brief where parties occupy a relation from which an unusual degree of confidence or affection arises, the party in whom such confidence is reposed is held to the utmost good faith.⁴ Thus a confidential adviser, although not an attorney or solicitor, may be subject to the same rule.⁵ So of persons associated together in business.⁶ Where a young man who had just attained his majority incurred liabilities by the contrivance of an older man who had acquired a strong influence over him, and who professed to assist him in a career of extravagance and dissipation, it was held that influence of this nature, although it could not be called parental, spiritual, or fiduciary, entitled the young man to the protection of the court.⁷ And where conveyances were made by a man to his mistress, it was held that the onus of showing absence of undue influence was upon her.⁸ The mere fact that the parties were friends is not enough to raise a presumption of undue influence.⁹ So it has been held that there is no such relation of trust and confidence between a man and his mother-in-law as to raise the presumption of undue influence.¹⁰ And the relation between the purchaser of lands sold under a decree and the former owner of the land will not interfere with their freely contracting with each other in regard to extension of time of redemption.¹¹

c. Mental Weakness. At law mere weakness of mind is not a ground for releasing a person from his engagement, but there must have been an incapacity on his part to understand the nature and effect of the agreement. Hence mere weakness of mind or partial insanity or monomania, in connection with the subject of the agreement, would not affect its binding force.¹² So equity looks only to the competency of the understanding, and neither age, sickness, extreme distress, nor debility of body will affect the capacity to make a contract or convey-

Whereas in all other cases where those relations do not subsist, the confidence and the influence must be proved extrinsically; but where they are proved extrinsically, the rules of reason and common sense, and the technical rules of a court of equity, are just as applicable in the one case as in the other." ance, if sufficient intelligence remains to understand the transaction.¹³ In equity, however, where the mind is enfeebled by old age, sickness, great distress, or other like cause, whereby it is rendered incapable of resisting undue pressure, a contract made under such circumstances is made under undue influence. In such cases the view of equity is that the party has not exercised a deliberate judgment, but has been imposed upon by the stronger will and the latter is called upon to show the fairness of the agreement.¹⁴ And while both at law and in equity intoxication or habits of drunkenness are no ground for setting aside an agreement, unless the party did not at the time understand the nature of his act or the intoxication was procured by the act or connivance of the one against whom relief is sought,¹⁵ yet where it appears that undue advantage was taken of the person's condition to obtain an unconscionable bargain from him equity will interfere.¹⁶

d. Persons Unable to Read or Write. It is incumbent on one dealing with an unlettered man, who can neither read nor write, to show that such person fully understood the object and import of the writings upon which he is proceeding to charge him.¹⁷ But mere inability to read or write does not raise a presumption of undue influence.¹⁸

18. In Willard v. Pinard, 65 Vt. 160, 163, 26 Atl. 67, it was contended that the relations of the parties were such that the onus was on the plaintiff to show the fairness of the transaction. But the court said: "To establish this relation they rely upon the facts found; that the defendant and his wife were unable to read or write, much more than to write their names. It is not found that they were not possessed of ordinary faculties of mind, and ordinary memory and judgment in regard to property and its value. It is also found that the intestate was a business man and a lawyer; that he professed friendship for the defendants, agreed to treat them fairly, and to keep accurate accounts of their transactions. These agreements are no more than the law always implies in dealings between the ordinary debtor and creditor. It is not shown or claimed that the intestate ever was the trustee of the defendants in regard to any of their transactions. So far as is found the parties sustained to each other the ordinary relation existing between an educated, honest business man, and an ordinarily bright and capable man possessed of memory and judgment, but uneducated in knowledge of books and of the art of reading and writing except to a limited extent. The facts reported fail to bring the case within the principles governing the decisions cited for the defendants."

Illustrations.—In Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94, 10 N. W. 123, 41 Am. Rep. 711, a dissolute and inexperienced spendthrift twenty-five years old mortgaged all the real estate to which he was entitled under his father's will for five thousand dollars, as collateral to his note for that amount, made up as follows: One thousand dollars in cash; a due-bill of forty-seven dollars surrendered; one hundred and ninety-nine dollars interest credited on a previous mortgage; one hundred and ten dollars and thirty-five cents premiums paid on a life-insurance policy assigned to the mortgagee; and five hundred and fifty-six dollars retained to pay subsequent annual premiums thereon; and three thousand two hundred dollars for a conveyance of land worth one thousand dollars. The mortgagee was familiar with the mortgagor's circumstances and required him to buy the land as a condition of lending the money, although the mortgagor knew nothing of the land and had no use for it. It was held that the transaction was unconscionable and that the land should be redeemed, but that the mortgage should stand for the actual loans, indebtedness, advances, and credits, if the insurance policy was reassigned. See also Brown v. Hall, 14 R. I. 249, 51 Am. Rep. 375. In Baxter v. Wales, 12 Mass. 365, an agreement by which a person hired a cow of another, agreeing to return the animal within a year and pay six dollars, and, if the animal was not delivered in that time, to pay six dollars a year until she was delivered, was held unconscionable and unenforceable as to the agreement to pay at the rate of six dollars after the end of the first year.

Conveyance from husband to wife.—Where a husband conveyed to his wife land worth more than her inchoate right of dower in all his lands in consideration of her agreement to release her dower rights in any lands of his when requested, without further consideration, and thereafter, judgment of foreclosure having been entered on a mortgage on certain of his lands, and he being unable to pay the mortgage and having sold said lands pending suit, she, with intention to oppress him, to take advantage of his necessities, and to extort from him an unconscionable consideration for releasing her apparent right of dower in such lands, refused to release the same unless he should in consideration convey her certain other lands; and he, compelled by his necessities, yielded, it was held that the latter deed to her would be set aside. Van Dyke v. Wood, 60 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 324.

Payment to procure release from attachment.—Goods requiring special care, and of a perishable nature, were wrongfully taken and kept from the owner thereof by means of a writ of attachment fraudulently obtained, and were rapidly going to destruction, and the party in possession refused to surrender the goods on payment of the sum actually due, demanding more than twice that amount, and in addition thereto a release from all damages for his wrongful act, and the defendant in the attachment, to obtain possession of his property, paid the sum demanded and executed the release. In an action on the case for wrongfully suing out the attachment, it was held that the release could be avoided on the ground of oppression. Spaids v. Barrett, 57 Ill. 289, 11 Am. Rep. 10.

—A contract with a person for the sale or charge of property in expectancy, whether as reversioner or remainder-man, or whether as expectant heir or as expectant devisee or legatee of another, raises a presumption against the purchaser, which he must be prepared to rebut in order to support the contract, and great inadequacy of consideration will be a circumstance of great weight against him. Chesterfield v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 299, 26 Eng. Reprint 191, 2 Ves. 125, 28 Eng. Reprint 82, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. 483. The phrase "expectant heir" (with reference to the doctrine in question) "is used . . . as including every one who has either a vested remainder or a contingent remainder in a family property, including a remainder in a portion, as well as a remainder in an estate, and every one who has the hope of succession to the property of an ancestor, either by reason of his being the heir apparent or presumptive, or by reason merely of the expectation of a devise or bequest on account of the supposed or presumed affection of his ancestor or relative. More than this, the doctrine as to expectant heirs has been extended to all reversioners and remaindermen." Jessel, M. R., in Beynon v. Cook, L. R. 10 Ch. 389, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 353, 23 Wkly. Rep. 531. And see Hale v. Hallon, 90 Tex. 427, 39 S. W. 287, 59 Am. St. Rep. 819, 36 L. R. A. 75.

Mortgagor and mortgagee.—The sale by a mortgagor of his equity or redemption to the mortgagee will be rescinded if any undue ad-or contract which is unfair, made upon an inadequate consideration, and the like, even though there be no actual distress or threats, equity may relieve defensively or affirmatively.²⁰

7. INADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION. Inadequacy of consideration is neither in law nor in equity a ground for refusing the enforcement of an agreement.²¹ Standing alone it is not evidence of fraud or undue influence; but where the party was under the influence of another and was not a free agent, the fact that the consideration was inadequate is a material element in determining a court of equity to set the contract aside.²² And where the inadequacy is so gross as to shock the conscience and common sense of all men, it may amount both at law and in equity to proof of fraud, oppression, and undue influence.²³

Lender and borrower.—Agreements between lender and borrower are closely scrutinized because they are not always at arm's length. Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94, 10 N. W. 123, 41 Am. Rep. 711; Dorrill v. Eaton, 35 Mich. 302; Hough v. Hunt, 2 Ohio 495, 15 Am. Dec. 569; Brown v. Hall, 14 R. I. 249, 51 Am. Rep. 375; Cockell v. Taylor, 15 Beav. 103, 31 L. J. Ch. 545. Even in the absence of usury laws both the English and American courts have disallowed excessive interest, although reserved by contract between the parties. Sime v. Norris, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 84; Brown v. Hall, 14 R. I. 249, 51 Am. Rep. 375; Aylesford v. Morris, L. R. 8 Ch. 484, 42 L. J. Ch. 546, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 541, 21 Wkly. Rep. 424; Tyler v. Yates, L. Agreements held not unconscionable.—The following agreements have been held not unconscionable: An agreement by which a clerk in a mill was charged with overdeliveries from the mill to a drayman, and the drayman credited therewith, the drayman was charged with underdeliveries, and the amount of the same credited to the clerk, thus making overdeliveries from the mill a gain to the drayman and a loss to the clerk, and underdeliveries a loss to the drayman and a gain to the clerk, but intended as a check and to induce accuracy in deliveries (Maher v. Miller, 61 Ga. 556, 34 Am. Rep. 104); and an agreement between a street railway company and its conductor, requiring the conductor to register every passenger getting upon his car, forbidding him to receive a fare from a passenger, either directly or indirectly, and providing that for the violations of such rules a sum stated should be deducted from wages then or thereafter due him, which should belong to the company as liquidated damages (Gallagher v. Christopher, etc., R. Co., 14 Daly 366, 13 N. Y. St. 80; Birdsall v. Twenty-Third St. R. Co., 8 Daly (N. Y.) 419).

Even in courts of law, while it is laid down in many cases that adequacy of consideration is not material (see supra, IV, E) yet, if the contract be unreasonable and unconscionable, a court of law will give to the party who sues for the breach, not what the other party promised to pay, but only such as he is honestly and equitably entitled to. Baxter v. Wales, 12 Mass. 365; Leland v. Stone, 10 Mass. 459; Cutler v. Johnson, 8 Mass. 266; Cutler v. How, 8 Mass. 257; Waterbury v. Lasado, 68 Tex. 565, 5 S. W. 81; Hume v. U. S., 132 U. 8. RIGHT TO RESCIND AND LIMITATION — a. In General. The limitations as to the right to rescind for fraud²⁴ and for duress²⁵ apply also as a general rule to undue influence,²⁶ the agreement being simply voidable and capable of ratification by the party influenced.²⁷

b. Delay or Laches. There is a distinction, however, with respect to the effect of delay in rescinding. In the case of fraud, as soon as the fraud is discovered, the parties are placed on equal terms, and an affirmation of the contract binds the party who was originally defrauded or estops him after a time on account of delay or laches.²⁸ But in the case of undue influence it is not a particular statement, but a combination of circumstances, which constitutes the vitiating element in the contract, and unless it is clear that the will of the injured party was relieved from the dominant influence under which he acted, or that the imperfect knowledge with which he entered into the contract was supplemented by the fullest assistance and information, an affirmation will not be allowed to bind him nor will time be allowed to run against him.²⁹ The presumption of undue influence from the parental or quasi-parental relation does not cease when the child becomes of age and is emancipated by law. The confidential relation and presumption of undue influence continues until the child is entirely released from any sort of influence.³⁰ And the same principle applies to other Early cases at law.—The earliest case of this kind is James v. Morgan, 1 Lev. 111, reported as follows: "Assumpsit to pay for a Horse a Barley-Corn a Nail; doubling it every Nail; and avers that there were thirty-two Nails in the Shoes of the Horse, which, being doubled every Nail, came to five hundred Quarters of Barley: And on Non Assumpsit pleaded, the Cause being tried before Hyde at Hereford, he directed the Jury to give the Value of the Horse in Damages, being £8, and so they did: And it was afterwards moved in Arrest of Judgment for a small Fault in the Declaration, which was over-ruled, and Judgment given for the Plaintiff." In Thornborough v. Whitacre, 6 Mod. 305, 2 Ld. Raym. 1164, the plaintiff declared that the defendant, in consideration of two shillings and six pence paid down, and four pounds and seventeen shillings and six pence to be paid on the performance of the agreement, promised to give the plaintiff two grains of rye corn on a certain Monday, and to double it successively on every Monday for a year, and the defendant demurred to the declaration. Upon calculation, it was found that, supposing the contract to have been performed, the whole quantity of rye to be delivered would be five hundred and twenty-four million, two hundred and eighty-eight thousand quarters. The court recognized the case of James v. Morgan as good law, and said that although the contract was a foolish one, the defendant ought to pay something for his folly. The counsel for the defendant "perceiving the opinion of the Court to be against him [his client], offered the plaintiff his half-crown and costs, which was accepted of, and so no judgment was given in the case." In both of these cases, one party had evidently taken advantage of the other's ignorance of arithmetic to obtain the one-sided bargain. See also Jestons v. Brooke, Cowp. 793; Floyer v. Edwards, Cowp. 112.

In a New York case B agreed to furnish his biography to A for publication within a time fixed, and for every day beyond that time he agreed to pay one hundred and sixty-five dollars. The biography was never furnished at all, and A brought suit to recover for a delay of one hundred and sixty-one days. It was held that the agreement is so extortionate as to raise the presumption of fraud in its inception and would not be literally enforced, and that A could only recover his actual loss arising from B's failure to fulfil his agreement.

VII. ILLEGALITY.

A. In General. An illegal agreement will not be enforced, and hence is not a contract according to the definition of a contract.³² The illegality may be found in the matter of the consideration or of the promise as expressed in the agreement, or it may be found in the purpose to which the agreement, although legal in expression, is applied. In either case the agreement is void.³³

B. What Agreements Are Illegal — 1. IN GENERAL. Unlawful agreements, that is, those whose objects are illegal, may be placed in two classes, viz.: (1) Agreements in violation of positive law, and (2) agreements contrary to public policy. In the first of these classes the object of the agreement is expressly or impliedly prohibited by some rule of the common law or by express statute.³⁴ In the second the prohibition rests on what is called "the policy of the law" or public policy.³⁵ Sometimes the public policy is also expressed in some rule of the common law and sometimes it is expressed in some statute; and hence a classification of this kind is not entirely accurate.

2. AGREEMENTS IN VIOLATION OF POSITIVE LAW — a. In General. Agreements in violation of positive law are those which are expressly or impliedly prohibited either (1) by some rule of the common law, or (2) by some express statutory provision. The common law prohibits generally what is contrary to public policy and morality as defined by the decisions of the courts.³⁶ The cases, however, are likely to lap over and to stand sometimes on one, sometimes on another, and sometimes on both sides of this imaginary line.³⁷ It is immaterial, so far as the effect of the illegality is concerned, whether the object of the agreement is forbidden by the common law or by statute,³⁸ or whether the thing forbidden is malum in se or merely malum prohibitum.³⁹

b. Agreements in Violation of Rules of Common Law — (1) AGREEMENTS INVOLVING COMMISSION OF CRIME. An agreement which involves the doing of anything which is a crime or indictable offense at common law is illegal and void.⁴⁰ This is true for example of an agreement to commit murder, larceny, 37. As has often been pointed out "many acts are prohibited by statute which were formerly prohibited by the common law, and which, but for the statute, would still be so prohibited. Again, many acts which are prohibited by the common law in one state are prohibited by statute in another, and in some states there are no common-law crimes at all. For this reason, in treating of agreements in breach of express rules of the common law we must include agreements in breach of statutes which are merely declaratory of the common law." 50. Agreements not illegal.—There is no illegality in an agreement that one party thereto may if necessary use force in taking possession of certain property, in case the other party fails to comply with its conditions (Ambrose v. Root, 11 Ill. 497, 52 Am. Dec. 456); in an agreement to do work on another's land, when the owner does not object (Fuller v. Rice, 52 Mich. 435, 18 N. W. 204); in an agreement to indemnify another for entering on or seizing property under a claim of right (Marcy v. Crawford, 16 Conn. 549, 41 Am. Dec. 158; Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174. And see INDEMNITY); or where there is no intention of committing a trespass or other illegal act (Smith v. Delaney, 64 Conn. 264, 29 Atl. 496, 42 Am. St. Rep. 181; Stanton v. McMullen, 7 Ill. App.

(II) AGREEMENTS WITH ALIEN ENEMIES. An agreement with an alien enemy is illegal and void, not because of any want of power to contract merely because of public policy, but because "it was a principle of the common law that trading with the enemy without the King's license was illegal in British subjects."⁵¹

(III) AGREEMENTS INVOLVING CIVIL WRONG. An agreement is illegal and void where its object is the commission of a civil wrong against a third person, although the wrong may not be an indictable offense or crime either at common law or under the statutes.⁵² This is true for example of an agreement to commit a mere civil trespass upon land or goods,⁵³ if it is known that it will be a trespass;⁵⁴ of an agreement to perpetrate a fraud upon a third person;⁵⁵ of a contract to infringe another's copyright, patent, or trade-mark;⁵⁶ and of an agreement to slander another⁵⁷ or publish a libel.⁵⁸

(IV) AGREEMENTS TO DEFRAUD INDIVIDUALS. As just stated, an agreement to perpetrate a fraud upon a third person is illegal and void.⁵⁹ Among the agreements which have been declared illegal and void as tending to defraud or otherwise interfere with the rights of third persons are an agreement whereby a physician was to explain to a railroad company the injuries received by a person at the hands of the company, and his compensation was to vary according to the sum which the company should pay;⁶⁰ an agreement between the father and grandfather of an infant legatee on one side, and an heir at law, not a legatee, on the other, that the latter should resist and the former should not insist on probate, and if the will should be set aside the heir should pay the infant the amount of his legacy, the object being to defeat a residuary legatee;⁶¹ an agreement to renounce an executorship;⁶² a secret agreement between partners tending to defraud third persons;⁶³ an agreement to make a stranger one's heir;⁶⁴ an agreement to reprint any literary work in violation of a right of copyright secured to another;⁶⁵ an agreement whereby one party, for certain commissions, was to attend meetings of persons solicited to buy real estate from the other party and persuade them to become purchasers, representing himself to them as a purchaser by subscribing for lots, which the owner was to take off his hands if he should not wish to retain them, concealing from the intending buyers his arrangement with such owner;⁶⁶ an agreement with a tenant whereby he was induced to attorn to a third person;⁶⁷ an agreement to pay money procured by one from those preferred in a will, by concealing, after the death of the testator and before probate, the place of its deposit and by threatening to destroy it;⁶⁸ an agreement to advance the selling price of stocks by means of fictitious sales;⁶⁹ an agreement to aid another in obtaining title to land sold by an administrator at a price much less than its real value;⁷⁰ and an agreement to cancel a claim against another in consideration of his withholding exceptions to a claim asserted by him against an estate.⁷¹

(v) AGREEMENTS TO DEFRAUD THE PUBLIC GENERALLY. Any agreement which is intended or directly tends to defraud the public generally, even though it may not amount to a criminal conspiracy, is illegal and void. It has been so held for example of an agreement for the sale of domestic sardines, to be packed in boxes with labels representing them as foreign sardines;⁷² an agreement by which a tradesman having a reputation as a seedsman sold his empty bags and his labels to another to be filled and sold by him as seeds grown by the former;⁷³ an agreement to sell one's reputation or skill in a profession, as an agreement by a physician to permit another to take his office and practise in his name;⁷⁴ an agreement by an author to assign the privilege of publishing books with his name on the title page, or by a painter to sell to another the right to place his signature on pictures painted by the latter;⁷⁵ or of a musical director to allow another to use his name as the name of the latter's band;⁷⁶ and agreements for the sale of grain for seed at a price far above its actual value, in which the seller agrees to sell the crop raised therefrom or a part of it for the buyer at an extravagant price, and which therefore cannot be performed without defrauding someone.⁷⁷

Rep. 149, where it was said: "There may no doubt be cases where the personal skill of an artist or artisan may so far enter into the value of a product that a trade-mark bearing his name would, or at least might, imply that his personal work or supervision was employed in the manufacture; and, in such cases, it would be a fraud upon the public if the trade-mark should be used by other persons, and for this reason such a trade-mark would be held to be unassignable. It is in any case a question whether the use of the trade-mark would give to the public or to purchasers a false idea as to who made the article; and a court of equity would not lend any active aid to sustain a claim to a trade-mark which should contain a misrepresentation to the public." See TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES.

(vi) FRAUDS ON SELLERS AND BIDDERS AT AUCTIONS. Agreements which have for their object the fraudulent raising or lowering of prices at auction sales are illegal as frauds upon the owners of the property offered or upon the honest bidders at such sales.⁷⁸

(vii) FRAUDS ON CREDITORS. Common instances of agreements void because of fraud upon third parties are assignments for the benefit of creditors with the intention of defrauding them,⁷⁹ secret agreements in compositions with creditors in fraud of some of them,⁸⁰ and conveyances of property to defraud creditors.⁸¹

(viii) AGREEMENTS BY AGENTS, TRUSTEES, AND OTHERS IN FIDUCIARY OR CONFIDENTIAL CAPACITIES. Another class of agreements which are deemed to be illegal and void because of their constituting or tending to constitute a fraud upon third persons are those whose object or tendency is to constitute a fraud or breach of trust or breach of duty on the part of a person who stands in a fiduciary or confidential relation, as agents and employees,⁸² attorneys,⁸³

St. 256, where a real-estate agent employed to sell land under a contract entitling him to receive all that he could get above a certain price made a contract, without the seller's knowledge, with the buyer, to negotiate a sale to him for a certain commission.

United States.—Woodstock Iron Co. v. Richmond, etc., Extension Co., 129 U. S. 643, 9 S. Ct. 402, 32 L. ed. 819, where an extension company which had a contract with a railroad company to locate and construct the latter's road "by the nearest, cheapest, and most suitable route" between two points for twenty thousand dollars per mile, agreed to locate the road through a certain town in consideration of being paid a bonus by a third person, and it appeared that in locating through such town it was necessary to deflect from the nearest, cheapest, and most natural route at an additional cost of one hundred thousand dollars. It was held that the contract between the extension company and such third person was void, on the ground that it was an agreement by an employee to violate his obligation to his employer.

Executor acting as attorney.—It is the duty of an attorney to whom a debt has been intrusted to collect to prosecute the claim according to law and to collect it, if it can be done by legal means; and it is also the duty of an administrator to scrutinize rigidly every claim presented against the estate and to protect the legal interests of the estate. Hence these are inconsistent obligations which cannot be united in the same person; and an agreement by which an attorney undertakes to assume the administration of a certain estate and collect a debt against the intestate is void as against public policy, and on his failure to collect the debt no action can be maintained against him. *Spinks v. Ct. 838, 34 L. ed. 254 (holding that a contract made by a person, in contemplation of becoming an officer in a private corporation and controlling a majority of its stock, that he will use his influence to retain another in office at a fixed salary is void, being inconsistent with the duty that the promisor as an officer owes to the stock-holders, although no direct private gain is to result therefrom to him); Wardell v. A. 428, holding that an agreement to pay one of the owners of land sold under a decree in a suit for partition a further sum for her interest therein provided she would not oppose the confirmation of such sale, which was made for an inadequate price, was illegal, as being a promise to pay a consideration for the concealment of a fact which it was the party's duty to make known to the court and her cotenants.

Illinois.—Wallace v. Carpenter, 85 Ill. 590, where four persons by a verbal agreement as between themselves bought a tract of land for speculation and had the contract of purchase taken in the name of one to enable him to sell when he could realize a profit, which he did, and he and two of the others by agreement concealed the fact from the fourth and informed him that the purchase had fallen through by reason of a defect in the title, and the two agreed with the party holding the contract to pay him one third of the profits for selling, it being held that owing to the fraud practised on the fourth party the one selling could claim no benefit growing out of the fraudulent agreement in which he participated, and the fourth party thus sought to be defrauded was entitled to one fourth of the profits arising from the sale.

or jointly liable in an action,⁹⁰ public officers or employees,⁹¹ and any other persons occupying a fiduciary or confidential position.⁹² To bring an agreement within this rule it must appear both that there was in fact some relation of trust or confidence and that the agreement contemplated or tended to a (1889) 43 N. W. 517, where plaintiff and H were equal partners in an option for the purchase of land, and defendant contracted with them for its purchase within a specified time and at a specified price, the negotiations being carried on mainly by plaintiff on behalf of himself and H, and defendant promising to pay him a certain amount, in addition to the purchase-price of the land, if he would secure and deliver to it a contract signed by himself and H, to which plaintiff agreed, on condition that the agreement should be concealed from H. It was held that this agreement was in fraud of H's rights as an equal partner with the plaintiff and void. On a rehearing the case was otherwise decided on the ground that the evidence was conflicting as to whether H had knowledge of the agreement. Gleason v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa 745, 48 N. New York.—Adams v. Outhouse, 45 N. Vermont.—McEwen v. Shannon, 64 Vt. 583, 25 Atl. 661, holding that where an agreement was signed by plaintiff to induce others to sign it, but with a secret agreement between plaintiff and another party to the agreement whereby plaintiff was to receive benefits not accruing to the other parties, the secret agreement was invalid.

Principle not applicable to unconnected landowners.—In Howden v. Simpson, 10 A. & E. 793, 819, 9 Cl. & F. 61, 8 Eng. Rep. 338, 37 E. C. L. 416, in which the defendants were a railroad company, a bill had been introduced in parliament, according to which the line would pass through the plaintiff's estates and near his mansion, and he was opposing the passing of the bill. The defendants agreed that if he would withdraw his opposition and assent to the railway they would endeavor to deviate the proposed line and in case the then bill should pass they would pay the plaintiff five thousand pounds for the damage which his residence and estate would sustain from the railway's passing according to the deviated line. The plaintiff withdrew his opposition to the bill. In an action upon this agreement the defendants pleaded by their second plea that the projected railway was intended to pass through lands of divers individuals, and that the said agreement was made and entered into privately and secretly between the parties thereto, and without the consent or knowledge of the individuals through whose lands the said railway was intended to pass. This plea was on demurrer overruled. Lord Chief Justice Tindal said: "If such intention [that is, to keep the agreement a secret from the other landowners] had even existed, there would still be a difficulty in holding that the deed would be fraudulent, on the ground that the supposed goodness of the bargain was intended to be concealed; for it would seem that each landowner might lawfully make the best agreement he could for himself with any company of projectors, just in the same manner as if a private individual, for any purpose of his own, were negotiating to purchase the land of the same persons. There is no common obligation on all the different proprietors to place themselves on the same footing, as there is in the case of a general composition with creditors, in which case there is sometimes an express, and generally an implied, agreement that all, or all who are not expressly excepted, shall share equally and derive equal benefit from the estate of the insolvent. It is that agreement or understanding alone which imposes an obligation on each creditor to be in the same situation as another; and there seems no analogy between their situation and that of unconnected landowners." 90. Selz v. Unna, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 327, 18 L. ed. 799, holding that a secret agreement between a plaintiff in an action of trespass and certain of the defendants, under which they made no further defense, the plaintiff promising to collect his judgment from the other defendants exclusively, was inequitable, as tending to promote injustice, both as between the plaintiff and the other defendants and as between those jointly liable.

91. Lucas v. Allen, 80 Ky. 681, holding that a contract whereby the clerk of the board of aldermen of a city was to receive a certain compensation in consideration of information to be given by him, and of his aiding in the preparation and prosecution of a suit by taxpayers against the city. Connecticut.—Bollman v. Loomis, 41 Conn. 581, holding that a friend and confidential adviser of a purchaser of property should not at the same time be secretly receiving violation of the same.⁹³ While it is often said that such agreements are against public policy, because it is the policy of the law to secure fidelity in the discharge of their duties by all persons holding such positions of trust and confidence, yet it is more accurate to say that such agreements, tending to cause unfaithful conduct by fiduciaries, are illegal because they are in effect agreements to wrong or defraud the persons whose interests the fiduciaries have in charge.⁹⁴

(1X) AGREEMENTS TO WAIVE FRAUD. False and fraudulent representations made by one party to a contract, by which the other party is induced to enter into the contract, render it voidable at the election of the defrauded party;⁹⁵ and a stipulation in such a contract to the effect that the false and fraudulent representations by which the one party induced the other to enter into it shall not affect its validity is itself of no validity. The law will not give effect to a stipulation intended to grant immunity to iniquity and fraud.⁹⁶ And it has been held compensation from the seller for effecting the sale and that the contract for such compensation is void.

Massachusetts.—Holcomb v. Weaver, 136 Mass. 265, holding that where a person on being asked by another to recommend to him a builder that he could indorse in every way, recommended a builder who promised to pay him "for his trouble," such promise was illegal and would not support an action.

Brooks, 81 Cal. 328, 22 Pac. 849, where it was held that a contract founded on plaintiff's promise to disclose information as to the place where a railroad company intended to locate its depot was not void, where there was nothing to show that plaintiff obtained his information by reason of any relation of trust or confidence that he bore to the railroad company, that it had any interest in the subject-matter of the contract, or that it attempted to keep the location of the depot a secret.

Connecticut.—Hoyt v. Holly, 39 Conn. 326, 12 Am. Rep. 390, holding that where a physician in a country village, being about to remove, sold out to another physician and agreed to recommend him to his patients and to use his influence in his favor, on the payment of a certain sum by the other physician, reserving, however, the right to practise in the village when called on to do so, the agreement was not illegal as a breach of the personal trust and confidence reposed in the first physician by his patients.

St. 716], holding that the facts that the purchaser of goods which had been damaged by fire was an arbitrator appointed to assess the value of the insured goods and that he agreed to pay a sum equal to the value of the goods before the fire did not render the contract illegal, no objection on this ground having been raised in the court below. And see *Morgan v. Consent of all parties.—Where persons who have contracted with another to erect a building for them employ the contractor to superintend such erection, they cannot afterward complain that the employment placed him in a position in which his duties conflicted, no bad conduct on his part being averred. *Shaw v. 96. Bridger v. Goldsmith, 143 N. Y. 424, 428, 38 N. E. 458, 62 N. Y. St. 435 (where it was said: "A mere device of the guilty party to a contract intended to shield himself from the results of his own fraud, practiced upon the other party, cannot well be elevated to the dignity and importance of an equitable estoppel. If the clause has any effect whatever, it must be as a promise or agreement on part of the plaintiff, that however grossly he may have been deceived and defrauded by the defendant, he would never allege it against the transaction or complain of it, but would forever after hold his peace. It is difficult to conceive that such a clause could ever be suggested by a party to a contract, unless there was in his own mind at least a lingering doubt as to the honesty and integrity of his conduct. . . . Public policy and morality are both ignored if such that a provision in a written contract signed by the purchaser of a stock of goods, stating that he had fully examined the goods (which was untrue), and that he accepted the same, "waiving all claim for damaged goods, shortages and prices," etc., could not avail the seller as an estoppel of the purchaser to claim damages for fraudulent representations made in the sale, where the contract itself was procured by fraud and for the purpose of protecting the seller against such an action.⁹⁷

c. Agreements in Violation of Statutes—(i) IN GENERAL. Where a statute expressly declares that certain kinds of contracts shall be void, there is then no doubt of the legislative intention, and an agreement of the kind voided by statute is unlawful. The same is true where the contract is in violation of a statute, although not therein expressly declared to be void.⁹⁸ It is immaterial whether an agreement can be given effect in a court of justice. The maxim that fraud vitiates every transaction would no longer be the rule but the exception. It could be applied then only in such cases as the guilty party neglected to protect himself from his fraud by means of such a stipulation. Such a principle would in a short time break down every barrier which the law has erected against fraudulent dealing"); Universal Fashion Co. v. Skinner, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 293, 19 N. Y. In cases of this kind the decisions of the courts are not in harmony. old case: "Every Contract made for or about any Matter or Thing which is prohibited and made unlawful by any Statute, is a void Contract, tho' the Statute it self doth not mention that it shall be so, but only inflicts a Penalty on the offender, because a Penalty implies a Prohibition, tho' there are no prohibiting Words in the Statute."³ Other courts have held that if the penalty is imposed for the protection of the revenue, it may be presumed that the legislature only desired to make it expensive to the parties in proportion as it is unprofitable to the revenue.⁴ Others have regarded the question as one of legislative intent, and declared the proper rule to be that the courts will look to the language of the statute, the subject-matter of it, the wrong or evil which it seeks to remedy or prevent, and the purpose sought to be accomplished in its enactment; and if from all these it is manifest that it was not intended to imply a prohibition or to render the prohibited act void, the courts will so hold and construe the statute accordingly.⁵

Continuity of penalty.—Anson suggests a better test in the continuity of the penalty. If the penalty, he says, is imposed once for all, and is not recurrent on the making of successive contracts of the kind which are thus penalized, or if other circumstances would make the avoidance of the contract a punishment disproportionate to the offense, it may be argued that such contracts are not to be held void. But where the penalty recurs upon the making of every contract of a certain sort, we may assume (apart from revenue cases, as to which there may yet be a doubt), that the contract thus penalized is avoided as between the parties. Anson Contr. 286 [citing Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Gale 231, 6 L. J. Exch. 63, 2 M. & W. 149; Smith v. Mawhood, 15 L. J. Exch. 149, 14 M. & W. 452]. And see the following cases:

(III) STATUTES REQUIRING LICENSE TO ENGAGE IN PROFESSION, TRADE, OR BUSINESS. Where a license or certificate is required by statute as a requisite to one practising a particular profession, an agreement of a professional character without such license or certificate is illegal and void. This is true for example of an agreement made by an unlicensed or uncertificated physician,⁶ an attorney at law,⁷ or a school-teacher.⁸ The authorities are in accord on this point, where the license is required for public protection and to prevent improper persons from acting in a particular capacity and not for revenue purposes only. In the latter cases, as we have seen, the decisions are not in accord.⁹ The same is held where a license is required for the carrying on of a particular trade or business, as in the case of a wholesale or retail liquor-dealer,¹⁰ a stock-broker,¹¹ a real-estate or commercial broker,¹² a pawnbroker,¹³ a printer,¹⁴ a peddler,¹⁵ a carpenter or builder,¹⁶ an innkeeper,¹⁷ the keeper of a stallion,¹⁸ a public carman,¹⁹ a grocer,²⁰ a

(v) WAIVER OF STATUTORY PROVISIONS BY AGREEMENT. A person may lawfully waive by agreement the benefit of a statutory provision.²⁴ But there is an imputed exception to this general rule in the case of a statutory provision whose waiver would violate public policy expressed therein, or where rights of third parties which the statute was intended to protect are involved.²⁵ shall not be void, then it is enforceable by the courts.²⁷ And for a like reason, the contract is not void where the statute at the same time also otherwise limits the effect or declares the consequences which shall attach to the making of the contract.²⁸

(vi) OMISSION OF PENALTY FOR PROHIBITED ACT. If an act is prohibited by statute, an agreement in violation of the statute is void, although the act is not penalized, for it is the prohibition and not the penalty which makes the act illegal.²⁶

3. AGREEMENTS CONTRARY TO PUBLIC POLICY — a. In General. If an agreement binds the parties or either of them, or if the consideration is, to do something opposed to the public policy of the state or nation, it is illegal and absolutely void, however solemnly made. If a court should enforce such agreements it would employ its functions in undoing what it was created to do.²⁹ It is not easy to give a precise definition of public policy. It is perhaps correct to say that public policy is that principle of law which holds that no person can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good, which may be designated, as it sometimes has been, the policy of the law or public policy in relation to the administration of the law.³⁰ Where a contract belongs to this class, it will be declared void, although in the particular instance no injury to the public may have resulted.³¹ In other words its validity is determined by its general tendency at the time it is made, and if this is opposed to the interests of the public it will be invalid, even though the intent of the parties was good and no injury to the public would result in the particular case.³² The test is the evil tendency of the contract and not its actual injury to the public in a particular instance.³³ Thus an agreement for a pecuniary consideration made by a railroad company for the location of a depot is void, although the location in the particular case may be advantageous to the public.³⁴ An agreement to influence legislation is void, although the legislation sought may be clearly beneficial.³⁵ An agreement to influence an appointment to office is void, although the intent may be to secure the best qualified person.³⁶ And agreements whose tendency is to establish a monopoly are void, although they may not in the particular case destroy competition or enhance prices.³⁷ The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements, and it closes the door to temptation by refusing them recognition in any of its courts.³⁸ An agreement of course will not be declared void as against public policy when it is expressly authorized by a statute.³⁹

b. History. The earliest application of the principle of public policy to agreements seems to have been in cases of agreements to promote litigation or marriage or in the endeavor to elude the binding effect of wagers at common law.⁴⁰ But whatever the origin, it is now applied by the courts in a large and steadily increasing number of cases, notwithstanding the criticism of individual judges.⁴¹

c. Sources. The public policy of a state is to be found in its statutes, and when they have not directly spoken, then in the decisions of the courts. But when the legislature speaks upon a subject upon which it has the constitutional power to legislate, public policy is what the statute passed by it enacts. The only authentic and admissible evidence of public policy of a state on any given subject are its constitutions, laws, and judicial decisions. The public policy of a state of which courts take notice and to which they give effect must be decided from those sources. Where the state has spoken through its legislature, there is no room for speculation as to what the policy of the state is.⁴² In the absence of any legislative prohibition of a particular agreement which may be brought before a court the latter, to declare it void on this ground, must find that such contracts have a tendency to injure the public, are against the public good, or inconsistent with sound policy and good morals as to the consideration or thing to be done.

Therefore, you have this paramount public policy to consider—that you are not lightly to interfere with this freedom of contract."

A.* 193, where it is said: "The public policy of a state or nation must be determined by its constitution, laws and judicial decisions; not by the varying opinions of laymen, lawyers, or judges as to the demands of the interests of the public."

If by well-settled judicial precedent the law has determined that a certain class of contracts tends to the injury of the public, or are inconsistent with sound morality, the court should follow the law thus declared, without regard to its own notions of the tendency of the contract.⁴³ Many agreements therefore which have already been discussed as void because contrary to the terms of a statute⁴⁴ are also void as being contrary to the policy of the law as expressed in those statutes.⁴⁵ But there are many things which the law does not expressly prohibit or penalize, but which are so mischievous in their nature and tendency that on grounds of public policy they are not permitted to be the subject of an enforceable agreement.⁴⁶ And it is agreements which fall under this class that are the subject of the following sections.

d. Public Policy Varies With Time and Place. As the habits, opinions, and wants of a people vary with the times so public policy may change with them.⁴⁷ So because these habits, opinions, and wants are different in different places, what may be against public policy in one state or county, may not be so in another. The public policy, not alone of different countries, but of different states of the Union, on the subject of wagers and lotteries, of Sunday observance, of the liquor traffic, and the like, is very different.⁴⁸

e. Federal Courts. It has been held that in the federal courts the question whether a contract is against public policy is a question of general law and not dependent solely upon any local statute or usage. Over this question the national courts exercise concurrent jurisdiction with those of the state, and while the decisions of the latter are always entitled to the weight of persuasive authority the federal courts will exercise their own judgment.⁴⁹

f. Particular Agreements Contrary to Public Policy — (1) IN GENERAL. Whether a contract is against public policy is a question of law for the court to determine from all the circumstances of each case.⁵⁰ It is clearly to the interest of the public that persons should not be unnecessarily restricted in their freedom to make their own contracts,⁵¹ and agreements therefore are not to be held void as being contrary to public policy, unless they are clearly contrary to what the legislature or judicial decision has declared to be the public policy, or they manipersons to enter into contracts; and if an agreement binds a party to do or not to do anything, the doing or omission of which is manifestly injurious to the public interests,⁵³ the courts must declare it contrary to public policy and therefore illegal and void.⁵⁴

St. Rep. 284).

Influencing or discouraging subscriptions to the stock of a railroad company is not necessarily contrary to public policy, so as to render a contract having such effect void. Beadles v. Bless, 27 Ill. 320, 81 Am. Dec. 231.

53. West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 617, 46 Am. Rep. 527, where it is said: "The common law will not permit individuals to oblige themselves by a contract either to do or not to do anything, when the thing to be done or omitted is in any degree clearly injurious to the public."

54. The following agreements have been held contrary to public policy and illegal: An agreement to abandon the prosecution of proceedings for the establishment of a public highway in consideration of money to be paid therefor (Jacobs v. Tobiason, 65 Iowa 245, 21 N. W. 590, 54 Am. Rep. 9); or to pay money in consideration of withdrawing opposition to a public road (Smith v. Applegate, 23 N. J. L. 352); an agreement to pay a property-owner for consenting to the construction of a street railway on the street on which his property abuts, where the consent of one-half the property-owners is necessary before the franchise can be granted by the common council (*Doane v. App. 353]); an agreement guaranteeing to pay a sum of money to certain persons provided they will petition the common council of a city for street improvements (Maguire v. Smock, 42 Ind. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 353, Wils. (Ind. 92); an agreement whereby, for a direct or indirect consideration, some of the owners of abutting land are induced to sign a petition for grading and paving a street, where an ordinance requires such a petition to be made in good faith, and all the subscribers to bear their proportion of the burden (Howard v. Baltimore First Independent Church, 18 Md. 451), or a like agreement to induce a person to sign a petition to have a turnpike laid out and constructed (Miller v. Rice, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 620); an agreement between a landowner and commissioners appointed to open a street, by which the former consents to the opening of the street provided no benefits shall be assessed against him (St. Louis v. Meier, 77 Mo. 13); an agreement by which a person conveys property to another for no other consideration than that the latter shall use his influence to oppose an extension of a street across the property, when the property is to be reconveyed (Slocum v. Wooley, 43 N. J. Eq. 451, 11 Atl. 264); a bond given to indemnify a taxpayer against taxes to be levied to pay bonds issued by a town in aid of a railroad for which the obligee voted (Dean v. Clark, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 80, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 45, 61 N. Y. St. 746); an agreement to divide a school district in consideration of the surrender of property rights by the new district (State v. Mackin, 100 Ill. 246, where the agreement was held not only against public policy, but also a fraud upon persons who by the charter were required to pay for the improvement); an agreement by the owners of newspapers whereby they agreed that for the term of two years, in case of the designation of either paper to publish the laws, the net amount received for this service, after paying the expense of the publication, should be equally divided between them, and that their newspapers during said two years should be alternately selected and designated for the purpose of publishing the laws (Brooks v. Cooper, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 26 Atl. 978, 35 Am. St. Rep. 789, 21 L. R. A. 617); or any other agreement which has for its object the disabling of public agencies from performing their full duties to the public (Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. 224, 27 S. W. 568, 30 S. W. 430 [reversing 5 Mo. App. 347]; Chouteau v. Union R., etc., Co., 22 Mo. App. 286); or the thwarting of public enterprises (Slocum v. Wooley, 43 N. J. Eq. 451, 11 Atl. 264).

the judgments of those to whom the high trust is confided is condemned by the courts. The officer may be an executive, administrative, legislative, or judicial officer. The principle is the same in either case.⁵⁵

(b) Interference With Legislative Action. It follows from what has been said above that all agreements whose object or tendency is in any way to interfere with or unduly influence legislative action, either by congress, by a state legislature, or by a municipal council or other like body, are contrary to public policy and void.⁵⁶ The most common of these are what are known as "lobbying

Illustrations.—The following agreements have been held void: An agreement to prevent legislative investigation into the affairs of a railroad company (Usher v. McBratney, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 385, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,805); an agreement to use one's influence with a municipal council to procure a lease (Pease v. Walsh, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 269; Wall v. Charlick, 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 230); a bond given to induce an alderman to lend his influence to secure the passage of an ordinance (Cook v. Shipman, 24 Ill. 614, 51 Ill. 316); an agreement to pay a delegate in congress for services rendered by him in securing the payment of a claim, where legislation by congress is required therefor (Weed v. Black, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 268, 29 Am. Rep. 618); an agreement in consideration of the withdrawal of the opposition to the passage of an act through the legislature (*Martin v. Second St. Pass. R. Ch. 337); an agreement in consideration of a person's forbearing to petition for the repeal of a public law (Reed v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co., 2 Mo. App. 82); an agreement to use influence to procure a session of the legislature at a particular place (Thorne v. Yontz, 4 Cal. 321); an agreement between rival applicants for a street-railway franchise to combine in order to prevent competition between themselves or by others in procuring the franchise, and to avoid the imposition of conditions by the municipal authorities (Hyer v. Richmond Traction Co., 80 Fed. 839, 26 C. C. A. 175); and an agreement to procure the passage of a resolution which would result in congressional investigation of a certain corporation, so as to cause a depreciation in the value of its corporate securities, in consideration of which defendant stock-brokers were to speculate on their own account in the shares of the investigated corporation for the mutual profit of themselves and plaintiff (Veazey v. Allen, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 119, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 457). In Critchfield v. Bermudez Asphalt Co., 174 Ill. 466, 51 N. E. 552, a company employed plaintiffs as its agents "to solicit and promote" the asphalt-paving business in Chicago, the consideration being a small monthly salary and a commission on contracts secured, which in fact amount to ten times the salary. The contracts for paving were to be confined to Chicago and were to be made with said city, and it appeared inferentially from the contract that the procuring of the passage of ordinances for paving streets was to be a part of plaintiffs' duties. Plaintiffs were to bear all incidental expenses in promoting the work, in aiding and assisting in the election of officials, or in any other matter pertaining to the promotion of asphalt. It was held that the contract was void as against public policy.

The fees in case of success were not fixed, but were to be liberal. The court held that the agreement was illegal and void, and that after passage of the bill there could be no recovery of a fee in a suit upon the contract, nor upon an implied contract for the services performed.

agreement will not be invalidated where it does not appear that the personal influence of the promisee was to be exerted in an improper way or that improper means were intended to be used.⁵⁹ In the view of some courts, but not of others, the promise of payment of a contingent fee stamps the agreement as one not to be enforced, on the ground that such a fee is a direct and strong incentive to the exertion of not merely personal but sinister influence upon the legislature.⁶⁰ There 546, 10 Am. Dec. 535, where it was said: "It is not necessary to adjudge that the parties stipulated for corrupt action, or that they intended that secret and improper resorts should be had. It is enough that the contract tends directly to those results. It furnishes a temptation to the plaintiff, to resort to corrupt means or improper devices, to influence legislative action. It tends to subject the legislature to influences destructive of its character, and fatal to public confidence in its action." And it was held that a contract was void as against public policy where the consideration was that one of the parties thereto would give "all the aid in his power, spend such reasonable time as may be necessary, and generally to use his utmost influence and exertions to procure the passage into a law" of a bill introduced into the legislature.

It is enough that such is the tendency of the contract, that it is contrary to sound morality and public policy, leading necessarily, in the hands of designing and corrupt men, to improper tampering with members, and the use of an extraneous, secret influence over an important branch of the government. It may not corrupt all; but if it corrupts or tends to corrupt some, or if it deceives or tends to deceive or mislead some, that is sufficient to stamp its character with the seal of reprobation before a judicial tribunal."

Vermont.—Powers v. Skinner, 34 Vt. 274, 281, 80 Am. Dec. 677, where it is said that "the law will not concede to any man however honest he may be, the privilege of making a contract which it would not recognize when made by designing or corrupt men."

"To do all in his power,"

it was said, "evidently means to exert his utmost diligence and ability in establishing the claim of his employer, and is what the law would have implied, if it had not been expressed."

California.—Foltz v. Cogswell, 86 Cal. 542, 25 Pac. 60, where the evidence showed that a part of the services rendered by plaintiff as attorney consisted in personal solicitation of members of the legislature to act favorably on a bill she was seeking to have passed for defendant; but there was nothing to show that she used dishonest, secret, or unfair means, and there was evidence that the members knew that she was acting for defendant. It was held that she was not "lobbying" within the meaning of a constitutional provision that "any person who seeks to influence the vote of a member of the legislature by bribery, promise of reward, intimidation, or other dishonest means, shall be guilty of lobbying."

A. 166, where a person of large experience in regard to federal public lands, because satisfied that a certain class of lands that had been kept out of the market on account of a supposed claim under certain railroad grants could be legally thrown open to settlement, entered into an agreement with defendant who was desirous of acquiring such lands to instruct the latter in regard to the manner of procuring the same and to do all that was necessary to have such lands thrown open to settlement, in consideration of a certain proportion of the value of the land acquired by defendant. The court held that the contract was not per se invalid as a lobbying contract.

are many agreements of this kind that are admittedly good. All persons whose interests may in any way be affected by any public or private act of the legislature have an undoubted right to urge their claims and arguments, either in person or by counsel professing to act for them, before legislative committees, as well as in courts of justice. And an agreement express or implied for professional services in drafting petitions to the legislative body, in collecting evidence, preparing arguments, and submitting them either orally or in writing to legislative committees or other proper authorities, is as free from judicial criticism as the retaining of professional services in a court of law.⁶¹ But where persons act as counsel, agents, or in any representative capacity, it is due to those before whom they plead or solicit that they should honestly appear in their true characters, so that their arguments and representations, openly and candidly made, may receive their just weight and consideration, for advice or information flowing from the unbiased judgment of disinterested persons will naturally be received with more confidence and less scrupulously examined than where the recommendations are known to be the result of pecuniary interest.⁶² In all cases of this kind the evidence, to warrant a recovery on the contract, should establish with reasonable clearness the fact that the services alleged to have been performed were in reality such as are sanctioned by the law in aiding and promoting legislative action.⁶³

(c) Interference With Executive or Administrative Action. There is no difference in principle between agreements to procure favors from legislative bodies and to procure favors from or unduly influence executive and administrative officers and the heads of public departments. Any contract, as is said by a writer on this special subject,⁶⁴ contemplating the use of secret influence with public officers, or calculated to induce the use of such influence, is illegal and void,⁶⁵ especially when one of the parties is a public officer himself,⁶⁶ although he be but a representative of a foreign government and his position be merely honorary.⁶⁷ By some courts all agreements of this character for a compensation paid or promised are held invalid because of their tendency to introduce corrupt means in the influencing of the public official,⁶⁸ while by others the agreement is not held invalid where corrupt means are not intended to be resorted to.⁶⁹ The most fre-circulating the petition among the taxpayers, it was held that this did not amount to lobbying or corruption, so as to render void a contract of purchase subsequently entered into. Bridgford v. Tuscumbia, 4 Woods (U. S.) 611, 16 Fed. 910.

quent agreements of this character are agreements to procure a government contract from the officer charged with the letting or making of the same by bribery or secret influence.⁷⁰ Other kinds of agreements falling under this head and held void in adjudged cases are agreements to procure a return of duties by an officer in the custom-house for a share of the amount returned;⁷¹ to procure the discharge of a drafted man from the army;⁷² to pay money in consideration that the promisee will influence the military authorities to allow the promisor to avail himself of certain privileges to which he is entitled;⁷³ to use influence with the government officers to secure the location of a public building at a certain place;⁷⁴ or to pay to the county commissioners, who are bound by law to build a court-house, a certain sum of money, provided they will build it on a particular lot.⁷⁵ The same is true of an agreement by which a jailer undertakes to appropriate rooms in the jail for the accommodation of private persons for uses not prescribed or implied by law;⁷⁶ a promise to a collector of taxes to pay him a tax, in consideration that he will forbear to collect the same in the manner required by law;⁷⁷ agreements in consideration of a person's opposing or of his approving or not opposing a public improvement or other public project⁷⁸ or withdrawing his petition for such an improvement;⁷⁹ agreements not to compete with another in making bids, to withdraw a bid for a public or quasi-public contract, to share in the result or profits,⁸⁰ or other agreements having a direct tendency to prevent bidding or competition ;⁸¹ agreements not to bid at a judicial, execution, foreclosure, or other public sale, or to prevent competition in any way at such a sale ;⁸²

Agreements not within the rule.—On familiar principles an agreement that one shall bid for several for a public contract is not illegal per se. Bellows v. Russell, 20 N. H. 427, 51 Am. And generally an honest coöperation between two or more persons to accomplish an object which neither could gain if acting alone in his individual capacity is not within the rule, although in a certain sense and to a limited degree such coöperation might have a tendency to lessen competition. Gibbs v. Smith, 115 Mass. 592; Lawnin v. Bradley, 13 Mo. App. 361; Atcheson v. Mallon, 43 N. Y. 147, 3 Am. Rep. 678; Cocks v. Izard, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 559, 19 L. ed. 275; *Hoffman v. and other agreements of a similar character.⁸³ Another class of agreements which are within the rule are those between a state, a county, or other municipal corporation for the doing of work or the furnishing of supplies with one of its own officers or with a company or body of men of which such officer is one, or in which he is interested.⁸⁴

83. Other illustrations.—An agreement made by a postmaster before his commission was issued to remove his post-office to a certain building and continue it there so long as he should hold office is contrary to public policy. Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 336, 93 Am. Dec. 69. But see Fearnley v. De Mainville, 5 Colo. App. 441, 39 Pac. 73. The same is true of an agreement by members of a township board of education, acting in their individual capacity, to purchase from another person apparatus for the schools of the township, and to ratify said contract of purchase at the next meeting of the board (McCortle v. Bates, 29 Ohio St. 419, 23 Am. Rep. 758); of an agreement between the proprietor of a distillery and an officer of the internal revenue service charged with watching the distillery, that the officer will pay the proprietor a monthly sum so long as the latter carries on the distillery (Caton v. Stewart, 76 N. C. 357); of a promise to pay money to a mail contractor or other public contractor upon consideration that he will repudiate his contract (Weld v. Lancaster, 56 Me. 453); and of an agreement by a bank to extend the time of a note owing to it, in consideration of the maker's inducing the county treasurer to deposit a portion of the county funds with the bank for a certain period (Boyd v. Cochrane, 18 Wash. 281, 51 Pac. 383).

Illustrations.—This is true for example of a contract by a mayor while in office, with the city council, to lease a city park for five years, and for an annual sum paid him to keep the park in repair (Macon v. Huff, 60 Ga. 221); a contract between a board of supervisors and one of its members, an attorney at law, for legal services to be rendered the board (Beebe v. Sullivan County, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 377, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 629, 46 N. Y. St. 222); a contract by the local overseer, appointed by the state to approve and accept a road, with the contractor, whereby he obtains an interest in lands which are to be patented to the contractor by the state in payment for the road (Robinson v. Patterson, 71 Mich. 141, 39 N. W. 21); and of a contract taken by a member of the district school-board, during his membership, from the board, for the erection of a school-house, such member having participated in the proceedings for letting the contract (Pickett v. Wiota School Dist. No. 1, 25 Wis. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 105). But public policy does not prevent recovery by a corporation, one of whose stock-holders is a member of a city council, on a quantum meruit for work done for the city, where such councilman has no power to direct or control the expenditures of the city for such work. *Call Pub. Conviction and sentence void.—In Thompson v. Wharton, 7 Bush (Ky.) 563, 3 Am. Rep. 306, it was held that a note given in consideration of one's using his influence to procure the pardon or commutation of the sentence of a person who had been tried and convicted and sentenced to death by a military court was valid, the conviction and sentence being void. See Rau v. Boyle, 5 Bush (Ky.) 253.

agreements void fails when no unlawful means of attaining the desired object are contemplated by the contract itself or in fact employed;⁸⁷ and such services, when performed at defendant's request, are a good consideration for a subsequent promise to pay.⁸⁸ Such agreements would clearly seem to be lawful, where the services contracted for are publicly rendered by advocates disclosing their true relation to the subject, and not by private individuals keeping secret the character in which they solicit;⁸⁹ but where the compensation is contingent on success, this is a strong circumstance against the validity of the agreement.⁹⁰

90. McGill v. Burnett, 7 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 646; Wildey v. Collier, 7 Md. 273, 61 Am. Dec. 346. In an English case Lord Eldon expressed the opinion that "where a person interposes his interest and good offices to procure a pardon, it ought to be done gratuitously, and not for money. The doing an act of that description should proceed from pure motives, not from pecuniary ones." Norman v. Cole, 3 Esp. 253.

Services by persons not attorneys at law. — In Bird v. Breedlove, 24 Ga. 623, it was held that the business of attending to applications for pardon was not restricted to attorneys at law. But there would seem to be good reason for drawing a distinction between such a contract with an attorney, and one with a private person; for the attorney is bound by his oath of office to refrain from all unlawful actions as such, and may consequently be considered as restrained by the sanction of that oath from the use of improper influence, while a private individual is without that restraining power.

Illustrations.—The rule applies to an agreement between two persons by which one of them stipulates to pay the other a proportion of the fees and emoluments of a public office which he is seeking, in consideration that that other will aid him in obtaining it (Gaston v. Drake, 14 Nev. 175, 33 Am. Rep. 548; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449); to an agreement by an applicant for an office to divide the receipts, in consideration of the withdrawal of a rival applicant (Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168; Glover v. Taylor, 38 La. Ann. 634; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449; Hunter v. Nolf, 71 Pa. St. 282); to an agreement by a public officer that third parties may select his resignation.⁹² The rule also applies to an agreement for the sale⁹³ or the exchange⁹⁴ of public office; to an agreement by a public officer to pay another for performing the duties of his office for him;⁹⁵ to an agreement to divide the fees of public office with another;⁹⁶ and to an agreement by a candidate for a public office to appoint a certain person as his deputy if he is elected.⁹⁷ his deputies and receive the fees of the office (Willis v. Weatherford Compress Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 66 S. W. 472); and to an agreement whereby in consideration of a person's procuring another's appointment as special counsel in certain causes against the United States, and aiding him in managing the defense of them, the other agrees that he will pay him one half of the fee which he may receive from the government (Meguire v. Corwine, 101 U. S. 108, 25 L. ed. 899).

Appointment as postmaster.—An agreement for a sale of the fixtures of a post-office, in which the seller, who is then postmaster, agrees to resign, and to use his influence to secure the appointment of the buyer to the office, is illegal and void. Edwards v. Randle, 63 Ark. 318, 38 S. W. 343, 58 Am. St. Rep. 108, 36 L. R. A. 174. If they could be assigned, it is said, the public service would suffer because the officer would no longer have any interest in the compensation to be paid for his labor.⁹⁸ While in England it would seem that it is immaterial whether the salary is due or the fees earned at the time of the assignment or not,⁹⁹ it seems to be the rule in the United States that the assignment after it is due or earned is not illegal; but before it is due or earned it is.¹ The rule is also well settled that where fees or salary are established for the services of public officers, the policy of the law forbids special contracts as to compensation between them and the public. Illustrations.—The rule has been applied to an assignment by a clerk of the court of all the fees of his office to pay a debt (Field v. Chipley, 79 Ky. 260, 42 Am. Rep. 215); to an assignment of his salary by a district attorney (Holt v. Thurman, 63 S. W. 280, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 92) or by a United States postal clerk (State v. Williamson, 118 Mo. 146, 23 S. W. 1054, 40 Am. St. Rep. 358, 21 L. R. A. 827); of unearned salary by clerks and deputies in a city or county clerk's office (Bangs v. Dunn, 36 Cal. 72, 4 Pac. 963); of his fees by an executor before they are ascertained and fixed as provided by statute (In re Worthington, 141 N. Y. 9, 35 N. E. 929, 23 L. R. A. 97); of the unearned pay of a retired United States army officer (Schwenck v. Wyckoff, 46 N. J. Eq. 560, 20 Atl. 259, 19 Am. St. Rep. 438, 9 L. R. A. 221); to an assignment to the county superintendent of the poor of claims of a contractor with him as such superintendent for providing homes for indigent children of the county (People v. Saratoga County, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 740, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 1048); and to an agreement between a sheriff and an attorney that the former should be paid nothing for the service of certain writs by the attorney or his clients, unless the actions resulted successfully (Edgerly v. Hale, 71 N. H. 138, 51 Atl. 679).

Effect of void assignment.—Where the fees of a public officer are collected by another under a void assignment thereof, such collection is ineffectual as to such officer, and they are still due, so far as he is concerned. Willis v. Weatherford Compress Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 66 S. W. 472.

Pensions.—An assignment of pensions not granted exclusively for past services is void as against public policy. Bliss v. Lawrence, 58 N. Y. 442, 17 Am. Rep. 273; Wells v. Foster, 5 Jur. 464, 10 L. J. Exch. 216, 8 M. & W. 149. By federal law the assignment of a pension granted by the United States is void. Act Cong. Feb. 28, 1883. See PENSIONS.

Contrary and anomalous rulings.—In State Bank v. Hastings, 15 Wis. 75, the court sees nothing against public policy in a public officer assigning his unearned salary "if he can find any person willing to take the risk of his living and being entitled to it when it becomes payable." In Manly v. Bitzer, 91 Ky. 596, 16 S. W. 464, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 166, 34 Am. St. Rep. 242, the controversy was over the wages of a policeman in the city of Louisville. He had, about the first of the month, sold and assigned his claim against the city for the wages of that month, and after the assignment a creditor sought to subject it by attachment. It was held that as the policeman had an existing contract with the city for the payment of such a salary, and his term of office extended beyond the time when it could be presumed because of the existence of the contract that the salary would be earned, it had such a potential existence that he had a right to transfer it, and having done so for value it vested the assignee with an equity which, being older in time than that of the attachment, must prevail. The opinion does not discuss or decide the question from the standpoint of public policy, and the authorities cited to support it do not in any way consider or involve this question. There is no suggestion in the opinion of any distinction whatever between the unearned wages of a person occupying a mere private position and one who is discharging the duties of a public officer.

2. Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 72 Iowa 130, 132, 33 N. W. 603, where it was held that a contract by which a justice of the peace agrees to accept a less or a greater compensation than is prescribed by statute or whereby he agrees not to avail himself of a statutory mode of enforcing a collection of his fees is contrary to public policy. The court, after stating that he could perhaps remit accrued fees for past services, said: "But a different question is presented where a public officer, prior to the transaction of an official act, agrees to accept a less compensation for the performance of the act than is prescribed by statute. If, by contract, he may take less, why may not the parties contract for an enlarged compensation? We think a contract whereby an officer agrees to accept a less or greater compensation than is prescribed by statute, or whereby he agrees not to avail himself of a statutory mode of enforcing the collection of his fees, is contrary to public policy and void." See also Miller v. U. S., 103 Fed. 413, 415, where an agreement made by an assistant inspector of steam vessels with the secretary of the treasury, to accept a less salary than was provided for the office by the federal statutes was held void. The court said: "Any bargain whereby, in advance of his appointment to an office with a salary fixed by legislative authority, the appointee attempts to agree with the individual making the appointment that he will waive all salary or accept something less than the statutory sum, is contrary to public policy, and should not be tolerated by the courts. It is to be assumed that congress fixes the salary with due regard to the work to be performed, and the grade of man that such salary may secure. It would lead to the grossest abuses if a candidate and the executive officer who selects him may combine together so as entirely to exclude from consideration the whole class of men who are willing to take the office on the salary congress has fixed, but will not come for less. And, if public policy prohibit such a bargain in advance, it would seem that a court should be astute not to give effect to such illegal contract by indirection, as by spelling out a waiver or estoppel." And see Settle v. Sterling, 1 Ida. 259; Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 40 Iowa 200; People v. Board of Police, 75 N. Y. 38. See also OFFICERS.

Agreement for fixed sum by one entitled to percentage.—It has been held that where a person receives a public office which entitles him by statute to a certain percentage upon the fees and emoluments of the office of his principal, and on receiving his appointment, enters into an agreement to perform the duties of his office at a fixed salary, such agreement is void, although it be not certain that the stipulated sum would be less than the percentage allowed by law. *Tappan v. Reward for performance of services.—This principle applies to all promises of reward to public officers to induce them to perform a duty required of them by law. Such promises are void, not only for want of consideration (see supra, IV, D, 12, b), but also because they are contrary to public policy and illegal.

(g) *Interference With Duties of Quasi-Public Corporations.*⁴ Agreements by railroad companies and other common carriers, water and gas companies, and other quasi-public corporations owing duties to the public, which interfere with the performance of such duties, are illegal and void as being contrary to public policy.⁵ This principle has been applied for example to an agreement or combination by or between railroad companies leasing or conveying property necessary to enable them to perform their duties to the public, or discontinuing a line, etc.;⁶ to an agreement between two connecting railroad companies that one should discontinue the use of a part of its road by which it had long been connected with a line of steamboats at tidewater, which was one of its termini under its charter, and that the other should use its influence to prevent the extension of a third road which would interfere with the business of the first one;⁷ and to agreements by which a railroad company binds itself not to build its railroad along a (Ky.) 396; and see supra, IV, D, 12, b) or where the service is one for which the law does not fix any compensation (Maguin v. Rosenthal, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 504). And where the defendant in an execution paid commissions to a constable, with an agreement that the constable should refund such commissions if he was not entitled to them, it was held that this was a valid agreement. Smith v. Keith, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 116.

ticular route, not to locate its station or depot at a particular point, or to locate it at a particular point,⁸ unless, according to some of the cases, where the agreement is to locate along a particular route or at a particular point it is not restricted from locating lines, stations, or depots along other lines, or at other points also, or otherwise doing whatever the public convenience may require.⁹ Contracts by common carriers and other quasi-public corporations making undue discrimination in favor of particular persons are generally prohibited by statute, but they are also illegal as contrary to public policy.¹⁰

(H) Interference With Elections. Agreements which are particularly obnoxious to the courts as being contrary to public policy are all those which tend to impair the integrity of public elections.¹¹ The law therefore condemns as illegal, not only agreements to directly or indirectly bribe a voter,¹² but also those which

Indirect bribery.—A promise to a voter to pay his traveling expenses or to remunerate him for his loss of time is illegal and void. Simpson v. Yeend, L. R. 4 Q. B. 626, 10 B. & S. 752, 38 L. J. Q. B. 313, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 56, 17 Wkly. Rep. 1100; Cooper v. Slade, 6 E. & B. 447, 2 Jur. N. S. 1016, 25 L. J. Q. B. 324, 88 E. C. L. 447. And the same is true of an agreement to furnish liquor, refresh-

in any way tend to curtail a free exercise of the elective franchise, as for example a promise in consideration of the promisee procuring the nomination of the promisor¹³ or his election;¹⁴ a promise in consideration of another's withdrawing himself as a candidate;¹⁵ or an agreement to pay money in consideration of abandoning a petition against the return of a member for bribery.¹⁶ A bet on the result of an election is illegal, even in the absence of a statutory provision.¹⁷ Under this head may also be classed contracts by which one agrees for money or personal profit to use his efforts and influence to induce a majority of the voters to vote for any proposition submitted to the vote of the people, as the change of a county-seat, a subscription of a city or county in aid of a railroad, etc., or to vote in a particular way at such an election.¹⁸ There is nothing illegal, however, in an agreement to pay for the open advocacy of the election of a candidate for office, for legitimate political work,¹⁹ or for work and labor, as in putting up a tent in which to hold political meetings, and similar expenses.²⁰

(1) Interference With Course of Justice — (1) IN GENERAL. Agreements calculated to impede the regular administration of justice are void as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or employed in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements, and it closes the door to temptation by refusing them recognition in any of the courts of the country.²¹ Within the condemned category are Valid agreements.—An agreement by a stranger to an action to furnish evidence therein, for a compensation contingent upon the result, is not necessarily illegal. Wellington v. Kelly, 84 N. Y. 543. And see Harris v. More, 70 Cal. 502, 11 Pac. 780. An offer of a reward for the detection of crime is not illegal. See REWARDS. An agreement to compensate a deputy sheriff for procuring evidence which would lead to the conviction of a person implicated in a certain crime is not contrary to public policy, if the crime was committed and the trial had in a county other than that in which the deputy sheriff was an officer. Harris v. More, 70 Cal. 502, 11 Pac. 780. A contract to give information in respect to evidence for a trial is not always void as against public policy; but a contract to suppress evidence is. Cobb v. Cowdery, 40 Vt. 25, 94 Am. Dec. 370. As to agreements to suppress evidence see infra, note 28.

Turning state's evidence by joint defendant.—An agreement with one of several jointly indicted that if he will testify candidly and fully, the facts will be presented to the court with a recommendation of the prosecuting officer that a nolle prosequi be entered, is not illegal. Nickelson v. Wilson, 60 N. Y. 362 [reversing 1 Hun (N. Y.) 615, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 104].

27. Where a party promised a witness a sum in excess of his legal fees, the amount to depend on the promisor's success in the suit, the promise was held void as against public policy; the court saying: "Such contracts are against sound policy, because their inevitable tendency would be, if not to invite to perjury, at least to sway the mind of the witness, by giving him the interest of a party to the cause, and thus contaminate the stream of justice at its source." Dawkins v. Gill, 10 Ala. 206, 208. And see Dodge v. Stiles, 26 Conn. 463; Pollak v. Gregory, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 116; Willis v. Peckham, 1 B. & B. 515, 4 Moore C. P. 300, 21 Rev. Rep. 706, 5 E. C. L. 774. But such agreements are usually held to be non-enforceable for lack of consideration, unless the witness is to do more than the law requires. Dodge v. Stiles, 26 Conn. 463. Agreement between officers as to process.—A contract between two constables holding several executions against the same defendant, by which they agree to levy on certain property claimed by a third person, divide the proceeds, and jointly bear the expense of any suit brought against them by the third person is contrary to public policy and illegal. Bishop v. Harvey, 3 N. J. L. 644.

Promise of compensation to officer.—A promise to pay a sheriff or constable greater compensation than that allowed by law for executing process or other official acts is contrary to public policy. Downs v. McGlynn, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 14. See supra, VII, B, 3, f, (II), (F), note 3. Such contracts are also void for want of consideration. See supra, IV, D, 12, b.

34. In England it has been recently held that any agreement to indemnify bail in a criminal case is against public policy and void. Herman v. Jeuchner, 15 Q. B. D. 561, 49 J. P. 502, 54 L. J. Q. B. 340, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 94, 95, 33 Wkly. Rep. 606 [overruling Wilson v. Strugnell, 7 Q. B. D. 548, 14 Cox C. C. 624, 45 J. P. 831, 50 L. J. M. C. 145, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218]. Brett, M. R., said: "Now the whole of the contract in the present case is this. The plaintiff asked the defendant to enter into a bail bond to bail out the plaintiff who had been convicted on a criminal charge, and ordered to find security, and the plaintiff agreed, if the defendant would enter into the bond, to deposit with the defendant a sum of money which was to remain in the defendant's hands for two years. The promise, therefore, was that the defendant would enter into the bond, and the consideration was the deposit of the money, and the question is whether either of these is illegal. This depends on whether it is illegal to bail out a person on a criminal charge in consideration of receiving money in hand sufficient to meet the bond. I am of opinion that this is illegal, because the effect is to take away from the authority of the law the protection which is intended to be given when sureties are required. The reason for requiring sureties is that it makes it the interest of the sureties to take care that the principal obeys, and does that which he is called upon to do. If the principal puts into the hands of the surety the means of meeting the bond when the principal breaks his promise, then the surety has no such interest as I have mentioned, and the contract is illegal." There are some decisions to this effect in the United States. Ratliffe v. Smith, 13 Bush (Ky.) 172; U. S. v. Simmons, 47 Fed. 575. But see Simpson v. Robert, 35 Ga. 180; Richardson v. Randall, 48 N. Y. 348, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 335; Maloney v. Nelson, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 474, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 930 [affirmed in 12 N. Y. App. Div. 545, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 418].

35. Other agreements held illegal are: An agreement by an attorney to pay any judgment which may be finally rendered against his client, if the latter will appeal a pending suit and pay him for conducting the case (Adye v. Hanna, 47 Iowa 264, 29 Am. Rep. 484); an agreement between attorneys and liquor-dealers that the former defend for a stated monthly compensation all cases brought against the latter for violation of the prohibitory liquor law (Bowman v. Phillips, 41 Kan. 364, 21 Pac. 230, 13 Am. St. Rep. 292, 3 L. R. A. 631; and see Treat v. Jones, 28 Conn. 334); an agreement between the father and grandfather of an infant legatee and an heir at law not to insist on probate, and that if the will shall be set aside the heir shall pay the infant the amount of his legacy (Gray v. McReynolds, 65 Iowa 461, 21 N. W. 777, 54 Am. Rep. 16); an agreement by which an administrator agrees to sell certain real property belonging to the estate which he represents for a certain sum, and to make the title to the purchaser named therein through the medium of the orphans' court (Myers v. Hodges, 2 Watts (Pa.) 381, 27 Am. Dec. 319); an agreement by an administratrix and heir with a third person to pay him all that may be obtained above a certain amount for his efforts in procuring bids at the administratrix's sale of the land of the estate (Danielwitz v. Sheppard, 62 Cal. 339); and an agreement whereby one agrees for a certain sum of money to furnish sureties so that the other party to the contract can be appointed as administrator (Aycock v. Brann, 66 Tex. 201, 18 S. W. 500).

Dividing reward with criminal.—An agreement with a criminal for whose arrest a reward has been offered and another to share the reward on the latter giving him up is illegal and void. Bledsoe v. Jackson, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 429.

A contract to procure bail for a person arrested is not illegal. Lehndorf v. Schields, 13 Mo. App. 486; Winter v. Kinney, 1 N. Y. 365. An agreement by a railroad company to procure bail for a detective in its employ in case he shall be arrested in the course of his employment and to pay all expense of his arrest is legal. Hewlett v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 65 Miss. 463, 4 So. 547.

Contracts of indemnity or guaranty are not against public policy where the act contemplated is not illegal. (Knight v. Sawin, 6 Me. 361; New York Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 65 N. W. 351, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464, 30 L. R. A. 586; Coats v. Donnell, 94 N. Y. 168; Maloney v. Nelson, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 474, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 930 [affirmed in 42 N. Y. Suppl. 418]; as a bond to secure performance of either public or private official duties (Samuels v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 49 Hun (N. Y.) 122, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 850, 16 N. Y. St. 917; *Dewey v. No. 3,463) or a conveyance of property to secure a defalcation (Territory v. Golding, 3 Utah 39, 5 Pac. 546). A bond or promise of indemnity to an officer for the consequence of an act known to be illegal or a violation of duty is illegal (supra, note 3), but it is otherwise if the act is lawful or apparently lawful and is done in good faith.

Feigned suit.—Any attempt by a mere colorable dispute to obtain the opinion of the court upon a question of law which a party desires to know for his own interest or purpose, when there is no real and substantial controversy between those who appear as adverse parties to the suit, is an abuse which courts of justice have always reprehended and treated as a punishable contempt of court. You shall not stipulate for iniquity. Plaintiff delivered the notes to defendant, with the express agreement that the latter should retain them in case of A's conviction, but that he should return them in case of his acquittal. Illustrations.—In Ford v. Cratty, 52 Ill. 313, it was held that a client who, by threatening to arrest his attorney on a charge of larceny or embezzlement, had procured from him a note with security for the amount which he had collected and refused to pay over, could maintain an action on the note. It was held that the transaction was not compounding a criminal offense, although such refusal by an attorney to pay over was made by statute a misdemeanor, and that the case was unaffected by the fact that the note would not have been given had not the principal maker been threatened with a criminal prosecution. In School Dist. No. 61 v. Collins, 6 Dak. 145, 41 N. W. 466, an outgoing treasurer's shortage in his accounts was settled by the payment of a certain amount of cash and the execution of a note by a third party for the balance agreed on as due. There was some testimony that prior to the

(c) PROOF OF COMMISSION OF CRIME. In this connection a distinction is made between a criminal prosecution actually pending and a charge or suspicion of crime where no criminal proceedings have yet been commenced. If a criminal prosecution is in fact pending at the time, either by the finding of an indictment or otherwise, then the public interest in the prosecution of the actual pending charge is of such a nature as to avoid any security for a debt given upon an agreement for the stifying of the pending prosecution, even though the debt thus secured was due.⁴⁸ But where no criminal proceedings are pending, the actual commission of the crime alleged to have been compounded is one of the facts at issue in the case, and necessary to be alleged and satisfactorily proved in order to make out the defense of illegality.⁴⁹ The reason is that if no criminal charge is actually pending for trial or prosecution, the public interest is, not that there should be a charge in any event, but only in case a crime has been actually committed; and proof therefore that the crime had been committed lies at the basis of the charge of illegality.⁵⁰

(d) OFFENSES WHICH MAY BE COMPROMISED — aa. In General. In applying the doctrine that agreements involving compounding of crime are illegal and void, most of the courts seem to make no distinction between felonies and misdemeanors, but to hold that it is illegal to compound any public offense.⁵¹ In a number of states the settlement of some offenses, generally minor misdemeanors, the prosecution of which is not a matter of particular public interest, is permitted by judicial settlement threats of prosecution had been made by the officer representing the district, that such officer had said that he would stop the prosecution if the note was executed, and that the maker signed under such representations, but there was no evidence that by prosecution was meant a criminal prosecution, and it did not appear what the terms of the agreement were in relation thereto. It was held that it did not appear that the note was given to compound a felony.

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contracts," § 637 et seq. And see the cases cited as contra in the notes following.

The distinction between the law of England and of the United States in regard to prosecution for crime should not be overlooked. By the common law it was the duty of every one against whose person or property a crime had been committed to prosecute the guilty one to conviction. He was, in the discharge of his duty, often compelled to employ counsel, procure the indictment to be drawn and laid before the grand jury, with the evidence in its support, and, if it should be found, to see that it was properly prosecuted before the jury of trials. The common-law rule, however, is decision or by statute.⁵² Where the prosecution is criminal in form only, or where the injury complained of is of a purely private and personal nature, in no way involving the interests of the public, an agreement for its settlement is not invalid.⁵³ In some states there may be a compromise or settlement of prosecutions for obtaining money or goods by false pretenses,⁵⁴ for embezzlement,⁵⁵ for the offense of removing goods of a debtor to prevent a levy,⁵⁶ for criminal conversation,⁵⁷ and for assault or assault and battery.⁵⁸ In an English case it is said that it is safe to say that the law will permit a compromise of all offenses, although made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which offenses the injured party might sue and recover damages in an action.⁵⁹ This doctrine, however, is not recognized to any great extent in the states of the United States. On the contrary it has been many times held that it is illegal to compromise or settle a prosecution for obtaining money or goods by false pretenses,⁶⁰ for larceny or not observed in the United States, where we have public prosecutors in every state and in almost every county. With us, whatever be the English usage, the party may institute the proceedings for damages as promptly as he chooses, only he must not bring on the trial in advance of his public duty. The duty of the private person ceases when he has made his complaint, appeared before the grand jury, and secured or failed to secure an indictment. See McBlain v. Edgar, 65 N. J. L. 634, 48 Atl. 600. In a Massachusetts case it is said that according to the great weight of American authority, any act which is made punishable by law as a crime is an offense against the public, and especially in this country, where all prosecutions are subject to the control of official prosecutors, and not of the individuals immediately injured, it cannot lawfully be made the subject of private compromise, except so far as expressly authorized by statute. *Partridge v. 59. Keir v. Leeman, 6 Q. B. 308, 8 Jur. 824, 13 L. J. Q. B. 259, 51 E. C. L. 308. In this case the court ventured the opinion that for an assault the sufferer might legally undertake not to prosecute on behalf of the public, but was not disposed to extend the exception further; and the agreement before the court being in consideration that the plaintiff, being the prosecutor of an indictment against the defendant for an assault and a riot and the obstruction of a public officer, would not proceed further on the indictment, it was held illegal because the riot and obstruction of a public officer were matters of public concern which could not be thus stifled. Merely imposing conditions.—An agreement will not be construed to oust the courts of their jurisdiction when it merely imposes certain conditions in respect to the exercise between the different courts of the country is contrary to public policy.⁷⁰ The principle has also been applied to a stipulation in a contract that a party who breaks it may not be sued,⁷¹ to an agreement designating a person to be sued for its breach who is nowise liable and prohibiting action against any but him,⁷² to a provision in a lease that the landlord shall have the right to take immediate judgment against the tenant in case of a default on his part, without giving the notice and demand for possession and filing the complaint required by statute,⁷³ to a by-law of a benefit association that the decisions of its officers on a claim shall be final and conclusive,⁷⁴ and to many other agreements of a similar tendency.⁷⁵ In some courts any agreement as to the time for suing different from the time allowed by the statute of limitations within which suit shall be brought or the right to sue be barred is held void.⁷⁶

(4) REFERENCE TO ARBITRATION. Agreements to refer disputes to arbitration present an example of what the common law regarded as attempts to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, and as against public policy. The reason of the rule of the right to sue. Seibert v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 52 Minn. 148, 53 N. W. 1134, 38 Am. St. Rep. 530, 20 L. R. A. 535.

Assoc. v. Cleveland Woolen Mills*, 82 Fed. 508, 27 C. C. A. 212), and of an agreement not to remove any suit which may be begun against one in a state court to a federal court (Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 22 L. ed. 365 [reversing 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 314]). 75. Other illustrations.—The rule has also been applied to an agreement between a fidelity insurance company and an employee whose honesty is guaranteed that the voucher showing payment by the company to the employer of loss occasioned through the employee's dishonesty should be conclusive evidence against the employee as to the fact and extent of his liability to the company (New York Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 65 N. W. 351, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464, 30 L. R. A. 586); to an agreement between a corporation and an employee that a deposit given by him to secure the faithful discharge of his duties should be retained in whole or in part, if the president should deem proper, and that his certificate that the deposit was forfeited should be conclusive evidence of the fact in the courts, and should bar the employee of all right to recover the deposit (White v. Middlesex R. Co., 135 Mass. 216); and to an agreement between a surviving partner, the widow of a deceased partner who left minor children, and a part of the individual creditors of the deceased partner, that the surviving partner should pay a proportionate share of the individual indebtedness of the deceased partner and retain all the partnership property (*Cox v. But in other courts it has been held that parties may agree on a period less than the statutory time, provided the time is reasonable. Brown v. Savannah Mut. Ins. Co., 24 Ga. 97; *Eliot Nat. adopted by the courts is by some traced to the jealousy of the courts and a desire to repress all attempts to encroach on the exclusiveness of their jurisdiction; and by others to an aversion of the courts, from reasons of public policy, to sanction contracts by which the protection which the law affords the individual citizens is renounced. But whatever may be the reason, it is a well-settled rule of the common law that a clause in an agreement, or a separate agreement, that any or all disputes which may arise thereunder shall be referred to an arbitrator or arbitrators is unenforceable as an attempt to oust the courts of jurisdiction, and either party may have recourse to them without carrying out his agreement to refer.⁷⁷ There is a strong tendency in modern times to relax the common-law rule,⁷⁸ and in some states the settlement of disputes by arbitration is permitted by statute.⁷⁹ There is also a qualification made in the modern decisions, following an English case,⁸⁰ which is this: that it is not illegal for parties to agree to arbitration as a condition precedent to suit, with respect to the mode of settling the amount of damages or the time of paying it or any matters of that kind that do not go to the root of the action, and that if an agreement does not deprive the plaintiff absolutely of his right to sue, but only renders it a condition precedent that the amount to be recovered shall first be ascertained by a committee of arbitrators, such an agreement does not oust the courts of their jurisdiction; and therefore, that where a covenant or agreement creates a condition precedent of this kind, the courts cannot be resorted to for the settlement of the controversy until the condition precedent is fulfilled.⁸¹ Where rights have already accrued

Agreement for trial before referee.—A stipulation in a contract that any action thereon should be tried before a referee is void. Sanford v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acc. Assoc., 147 N. Y. 326, 41 N. E. 694, 69 N. Y. St. 689 [affirming 86 Hun (N. Y.) 380, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 512, 67 N. Y. St. 225, distinguishing In re New York, etc., R. Co., 98 N. Y. 447, and *criticizing Greve v. 78. Thus in Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 250, 258, the court said: "Were the question res nova, I apprehend that a party would not now be permitted, in the absence of fraud or some peculiar circumstances entitling him to relief, to repudiate his agreement to submit to arbitration, and seek a remedy at law, when his adversary had not refused to arbitrate, or in any way obstructed or hindered the arbitration agreed upon. But the rule that a general covenant to submit any differences that may arise in the performance of a contract, or under an executory agreement, is a nullity, is too well established to be now questioned." And in Hood v. Hartshorn, 100 Mass. 117, 122, 1 Am. Rep. 89, Chapman, J., said: "Judicial tribunals are provided by the government to enable parties to enforce their rights when other means fail, but not to hinder them from adjusting their differences themselves, or by agents of their own selection." This is in line with the remark of Pollock, B., in Dawson v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ex. D. 257, 45 L. J. Exch. 893, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220, 24 Wkly. the parties may by agreement submit the determination of the same to arbitration.⁸²

(5) LIMITING RIGHT TO PROSECUTE OR DEFEND CIVIL ACTION OR PROCEEDING As public policy is in no way concerned with the option which a man has to sue or to forbear suit, it is universally held that a good consideration may spring from an agreement to refrain from prosecuting a civil claim.⁸³ But if public interests or the interests of third persons become involved in a mere private controversy the rule is different.⁸⁴ Thus it is held that an agreement to withdraw a plea of usury is against public policy and void.⁸⁵ And the same is true of divorce pro-

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contracts," § 611; and, generally, ARBITRATION AND AWARD, 3 Cyc. 595.

Statement of principle.—The principle is best stated by Bramwell, J., who after referring to the fact that in the argument of Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811, 2 Jur. N. S. 815, 25 L. J. Exch. 308, 4 Wkly. Rep. 746 [affirming 8 Exch. 487], Mr. Manisty and himself were counsel for defendants, said: "We scarcely cited a case, but laid down a proposition which was almost immediately adopted by the judges below and by the House of Lords. That proposition was that if two persons, whether in the same or in a different deed from that which creates the liability, agree to refer the matter upon which the liability arises to arbitration, that agreement does not take away the right of action. But if the original agreement is not simply to pay a sum of money, but that a sum of money shall be paid if something else happens, and that something else is that a third person shall settle the amount, then the cause of action does not arise until the third person has so assessed the sum." Elliott v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., L. R. 2 Exch. 237, 36 L. J. Exch. 129, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 399, 15 Wkly. Rep. 907. Referring to this, in a late case in the federal court it is said that the cases where an action will lie are here precisely distinguished. Gauche v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 4 Woods (U. S.) 102, 10 Fed.

347. The principle was again very well put by Mr. Baron Bramwell in the case of Tredwen v. Holman, 1 H. & C. 72, 79, 8 Jur. N. S. 1080, 31 L. J. Exch. 389, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 127, 10 Wkly. Rep. 652. He says: "If a tenant covenants that he will cultivate the demised land in a husbandlike manner, and also covenants that if any dispute shall arise in respect thereof it shall be referred to arbitration, an action may nevertheless be maintained; but where the covenant is to pay such damages as shall be ascertained by an arbitrator, no action will lie until he has ascertained them." And see Edwards v. Aberayron Mut. Ship Ins. Soc., 1 Q. B. D. 563, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 457.

84. In an action by materialmen against contractors for building certain houses, it appeared that plaintiffs had previously filed their liens against the houses, but failed, as to a certain part of the claims, to recover on them. Defendants set up as a defense an alleged agreement with plaintiffs that in consideration that defendants would take no defense in the scire facias on the lien, plaintiffs would look to the buildings alone. It was held that, as defendants' duty to the owner of the property required them to state and make a defense, the agreement was a fraud on the owner and void as against public policy. Young v. Burtman, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 203, 8 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 106. So where a person was obstructing a public street, it was held that an agreement between him and an adjoining owner that the latter would take no steps to prevent such obstruction was void. ceedings, which are "triangular actions of tort" the state being the third party. Hence an agreement that the defendant in an action for divorce shall withdraw his or her papers and make no defense has been held illegal and void.⁸⁶ And so it has been held of agreements not to set up any defense to an action for royalties under a patent contesting in any way its validity,⁸⁷ and of agreements to prevent proceedings which have been commenced by or against a bankrupt or insolvent, or to prevent his discharge, under the bankruptcy or insolvency laws.⁸⁸

(6) CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE. At common law agreements involving maintenance, which is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it; or champerty, which is the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it, are illegal as contrary to public policy, because of their tendency to encourage litigation; but this doctrine is not now recognized to the full extent in all jurisdictions.⁸⁹

(iii) INJURY TO, OR VIOLATION OF, LAWS OF FOREIGN STATE. An agreement is illegal as contrary to public policy where its object or tendency is to injure the state in its relation with foreign states.⁹⁰ This is true not only of dealings with a hostile state, as in the case of contracts with an alien enemy,⁹¹ but also of hostile dealings with a friendly state,⁹² as in the case of agreements whose object is the fomenting or aiding of a rebellion in a foreign state,⁹³ or agreements whose object is unlawful privateering against the commerce of a foreign power.⁹⁴ This rule does not apply, however, so as to render it illegal for a neutral to engage in a contraband trade, even though the adventure may contemplate blockade-running; but such trade is done at the risk of seizure, of which the neutral trader or his government cannot complain.⁹⁵ An agreement is illegal as being contrary to public policy if its object or necessary effect is to violate the laws (except, in some jurisdictions, the revenue laws) of a foreign friendly country or a sister state.⁹⁶

(iv) AIDING PUBLIC ENEMY. As has been already stated all agreements with alien enemies are illegal and void as contrary to a rule of the common law prohibiting intercourse between a subject and an alien enemy.⁹⁷ In the same class are agreements in aid of the public enemy.⁹⁸

(v) AGREEMENTS AGAINST GOOD MORALS. Illicit intercourse not entering into consideration.—In Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275, where a man promised to marry a woman in September or October if they could agree and get along and be true

And the same is true of all agreements which are based upon, as a consideration, or which contemplate present or future illicit cohabitation or prostitution.² If the object of the agreement be to induce immorality, no technical nicety in the instrument, or stipulation of moneyed consideration, or form of deed or writing can give it validity. Such agreements are void in toto.³ A promise made in consideration of past illicit cohabitation is not taken to be made on an illegal consideration, but is a mere gratuitous promise in reparation of the wrong, valid at common law if made under seal, but otherwise unenforceable because lacking a real consideration.⁴

(VI) AGREEMENTS AFFECTING MARITAL RELATIONS — (A) Restraint of Marriage. A class of agreements which are frequently held invalid on the ground of public policy are agreements affecting marital relations. Chief among these are agreements in restraint of marriage. Restrictions on marriage are contrary to public policy, and therefore agreements or conditions creating or involving such restrictions are illegal and void.⁵ Thus where a man agreed to pay a woman a certain sum of money if he married any one but her, the agreement was held void.⁶ And so it has been held of a contract or wager by a person that he will not marry within a certain number of years,⁷ and of a marriage benefit certificate which was in fact an agreement to pay a sum of money to another on condition that the payee should not marry within a certain time, and if he should, then to pay a certain sum per day during the time he should remain unmarried.⁸

(B) Marriage Brokers Contracts. Contracts by which one person agrees to give another a compensation if he will negotiate or procure an advantageous

Agreements held not in restraint of marriage.—It has been held that the rule does not apply to a contract by which a husband agrees to pay his divorced wife forty-five dollars a month for her support "for so long a time as she does not marry again," such a contract not being a restraint of marriage nor against public policy (Jones v. Jones, 1 Colo. App. 28, 27 Pac. 85); to promises of members of a society of Shakers not to marry while they continue members (Waite v. Merrill, 4 Me. 102, 16 Am. Dec. 238); or to a deed giving personal leasehold property to the grantor's sisters for life as tenants in common, and to the survivor for life "or so long as they both shall remain unmarried; and from and after the marriage of either of them, then unto the one remaining unmarried so long as she shall live, and no longer" (Arthur v. Cole, 56 Md. 100, 40 Am. Rep. 409). See also Shafer v. Senseman, 125 Pa. St. 310, 17 Atl. 350, where plaintiff and his wife, who were residing with the wife's father, had made arrangements to remove to another place on account of the contemplated remarriage of the father, and the father, with the apparent object of retaining the society of his daughter, executed an obligation to plaintiff payable a certain length of time after the date when plaintiff should lose the situation he was then filling, provided he lost it before the second marriage of the father or the death of the daughter. It was held that the obligation was not void as in restraint of marriage.

marriage for him are contrary to public policy and void.⁹ So a promise by a person to pay another for services to be rendered in procuring a wife for him is void.¹⁰

(c) Agreements to Dissolve Marital Relations. If the object of a contract is to divorce man and wife the agreement is against public policy and void.¹¹ The reason of the repugnance with which the law views all contracts with the purpose of dissolving the marriage relation may be found in its regard for virtue, the good order of society, the welfare of the children as the fruit of the marriage, and the sacred character of the conjugal relation. It will not suffer husband and wife to dissolve of their own accord a contract which is in its nature indissoluble except so far as the legislative will has allowed it, and then only by the method authorized. To induce a wife to sue for a divorce by a promise on the part of the husband to remunerate her for it, or for a husband and wife to agree that one of them shall bring a suit for a divorce and the other shall not defend, is against the law which recognizes and upholds the sanctity of marriage and is void.¹² The same is true of an agreement after a divorce has been granted

Illustration.—Where husband and wife, having agreed to separate, mutually covenanted that he would secure a separate maintenance to her through the intervention of trustees and that she should be no further chargeable to him; that he would furnish money and testimony for the purpose of securing a divorce, for which there was ground; and that she would pursue the proper means to procure one, all of which should be under his direction, it was held that the agreement was illegal and void. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 4 Day (Conn.) 343; Sampson v. Cresson, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 229, 24 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 132. Such agreements are also void as a fraud on the courts of justice. See supra, VII, B, 3, f, (ii), (i).

Promise in consideration of condoning adultery.—A promise by a husband to pay money to his wife in consideration of her condoning an act of adultery committed by him is void as against public policy and cannot be enforced. Van Order v. Van Order, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 315.

Agreements held valid.—An agreement between parties to a divorce, declaring the terms upon which a divorce may be decreed, does not necessarily show connivance or collusion and is not illegal where no fraud is intended to be practised upon the court and no facts are suppressed. Snow v. Gould, 74 Me. 540, 43 Am. Rep. 604. An agreement by a wife who has separated from her husband that she will not assign any other cause for a divorce than desertion in any action that she may bring against her husband is not that the husband will pay the wife money if she will not move for a new trial,¹³ or where the divorce has been wrongfully granted, that the parties will not disturb it.¹⁴ And an agreement not to sue or make claim for alimony has been held void.¹⁵ A promise to marry made by a man already married, to take effect when he has obtained a divorce from his present wife, is illegal and void.¹⁶

(d) Agreements For Separation. It seems that according to the early common law of England any agreement whose object was the separation of man and wife was void as against the policy of the law, which would not permit husband and wife to dissolve in any respect a contract which is indissoluble at the will of the parties.¹⁷ Some American cases still adhere to this rule in all its strictness,¹⁸ but the later English cases,¹⁹ as well as the great majority of the American

Agreement pending suit for divorce.—Any agreement as to alimony between the parties pending the suit for divorce is open to suspicion. Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 72; Speck v. Dausman, 7 Mo. App. 165; Daggett v. Daggett, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 509, 28 Am. Dec. 442. See DIVORCE.

A contract in settlement of a claim for alimony is valid if there be no collusion to procure a divorce. Badger v. Hatch, 71 Me. 562; Burnett v. Paine, 62 Me. 122. See Nieukirk v. Nieukirk, 84 Iowa 367, 51 N. W. 10. And see DIVORCE.

17. In the ecclesiastical courts, which had sole jurisdiction in England of causes concerning marriage and the marital status, up to the time of their abolition, it was always the rule that separation agreements were void. Barlee v. Barlee, 1 Add. Eccl. 301; Mortimer v. Mortimer, 2 Hagg. Cons. 310; Nash v. Nash, 1 Hagg. Cons. 140; Smith v. Smith, 2 Hagg. Eccl. Suppl. 44, note a; Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hagg. Eccl. New Hampshire.—Foote v. Nickerson, 70 N. H. 496, 48 Atl. 1088, 54 L. R. A. 554. In this case the opinion of the court contains an exhaustive review of the history of the subject and of the decided cases both in England and the United States, and it is said: "It may fairly be said that the question is not settled by the decisions in this state. It has been touched upon incidentally, but in no case has it been directly involved. It therefore becomes necessary to examine the law on the subject elsewhere. Turning to other jurisdictions, it will be found that the question has been the subject of much litigation, and with varied results. Not only do the cases in one state conflict with those in other states, but in the same jurisdiction the views of one generation have often been held to be erroneous in later times. There is disagreement not only as to what the law is, and what the policy on this subject should be, but also as to the history of the law, and how it was held to be in former times."

Appointment of trustee.—Some of the earlier cases, both English and American, recognized the separation agreement as valid only when a trustee was appointed by the agreement, so that it could be enforced by or against a third person acting in behalf of the wife. Simpson v. Simpson, 4 Dana (Ky.) 140; Stephenson v. Osborne, 41 Miss. 119, 90 Am. Dec. 358; Carter v. Carter, 14 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 59; Clark v. Fosdick, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 500; Dupre v. Rein, 7 Abb. N. 21. In some of the later American cases the rule is stated thus: While an agreement between husband and wife for immediate separation, immediately followed by separation, is not void at common law, the relations between them at the time it is entered into must be of such a character as that a judicial separation would be decreed for the conduct of one of them or that the separation is reasonably necessary for the health or happiness of one or the other; and that there was a moving cause for it in addition to the mere volition of the parties must be shown by the complaint in an action to enforce provisions therein for division of property. Scherer v. Scherer, 23 Ind. App. 384, 55 N. E. 494, 77 Am. St. Rep. 437; Stebbins v. Morris, 19 Mont. 115, 47 Pac. 642, 44 Centr. L. J. 209; Poillon v. Poillon, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 666, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 582.

Equitableness of provision.—In a recent case in New York it is said that it must be borne in mind that a contract between husband and wife is void at law and upheld solely in equity, and then not in every case, but only when the provision for the maintenance of the wife or children is suitable and equitable. Hungerford v. Hungerford, 161 N. Y. 550, 56 N. E. 117. And see Poillon v. Poillon, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 341, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 301; Whitney v. Whitney, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 597, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 891. 72 N. Y. An agreement for an immediate separation is made to meet a state of things which, however undesirable in itself, has in fact become inevitable. Still that state of things is abnormal and not to be contemplated beforehand. 'It is forbidden to provide for the possible dissolution of the marriage contract, which the policy of the law is to preserve intact and inviolate.' Or in other words, to allow validity to provisions for a future separation would be to allow the parties in effect to make the contract of marriage determinable on conditions fixed beforehand by themselves."²²

(E) Agreements to Resume Marital Relations. An agreement that if a wife will dismiss her suit against the husband for divorce and return and live with him as his wife he will convey to her a certain part of his property is not illegal.²³ And it has been held that where a wife living separate from her husband refuses to return to him except upon the payment of a certain sum, a bond given by the husband for such sum is not void as against public policy.²⁴

(F) Frauds Upon Marital Rights. Secret and voluntary conveyances made by either man or woman during an engagement of marriage are treated as a fraud on the marital right of the other.²⁵

Rep. 675, where it was said: "Agreements to separate have been regarded as against public policy, but it would be strangely inconsistent if the same policy should condemn agreements to restore marital relations, after a temporary separation had taken place. While the law favors the settlement of controversies between all other persons, it would be a curious policy which should forbid husband and wife to compromise their differences, or preclude either from forgiving a wrong committed by the other." See also Barbour v. Barbour, 49 N. J. Eq. 429, 42 Atl. 227; Smith v. Smith, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 378; Burkholder's Appeal, 105 Pa. Other agreements.—Where a bond was given to the father of a female, reciting that she had borne an illegitimate child to the obligor, who consented to marry her, and binding the obligor to treat her as a loving and affectionate husband ought, and not to maltreat, abuse, or desert her, it was held that it was not void as against public policy. Wyant v. Leshner, 23 Pa. St. 338. But a contract between husband and wife, whereby it was agreed to drop all matters of dispute, to refrain from scolding, fault-finding, and anger, and live together as husband and wife; that the wife should keep her home in a comfortable condition, and that the husband should provide all the necessary expenses of the family and pay the wife in addition a certain sum per month, was held contrary to public policy. Miller v. Miller, 78 Iowa 177, 35 N. W. 464, 42 N. W. 641, 16 Am. St. Rep. 431. So where a wife left her husband under the enticement of her mother and lived in the house of another, who stipulated with her husband that he should retain his wife and child and support them, it was held that such a contract was against public policy. Barbee v. Armstead, 32 N. C. 530, 51 Am. Dec. 404.

28. Stewart v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 17 Minn. 372; U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assoc., 58 Fed. 58, 7 C. C. A. 15; and other cases above cited. It was said in a leading seller of a calling, whether a business, a profession, or a trade, not to compete with the buyer;²⁹ (2) agreements by a partner or retiring partner not to compete with the firm;³⁰ (3) agreements by a servant, agent, or employee not to compete with his master, principal, or employer after his term of service or employment is over.³¹ Still an agreement in restraint of trade need not fall within these divisions to be valid; for a contract not to engage in a certain business, although unaccompanied by the sale of any business plant or stock, is not necessarily void as being in restraint of trade.³² Combinations among manufacturers, traders, and others engaged in various callings for the purpose of fixing prices or regulating or restricting sales or the output of factories, etc., are elsewhere treated.³³

Massachusetts case: "The unreasonableness of contracts in restraint of trade and business, is very apparent from several obvious considerations: (1) Such contracts injure the parties making them, because they diminish their means of procuring livelihoods and a competency for their families. They tempt improvident persons, for the sake of present gain, to deprive themselves of the power to make future acquisitions. And they expose such person to imposition and oppression. (2) They tend to deprive the public of the services of men in the employments and capacities in which they may be most useful to the community as well as themselves. (3) They discourage industry and enterprise, and diminish the products of ingenuity and skill. (4) They prevent competition and enhance prices. (5) They expose the public to all the evils of monopoly." Alger v. Thacher, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 51, 54, 31 Am. Dec. 119. The second and fifth of these reasons, it is said by Pollock, are the really efficient ones, both in themselves and as a matter of history. Pollock Contr. 312.

29. No restraint of trade is implied by the mere sale of the good-will of a business. Beard v. Dennis, 6 Ind. 200, 63 Am. Dec. 380.

30. A partner may bind himself absolutely not to compete with the firm during the partnership or after. Dethlefs v. Tamsen, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 354; Kinsman v. Parkhurst, 18 How. (U. S.) 289, 15 L. ed. 385; Dolph v. Troy Laundry Machinery Co., 28 Fed. 553.

Where the inventor of a patent agrees with another that the latter shall become part owner of the patent, and agrees to conduct exclusively the business of manufacturing the patented machines for part of the profits, the agreement is valid. Kinsman v. Parkhurst, 18 How. (U. S.) 289, 15 L. ed. 385.

31. Where a contract is made for the employment of a person in a certain trade or business, it may be accompanied with an absolute and unlimited restraint against his carrying on the same trade or business for another person or in any other way during the employment or for a reasonable time after the term of service has elapsed. Sternberg v. O'Brien, 48 N. J. Eq. 370, 22 Atl. 348; Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Chandl. (Wis.) 133; Carter v. Alling, 43 Fed. 208; Pilkington v. Scott, 15 L. J. Exch. 329, 15 M. & W. 657. Where the employment is for life the restraint may be for life. Wallis v. Day, 1 Jur. 73, 6 L. J. Exch. 92, M. & H. 222, 2

M. & W. 273; Stiff v. Cassell, 2 Jur. N. S. 348; Morris v. Colman, 18 Ves. Jr. 437, 11 Rev. Rep. 230. In an English case, where a person, in consideration of obtaining employment from another, agreed that he would not for twelve months after leaving his employment sell similar goods within eight miles of the London post-office, the master of the rolls said: "I think it is of the utmost importance to state that it is far more beneficial to men in the position of the defendant, in my opinion, that the order should be made than that it should be refused. Men of this class obtain employment on certain terms which prevent them, on leaving that employment, from making use of the knowledge which they have acquired during the employment to set up in business against their master and destroy his business. Now, if we said that no such agreement as this would be binding on the men who entered into it, the result might be that no such business would be carried on and that the men would get no employment at all, and therefore, if we are to consider the consequences of what we are doing, I think the balance of convenience or inconvenience would shew that we ought strictly to enforce such contracts." Middleton v. Brown, 47 L. J. Ch. 411, 412, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 334. And see infra, VII, C, D.

32. Wood v. Whitehead Bros. Co., 165 N. Y. 545, 59 N. E. 357. But a contract between manufacturers, whereby, without any sale of the business of one to the other, one party was prohibited from manufacturing of pressed metal any parts of a diamond car truck frame, was held void as an unreasonable restraint of trade. Fox Solid Pressed Steel Co. v. Schoen, 77 Fed. 29.

Restraint upon sale of intoxicating liquors.

— Where a person agreed not to carry on the liquor business, the contract was held valid on the ground that the business was not a trade to be encouraged. Harrison v. Lockhart, 25 Ind. 112. So it has been held that a combination of persons and firms in a city for the control of the sale of beer and the cessation of competition inter se was not void at common law as against public policy, although in restraint of trade, on the ground that beer was not an article of prime necessity and its sale was closely restricted by public policy. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Houck, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 692.

(B) The Early English Law. According to the early common law of England, an agreement which placed any restriction upon a man's right to exercise his trade or calling was void as against public policy.³⁴ But it is to be remembered that at the time when this doctrine was held a man could not lawfully exercise any trade to which he had not been duly apprenticed and admitted, and one who was so admitted was obliged by statute to follow and exercise his trade under a penalty.³⁵ Hence an agreement by such a person not to exercise his trade was an agreement not to earn a living at all, and likewise an agreement to omit a legal duty, the latter a clearly illegal agreement, and the former one likely to injure the public and society.³⁶

(c) The Later Doctrine With Its Divisions—(1) IN GENERAL. In course of time, the strict doctrine of the early common law was relaxed in the English courts and agreements in restraint of trade were classified under three heads, viz.: (1) Where the restraint was unlimited as to both time and space; (2) where it was limited as to time but unlimited as to space; and (3) where it was limited as to space but unlimited as to time. In the first and second cases the agreement was void; while in the third it was valid.³⁷ These fixed rules were followed by both English and American courts until within the past few years when a new view was introduced making the validity of the agreement dependent upon the reasonableness of the restraint.³⁸

(2) RESTRAINT UNLIMITED AS TO BOTH TIME AND SPACE. An agreement unlimited as to both time and space is regarded as a total restraint of trade and void by the rules stated in the last section.³⁹ It has been so held of an agreement that a person will not carry on a certain business at any place where the other party may carry it on;⁴⁰ that he will never carry on or be concerned in the business of an iron founder;⁴¹ that he will cease the trade of cabinet-maker;⁴² that he will never be interested in any part of the United States in the business of manufacturing daguerreotype materials or candles;⁴³ that he will never carry on the business of manufacturing boots and shoes within the state;⁴⁴ that he will never engage in the manufacture of matches in the city of St. Louis or elsewhere;⁴⁵ that a patentee will not "manufacture, sell, or cause to be sold any sand-papering machines of any description";⁴⁶ and of a contract by an inventor restraining him-

(3) RESTRAINT LIMITED AS TO TIME BUT UNLIMITED AS TO SPACE. So also according to the early doctrine where the restraint, although limited as to time, is unlimited as to space, it is void,⁴⁸ as for example an agreement that a person will not run a boat on any of the waters of a state for the term of ten years from date;⁴⁹ that he will not carry on the trade of a coal merchant for twenty years,⁵⁰ of an innkeeper for ten years,⁵¹ or the manufacturing of dies for thirty years;⁵² or will not engage in the dry-goods business for five years, with no limitation as to place;⁵³ an agreement without limitation as to space that for and during the period of five years the covenantor will not, directly or indirectly, continue in, carry on, or engage in the business of manufacturing or dealing in bed-quilts or comfortables, or of any business of which that may form a part;⁵⁴ and an agreement not to carry on a retail trade in boots and shoes while another person remains in said trade, and unrestricted as to locality.⁵⁵

Boundaries of state.—It was for some time the rule in this country that an agreement not to carry on a business anywhere within a state, like an agreement not to carry it on anywhere within the United States, was unlimited as to space and was invalid. More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251, 6 Am. Rep. 621; Wright v. Ryder, 36 Cal. 342, 95 Am. Dec. 186; Taylor v. Blanchard, 13 Allen (Mass.) 370, 90 Am. Dec. 203; Dunlop v. Gregory, 10 N. Y. 241, 61 Am. Dec. 746; Lawrence v. Kidder, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 641; Chappel v. Brockway, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 157; Nobles v. Bates, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 307; Thomas v. Miles, 3 Ohio St. 274. But in the recent cases this doctrine is rejected. They proceed on the ground that this country is substantially one country, especially in all matters of trade and business; and cases may arise in which it would involve too narrow a view of the subject to condemn as invalid a contract not to carry on a particular business within a particular state. Suppose two persons associated in business as partners and engaged in a manufacture by which they supply the country with a certain article, but the process of manufacture is a secret; and they agree to separate, and one of the terms of their separation is that one of the parties shall not sell the manufactured article in Massachusetts, where the other resides and carries on business; and that the latter shall not sell the article in New York, where his associate is to reside and carry on business. Such an agreement should certainly be sustained. And so it has been held. In Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 64, 22 L. ed. 315, an agreement restraining one of the parties from running a steamboat on any of the waters of the state of California was held valid. So in Michigan an agreement was held good not to carry on the printing business in that state. Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490. In Herreshoff v. Boutineau, 17 R. I. 3, 19 Atl. 712, 33 Am. St. Rep. 850, 8 L. R. A. 469, an agreement was held good not to teach the French or German language for one year in the state of Rhode Island. And in New York an agreement not to engage in the match business for ninety-nine years in any state or territory of the United States except Nevada and Montana was sustained. Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 13 N. E. 419, 60 Am. Rep. 464 [affirming 35 Hun (N. Y.) 421]. See also National Ben. Co. v. Union Hospital Co., 45 Minn. 272, 47 N. W. 806, 11

(4) RESTRAINT LIMITED AS TO SPACE BUT UNLIMITED AS TO TIME. Even according to the early rule, it is no objection to an agreement reasonably limited in point of space that it is unlimited in point of time and may therefore continue during the whole life of the party restrained.⁵⁶ Thus the courts have repeatedly sustained as valid agreements by the vendor of a business, trade, or profession, or by employees, etc., without limitation as to time, not to carry on the business, trade, or profession in a certain town, village, city, or county,⁵⁷ even though it be

Conflicting cases.—In Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 A. & E. 438, 453, 2 Hurl. & W. 464, 6 L. J. Exch. 266, 1 N. & P. 796, 33 E. C. L. 241, the defendant had agreed that he would not, at any time after leaving the plaintiff's service, in which he was employed as a druggist's assistant, engage in the business of a druggist and chemist in the particular town. At the trial the agreement was held void by Lord Denman, on the ground that the restraint attached to the defendant as long as he should live, although the plaintiff might leave, part with his business, or be dead; and that it was only necessary as a reasonable protection to the plaintiff that it should extend to such time as the plaintiff should be in business in the town. But on appeal this ruling was reversed, the higher court saying that "If, therefore, it is not unreasonable, as undoubtedly it is not, to prevent a servant from entering into the same trade in the same town in which his master lives, so long as the master carries on the trade there, we cannot think it unreasonable that the restraint should be carried further, and should be allowed to continue, if the master sells the trade, or bequeaths it, or it becomes the property of his personal representative." In Mandeville v. Harman, 42 N. J. Eq. 185, 194, 7 Atl. 37, it was held that a covenant by a physician that he should not "at any time thereafter" engage in practice in a certain city was void, as it would prevent him from practising after the death of the other party. "The practice of a physician," the court said, "is a thing so purely personal, depending so absolutely on the confidence reposed in his personal skill and ability, that when he ceases to exist it necessarily ceases also, and after his death can have neither an intrinsic nor a market value." This reasoning, however, is expressly repudiated in a Rhode Island case which is almost on all fours with the New Jersey case, where it is said that the reasoning in Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 A. & E. 438, 453, 2 Hurl. & W. 464, 6 L. J. Exch. 266, 1 N. & P. 796, 33 E. C. L. 241, "is as valid in the case of a profession as of a trade, for whether, technically speaking, there be any goodwill attending a profession or not, the professional practice itself would probably sell for more with the restraining contract, if the restraint were unlimited in duration, than it would if the restraint were for the life of the promisee or covenantee only. If the complainant here wished to retire from his practice and sell it, he could probably sell it for more, if he could secure the purchaser from competition with the defendant forever, than he could if he could only secure him from such competition during his own life. So, if he wished to take in a partner, he could for the same reason make better terms with him." French v. Parker, 16 R. I. 219, 221, 14 Atl. 870, 27 Am. St. Rep. 733.

Rep. 560); not to deal in fancy goods in Cincinnati, Ohio (Thomas v. Miles, 3 Ohio St. 274) or in cabinet-ware in Buffalo, New York (Weller v. Hersee, 10 Hun (N. 60. As for example agreements by a miller not to carry on the same business within thirty miles of a city or town (Bowser v. Bliss, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 344, 43 Am. Dec. 93); of an apothecary not to set up business within twenty miles of a place (Hayward v. Young, 2 Chit. 407, 18 E. C. L. 709); of a butcher not to engage in the butcher business within eleven miles of a town (Eisel v. Hayes, 141 Ind. 41, 40 N. E. 119) or within five miles of the business sold (Elves v. Crofts, 10 C. B. 241, 14 Jur. 855, 19 L. J. C. P. 385, 70 E. C. L. 241); of a physician or surgeon not to practise within six miles of a town (Linn v. Sigsbee, 67 Ill. 75), ten miles (Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 36 Am. Rep. 64; Betts' Appeal, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 431), twelve miles (McClurg's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 51), fifteen miles (Miller v. Elliott, 1 Ind. 484, 50 Am. Dec. 475), or within twenty miles of the residence of the covenantee (Butler v. Burleson, 16 Vt. 176); of an attorney not to solicit business or practise law within twenty-one miles of a town (Dendy v. Henderson, 11 Exch. 194, 24 L. J. Exch. 324), or in London or within one hundred and fifty miles around (Bunn v. Guy, 4 East 190, 1 Smith K. B. 1, 7 Rev. Rep. 560); of a saddler not to carry on business within ten miles of a place (Jones v. Heavens, 4 Ch. D. 636, 25 Wkly. Rep. 460); of a tanner, within twenty miles of a place (Nobles v. Bates, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 307); not to sell liquors within one mile of a town (Harrison v. Lockhart, 25 Ind. 112); and not to trade as merchant within ten miles of a town (Gompers v. Rochester, 56 Pa. St. 194), act as surgeon or apothecary within seven miles (Sainter v. Ferguson, 7 C. B. 716, 13 Jur. 828, 18 L. J. C. P. 217, 62 E. C. L. 716), work at the blacksmith trade within four miles of a town (Stafford v. Shortreed, 62 Iowa 524, 17 N. W. 756), or engage in the iron casting business within sixty miles of a town (Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224).

61. As for example not to trade in agricultural implements in a certain town and will interfere with the business sold.⁶² The courts have also sustained an agreement not to run a stage on a specified road⁶³ and an agreement by a vendor of a milk route not to serve milk over the same route.⁶⁴ An agreement not to engage in a certain business in a certain town while another carries on the same business there is valid.⁶⁵

(5) RESTRAINT LIMITED AS TO BOTH TIME AND SPACE. Of course where the restraint is limited as to both time and space the agreement is valid,⁶⁶ as for example not to engage in the livery business in a certain city for the space of five years,⁶⁷ not to practise medicine in a certain town for four years,⁶⁸ or an agreement between one about to enter into a contract to furnish paving materials to a city for use on a certain street and another, whereby the latter is to pay the former a certain amount per cubic yard for material used in the street, on condition that the former will not enter into such contract nor sell any such material in that city for a certain period.⁶⁹

(d) The Modern Doctrine of Reasonableness of Restraint—(1) IN GENERAL. A doctrine has been introduced in some of the later cases, both English and American, which may be called the doctrine of the reasonableness of the restraint. This rejects entirely the fixed rules stated in the last sections and decides each case according to its particular circumstances. It makes the validity of the restraint depend upon the question whether it is such as to afford a fair and reasonable protection to the party in favor of whom it is imposed. If it is, it is upheld; but if it goes beyond this and imposes a restraint longer than is necessary for the protection of the party it is declared void.⁷⁰ This doctrine is founded vicinity (Hedge v. Lowe, 47 Iowa 137); not to practise as physician in a city of vicinity (Timmerman v. Dever, 52 Mich. 34, 17 N. W. 230, 50 Am. Rep. 240); and not to carry on a business thereafter "in the vicinity" of a city (Webster v. Buss, 61 N. H. 40, 60 Am. Rep. 317).

70. English cases supporting this doctrine.—In Maxim Nordenfelt Guns, etc., Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630, 62 L. J. Ch. 273, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 833, 41 Wkly. Rep. 604 [affirmed [1894] A. C. 535, 63 L. J. Ch. 908, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 489, 11 Reports 1], Nordenfelt, who was a maker and inventor of guns and ammunition, sold his business to a company for a very large sum and agreed that for twenty-five years he would cease to carry on the manufacture of guns, gun-carriages, gunpowder, or ammunition, or any business liable to compete with such business as the company was carrying on for the time being, retaining the right to deal in explosives other than gunpowder, in torpedoes or submarine boats, and in metal castings or forgings. After some years he entered into business with another company dealing with guns and ammunition, and plaintiffs sought an injunction to restrain him from so doing. The court of appeals held that a general restraint of trade was void, but that the sale of a business accompanied by an agreement by the seller to retire from the business is not a general restraint of trade, provided it is reasonable between the parties, and not injurious to the

on the idea that public policy requires that when a man has by his skill or by any other means obtained something which he wants to sell he should be at liberty to public. This restraint, it was held, was reasonable between the parties because Nordenfelt not only received a very large sum of money, but retained considerable scope for the exercise of his inventive and manufacturing skill, while the wide area over which the business extended necessitated a restraint co-extensive with that area for the protection of the plaintiffs. Nor could the agreement be said to be injurious to the public interest, since it transferred to an English company the making of guns and ammunition for foreign lands. On appeal the house of lords went further and demolished the old doctrine of general restraint, Lord Herschell saying: "Whether the cases in which a general covenant can now be supported are to be regarded as exceptions from the rule which I think was long recognized as established, or whether the rule itself is to be treated as inapplicable to the altered conditions which now prevail, is probably a matter of words rather than of substance. The latter is perhaps the sounder view. When once it is admitted that whether the covenant be general or particular the question of its validity is alike determined by the consideration whether it exceeds what is necessary for the protection of the covenantee, the distinction between general and particular restraints ceases to be a distinction in point of law." Maxim Nordenfelt Guns, etc., Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1894] A. C. 535, 548, 63 L. J. Ch. 908, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 489, 11 Reports 1. For other English cases holding that the question in each case is whether the restraint extends further than is necessary for the reasonable protection of the covenantee, and that if it does not the covenant will be enforced even though it is a general restraint and unlimited as to space, see Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorscheid, L. R. 9 Eq. 345, 39 L. J. Ch. 86, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 661, 18 Wkly. Rep. 572; Badische Anilin v. Schott, [1892] 3 Ch. 447, 61 L. J. Ch. 698, 67 L. T. Rep. N. S. 281; *Rousillon v. Rep. 86.

American cases supporting this doctrine.—There are a number of American cases repudiating the old doctrine and approving the doctrine of the reasonableness of the restraint, although in some of them the restraint was partial only and in others it was considered unreasonable as beyond what was necessary to the protection of the party.

Rep. 464, where defendant sold his match-manufacturing business with the good-will to a corporation then engaged in the same business, and covenanted with the purchaser and its assigns not to engage within ninety-nine years in the like business, except for the purchaser, in any of the United States or territories except Nevada and Montana. The covenant was held valid. This case was followed in Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 534, 18 N. E. 363, 1 L. R. A. 456, and the effect of its reasoning summed up as follows: "Under the authority of that case, it may be said that no contracts are void as being in general restraint of trade, where they operate simply to prevent a party from engaging or competing in the same business." In Watertown Thermometer Co. v. Pool, 51 Hun 157, 163, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 861, 20 N. Y. St. 592, the covenant embraced the entire United States, and it was held valid, the court saying: "The cases cited seem to sustain the doctrine that a restriction which is no greater than the interest of the vendee requires, and by giving which the vendor has obtained an increased price for what he sold, is valid, though it extended through the whole kingdom or country." This case was cited with approval by the court of appeals in Oakes v. Cattaraugus Water Co., 143 N. Y. 430, 38 N. E. 461, 26 L. R. A. 544. The same doctrine was enunciated in U. S. Cordage Co. v. William Wall's Sons' Rope Co., 90 Hun 429, 434, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 978, 70 N. Y. St. 602, where an agreement that a firm or company would not engage in the manufacture or sale of cordage within the limits of the United States except as an employee of the National Cordage Company was held to be valid, the court saying: "Since the Diamond Match Company Case it has been the law of the State that a covenant not to engage in business made by a vendor, in connection with a sale of his business and goodwill, is valid and enforceable." See also Wood v. Whitehead Bros. Co., 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 357, 80 Am. St. Rep. 730; Cummings v. Union Blue Stone Co., 164 N. Y. 401, 58 N. E. 525; Greenfield v. Gilman, 140 N. Y.

sell it in the most advantageous way in the market, and in order to enable him to do so it is necessary that he should be able to preclude himself from entering into competition with the purchaser; and therefore the same public policy which enables him to do that should not forbid him from alienating what he wants to alienate, but should permit him to enter into any stipulation, however restrictive it may be, provided such restriction in the judgment of the court is not unreasonable, having regard to the subject-matter of the contract.⁷¹ Hence a stipulation by a vendee of any trade, business, or profession that he will not exercise the same trade or business, so as to interfere with the value of the trade, business, or thing purchased, is reasonable and valid. In like manner a stipulation by the vendor of an article to be used in a business or trade in which he is himself engaged that it shall not be used so as to interfere with his said business or trade is also valid and binding under this doctrine.⁷²

(2) AGREEMENTS HELD VALID. Among the agreements, in addition to those already mentioned,⁷³ which have been sustained as imposing no greater restraint than necessary or reasonable are: An agreement on the sale of a magazine not to

E. 357, where the court said: "In the present practically unlimited field of human enterprise, there is no good reason for restricting the freedom to contract, or for fearing injury to the public from contracts which prevent a person from carrying on a particular business. Interference would only be justifiable when it was demonstrable that, in some way, the public interests were endangered. But contracts between parties, which have for their object the removal of a rival and competitor in a business, are not to be regarded as contracts in restraint of trade. They do not close the field of competition, except to the particular party to be affected. To say, at the present day, that such a contract as was made in this case was affected by a public interest and was a matter of public concern would be, in my opinion, unreasonable. Such a contract not only does not obstruct trade, but it may be for the advantage of the public as well as of the individual."

72. Mackinnon Pen Co. v. Fountain Ink Co., 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 442, and other cases above cited. In Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S. E. 735, 69 Am. St. Rep. 154, it is laid down that a distinction exists between that class of contracts binding one to desist from the practice of a learned profession, and those which bind one who has sold out a mercantile or other kind of business, and the good-will therewith connected, not to again engage in that business. In the former case there should be a reasonable limit as to time, so as to prevent the contract from operating with unnecessary harshness against the person who is to abstain from practising his profession at a time when his so doing could in no way benefit the other contracting party. In the latter class such limit is not essential to the validity of the contract, but the restraint may be indefinite.

of contracts in restraint of trade as between the parties is the sole test in those cases only where the public interests are not also involved. Although the contract may be fair and reasonable as between the parties, yet if it is so injurious to the public interest that public policy requires that it should not be enforced it will be held void.⁹⁷ Cases of this kind arise where the covenantor is exercising a public franchise or is engaged in a business impressed with a public trust,⁹⁸ as in the case of pooling contracts and other agreements or combinations between railroad companies or other common carriers to stifle competition and raise freight or passenger rates,⁹⁹ and under some circumstances of grants of exclusive rights or privileges by cities or villages,¹ by railroad companies and other common carriers by land or water,² and even by private individuals or purely private corpora-

1. Contract for maintenance of market.—Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344, 9 Am. Rep. 80, holding that a contract between the president and trustees of a village and a private citizen, under which the latter was to erect a market house for the village, the authorities undertaking as a compensation to him to confine the marketing of the citizens during market hours to the building and its vicinity, to appoint a proper officer for the enforcement of all ordinances relative to the market and the vending of market articles, and to control and rent the stalls for the benefit of the person erecting the building was void, as creating a monopoly.

City's grant of exclusive license to sell liquors.—In Jackson v. Bowman, 39 Miss. 671, it was held that a contract by which a city agreed, in consideration of the erection of a commodious hotel within the corporate limits, to grant to the builder the exclusive right to retail vinous and spirituous liquors in the corporate limits for five years at the lowest rate of license allowed by law, to renew the same to him and his assigns, to give to him the sum paid for such license for five years, and in case the city grant a license to another to give him five thousand dollars in aid of the erection of the hotel, was contrary to law and public policy, which forbids the grant of monopolies and exclusive privileges.

2. Contract between railroad and sleeping-car company.—Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 4 Woods (U. S.) 317, 11 Fed. 625, holding void a contract whereby a sleeping-car company was given the exclusive right to furnish sleeping-car accommodations on a certain line of railroad. But see Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 139 U. S. 79, 11 S. Ct. 490, 35 L. ed. 97, where it was held that a stipulation in a contract that a sleeping-car company should have the exclusive right for fifteen years to furnish drawing-room and sleeping-cars for a railroad company's use did not render the contract void as being in restraint of trade or against public policy, as such stipulation did not disable the sleeping-car company from furnishing cars to a rival railroad, and the law would imply from the terms of the contract that it must furnish the railroad company in question, not only adequate and safe cars, but sufficient in number for the use of the public traveling on the latter's road.

Contracts between railroad company and telegraph company.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., 65 Ga. 160, 38 Am. Rep. 781, it was held that a contract by a railroad company granting to a telegraph company the exclusive use and occupancy of its right of way for telegraph purposes was void as in restraint of trade and against public policy. See also Union Trust Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 8 N. M. 327, 43 Pac. 701; Baltimore & Ohio Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Fed. 319 (hold-

Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co.*, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 163, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 201 (holding that an agreement between a railroad company and a telegraph company for the construction of a line of telegraph, by which the railroad company granted the exclusive right of way and bound itself to transport and deliver wherever along the road materials were needed in such construction, operation, or repair, of the telegraph line, but not to deliver, except at regular stations, for any competing line, was illegal and void as to discriminations, but not as to the grant of an exclusive right to use of the right of way); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 407, 5 Am. L. Rec. 429 (holding that a contract between a telegraph company and a railway company, founded upon sufficient consideration, stipulating that the former should have the exclusive right to construct a line over the latter's right of way for twenty-five years, was not void as against public policy); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 7 Biss. (U. S.) 367, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,445.

Contract between railroad company and ferry company.—In Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 73 Mo. 389, 39 Am. Rep. 519, it was held that a contract between a ferry company and a railroad company, whereby the railroad company was to construct its depot on lands belonging to the ferry company and give the ferry company the transportation of all goods across the river, was not in restraint of trade.

Contract between railroad company and elevator company.—In Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 422, it was held that a contract between an elevator company and a railroad company by which the railroad company agreed that the elevator should have the handling of all through grain at a specified price for a period of fifteen years was not invalid as being in contravention of public policy, on the ground that it gave the elevator a monopoly of the handling of all the through grain transported over defendant's road.

Contract between canal company and coal company.—In Com. v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 43 Pa. St. 295, it was held that an agreement between a canal company and a coal company, granting to the coal company all the facilities of navigation which the canal would afford, not exceeding one half of its whole capacity, was not invalid as being a monopoly of that half to the exclusion of the public, as against other carriers of coal, where it did not appear that the public was injured, or that either company had thereby exercised any function that was exclusive of the public right.

St. 748, it was held that a contract between a railroad company and a hackman, by which the company granted an exclusive privilege to the hackman to come into its depot yards with his hacks for the purpose of soliciting business from persons arriving at the depot, was not against public policy.

Contracts between railroad company and shippers.—In Union Locomotive, etc., Co. v. Erie R. Co., 37 N. J. L. 23, it was held that a contract between a railroad company operating a railroad in New Jersey under acts of the legislature of that state and certain individuals, the effect of which was to give the latter the exclusive right of transporting certain kinds of freight over the railroad, was void from considerations of public policy. In Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co., 171 Pa. St. 284, 33 Atl. 239, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 89, 50 Am. St. Rep. 807, 29 L. R. A. 423, it was held that a contract by a railroad company with an iron company by which the former furnished funds to develop the latter and give it facilities for transportation, in consideration of which the iron company contracted to give it all its traffic, was not in restraint of trade, against public policy, or ultra vires, but that the further agreement that the coal company should give no aid to the construction of competitive lines would not be enforced, as it was against public policy.

3. Grant of exclusive privilege to pipe-line company.—In West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. 5. In Western Wooden-ware Assoc. v. Starkey, 84 Mich. 76, 83, 47 N. W. 604, 22 Am. St. Rep. 686, 11 L. R. A. 503, 32 Centr. L. J. 186, a firm in Michigan engaged in the wooden-ware manufacturing business sold out its business and agreed not to engage therein in that and neighboring states for five years, and not to allow its real estate whereon its factory was situated to be used for such business for the same period. The agreement was held void as contemplating the cessation of the business conducted by that firm in Michigan, to the injury of the citizens. The court said: "Here a large manufacturing business had been established, and presumably it gave employment to quite a number of people. By the contract these people are thrown out of employment, and deprived of a livelihood, and no other of the citizens of Michigan are called in to take their places. The business is no longer to be carried on here, but is removed out of the State. The parties are not only bound by the contract, if valid, not to manufacture here for a period of five years, but in seven other of the states of the great north-west, teeming with its millions of people. If the complainant could enforce this contract against Starkey, Ferris and Olmsted, and shut the doors of that shop, and prohibit their again opening them for five years in any of those states, they could as well make valid and binding contracts to shut the shop of every manufacturing institution in the State, and in the other seven states, and compel the parties now owning and operating them to remain out of business for a term of years, and hold the doors of these shops shut during such period." See also Wright v. Ryder, 36 Cal. 342, 95 Am. Dec. 186; Lanzit v. Sefton Mfg. Co., 184 Ill. 326, 56 N. E. 393, 75 Am. St. Rep. 171. Cas. No. 4,015, where it is said: "The right to make and vend, and the right to use, are completely severable; and, while a grant of the right to make and sell to others might be deemed to imply the right in the purchasers to use the thing purchased, a patentee may restrict the use. The patent as effectually secures to him a monopoly of the right to use as it does of the right to make. The patentee, or his assignee, may, therefore, give the exclusive right to make and sell for use within certain territory; and such a restriction would be entitled to enforcement. . . . The right of the patentee to confer upon others such qualified privilege, whether of making, of selling to others, or of using as he sees fit, whether within special limits or under limitations of quantity, or number, or restricted uses, does not seem deniable." See PATENTS. But this right is subject to the limitations of public policy. Thus where the patentees of instruments essential to the operation of telephone lines had licensed telephone companies to use their patents for the purpose of operating public telephone lines within a given district, but prohibited such companies from serving within such district any telegraph company, the court by mandamus compelled the extension of service to any one within the district demanding connection and paying established charges, upon the solid ground that a public telephone company is a common carrier, and as such subject to the regulations imposed on all corporations of a quasi-public character, among which was the duty of dealing equally with all, and discriminating against none, tendering equal pay for equal service; and that when a patentee authorizes the use of his invention by one charged with public duties and subject to regulation by law it is not competent by a restriction on the use to deprive the licensee of the power of rendering an equal service to all who apply and tender the compensation fixed by law or regulation for the same service to others. *Missouri v. (Jarvis v. Peck, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 118; Alcock v. Giberton, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 76). It is said that the court cannot compel the disclosure of these secret processes. In one sense that may be very true, but, as a step toward compelling the defendant to perform that part of its agreement, it certainly has the power to restrain him from disclosing those processes to anybody else and to punish him if he violates an injunction imposing that restraint. It may do this not only in performance of the contract by which he agreed not to disclose these secrets, but also, in the absence of that negative stipulation, by way of compelling him to perform the contract which he made to disclose those processes to the plaintiff. A. 283); a contract between an ice manufacturer and a brewer whereby the former agrees to sell the latter all the ice he needs, the brewer not to retail ice nor sell to retailers (Crystal Ice Mfg. Co. v. San Antonio Brewing Assoc., 8 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 27 S. W. 210); a contract to buy meat at a fixed price and for a time certain, in consideration of the seller's refraining from selling meat during such time at the buyer's place of business (Lightner v. Menzel, 35 Cal. 452); an agreement by a seller of goods with a purchaser not to sell a certain kind of goods to any one else in the same town (Keith v. Herschberg Optical Co., 48 Ark. 138, 2 S. W. 777; Roller v. Ott, 14 Kan. 609; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Houck, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 692; Watkins v. Morley, Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 723); a contract to sell a brand of cigars to no one in the state but defendant, and to give him the exclusive agency for such sale (Newell v. Meyendorff, 9 Mont. 254, 23 Pac. 333, 18 Am. St. Rep. 738, 8 L. R. A. 440); an agreement between two traders in live stock that the first will sell the other all his commodities, and that the second will buy from the first alone (New York Live-Stock Assoc. v. Levy, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 32); and an agreement that defendant shall for a certain number of years consign exclusively to plaintiffs all the blankets of his manufacture (Hadden v. Dimick, 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 196).

Agreements held illegal.—The following agreements, however, have been held invalid: An agreement between the lessor and lessee of a coal mine that the lessee should not give or accept any order for goods and merchandise on any other store than the lessor's (Crawford v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 190, 98 Am. Dec. 103); an agreement between the president and trustees of a village and a private citizen, under which the latter was to erect a market house for the village, the authorities undertaking, as a compensation to him, to confine the marketing of the citizens during market hours to the building and its vicinity, to appoint a proper officer for the enforcement of all ordinances relative to the market and the vending of market articles, and to control and rent the stalls for the benefit of the person erecting the building (Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344, 9 Am. Rep. 80); an agreement between partners to keep their partnership a secret and maintain a fictitious competition for the purpose of deceiving the public (Fairbank v. Leary, 40 Wis. 637); a contract by which the owners of several water rights in a stream agreed with each other, under a penalty of ten thousand dollars liquidated damages, not to sell to certain parties, or any other persons who might endeavor to obtain said water rights, and not to make any compromise with such parties, except by the written consent of the others (Ford v. Gregson, 7 Mont. 89, 14 Pac. 659); and a lease conditioned that the demised premises should only be used as a beer saloon, and that no beer except that of the lessor's firm should be sold there, but containing no promise on the part of the lessor to furnish beer (Muller v. Bohringer, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 144).

Co. v. Wright*, 6 Cal. 258, 65 Am. Dec. 511; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 18 N. E. 363, 18 N. Y. St. 520, 1 L. R. A. 456; Dunlap v. Gregory, 10 N. Y. 241, 61 Am. Rep. 803.

24. An express covenant in a conveyance that no trading or mercantile business shall be carried on on the premises is not contrary to public policy, and may be enforced by injunction by the vendor or his assignees of the dominant estate against a subpurchaser of the servient estate with notice. Morris v. Tuscaloosa Mfg. Co., 83 Ala. 565, 3 So. 689. It has been so held for example of an agreement not to permit a warehouse or place of shipping or receiving goods upon the conveyed premises (Robbins v. Webb, 68 Ala. 393); an agreement that a lot sold shall not be used for a tavern (Holmes v. Martin, 10 Ga. 503) or hotel (Mollyneaux v. Wittenberg, 39 Nebr. 547, 58 N. W. 205); an agreement that intoxicating liquors shall not be sold on the land (Hatcher v. Andrews, 5 Bush (Ky.) 561; Watrous v. Allen, 57 Mich. 362, 24 N. W. 104, 58 Am. Rep. 363) or that they shall not be sold in less quantities than five gallons or half a barrel (Sutton v. Head, 86 Ky. 156, 5 S. W. 410, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 453; 9 Am. St. Rep. 274; Laubenheimer v. Mann, 17 Wis. 542); and an agreement by the vendor in consideration of the sale of a lot not to build a flat in the immediate neighborhood (Lewis v. Gollner, 129 N. Y. 227, 29 N. E. 81, 41 N. Y. St. 173, 26 Am. St. Rep. 516 [reversing 14 N. Y. Suppl. 362, 37 N. Y. St. 613]). But see to the contrary Brewer v. Marshall, 19 N. J. Eq. 537, 97 Am. Dec. 679, holding void as in restraint of trade a covenant by the vendor of marl land that neither he nor his assigns will sell marl from the ad-

ments of similar character have been sustained by the courts as legal and binding obligations.²⁵

(I) Consideration For Contract. A contract in restraint of trade must like every other contract be supported by a valuable consideration.²⁶ It was formerly held that the restraint must be supported by an adequate consideration, that is, a consideration equivalent in value to the restraint imposed; but this doctrine has been repudiated and it is now held that as in the case of other contracts the adequacy of the consideration is a matter to be determined by the parties, and that it cannot be inquired into by the courts.²⁷

(j) Proof. Valid agreements in restraint of trade must be established by clear and satisfactory proof in order to justify a court in restraining their breach by injunction. There must be no doubt or uncertainty in regard to their terms or the consideration upon which they are founded.²⁸

(k) Statutory Provisions. In California a statute provides that every contract by which one is restrained from exercising a business or calling is void to that extent, except that one who has sold the good-will of a business may agree not to carry on a similar business within a specified county or town, so long as the buyer or any one deriving title to the good-will from him carries on the busijoining land. And see Tardy v. Creasy, 81 Va. 553, 59 Am. Rep. 676.

25. For example the following have stood the test: An agreement between a board of trade and a person who represents himself as having control over certain industries which he is about to establish in another town, whereby such person agrees to withdraw from that deal, and use his influence to have those industries established in the town represented by the board (Lord v. Board of Trade, 163 Ill. 45, 45 N. E. 205); an agreement that neither of two persons shall thereafter publish a counterfeit detector (Presbury v. Fisher, 18 Mo. 50); an agreement to pay commissions on all sales to customers introduced by another (Boyden v. Baldwin, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 103, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 478, 71 N. Y. St. 430); a contract by a manufacturer that a storekeeper shall have the trade of his workmen, in consideration of the storekeeper paying the manufacturer a percentage on the sales (George v. East Tennessee Coal Co., 15 Lea (Tenn.) 455, 54 Am. Rep. 425); a contract by a railroad company to patronize a hotel in consideration of its being built at an embryo town, and to dissuade others from building hotels there (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Robards, 60 Tex. 545, 48 Am. Dec. 268); an agreement by a company which carries on the business of warehouseman as an adjunct to its main business of compressing cotton, by which it charges an increased rate for cotton which is removed uncompressed (Seeligson v. Taylor Compress Co., 56 Tex. 219); an agreement by one employed to sell and operate another's machine that if the former shall at any time make any improvement on such machine it shall be for the exclusive use of the latter (Bonsack Mach. Co. v. Hulse, 65 Fed. 864, 13 C. C. A. 180); an agreement between proprietors of parks that neither shall pay any bonus to parties enjoying his park (Koehler v. Feuerbacher, 2 Mo. App. 11); and an agreement signed by merchants of a town, obligating themselves to close their places of business at six-thirty o'clock from May 15 until September 1 (Stovall v. McCutchen, 107 Ky. 577, 54 S. W. 969, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1317, 47 L. R. A. 287).

Agreements not to sell stock in corporation.—An agreement between several stockholders of a corporation not to sell their stock nor to give powers to vote is in restraint of trade and against public policy. Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 641; White v. Ryan, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 170. But public policy does not preclude a majority of the stockholders of a corporation from agreeing to unite in efforts to sell their stock to a proposed purchaser, and that neither one will sell without the other. Havemeyer v. Havemeyer, 86 N. Y. 618 [affirming 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 506]. And an agreement that stock issued to joint owners of an invention in consideration for its transfer to the corporation shall be held jointly and be inalienable for ten years without their joint consent is not an agreement against public policy and therefore void. Hey v. Dolphin, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 230, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 627, 71 N. Y. St. 794. See CORPORATIONS.

ness, and that in anticipation of dissolution of a partnership a partner may agree not to carry on a similar business in the town or city where the partnership was located.²⁹

(VIII) OTHER AGREEMENTS INJURING PERSONAL RIGHTS. Any agreement which would deprive a person completely of his liberty would be void as against public policy,³⁰ as for example an indefinite contract of service amounting to a form of servitude.³¹ But one may legally bind himself to work for another for a term of years.³² And one may agree not to do what he has a legal right to do, even though the promise may be restrictive of his personal rights.³³

(IX) AGREEMENTS AFFECTING DUTIES TOWARD THIRD PERSONS—(A) In General. An agreement may be contrary to public policy and illegal because it affects a duty which one person owes to another.³⁴ As we have seen, agreements to defraud, to commit any other civil wrong against third persons, or to commit a breach of trust are illegal.³⁵ It is said that agreements which tend to discourage performance of moral duties toward a third person are void as against public policy, as for example a covenant by a landowner to let all his cultivated land lie waste or a clause in a charter-party prohibiting deviation even to save life.³⁶

(B) Agreements Affecting Duties of Parents. A class of agreements of this character are those in which a father surrenders the custody of his infant child. Such agreements are not binding if they are contrary to the child's interests, for a parent "cannot bind himself conclusively by contract to exercise, in all events, in a particular way, rights which the law gives him for the benefit of his children, and not for his own."³⁷ Such agreements, however, may be valid and Gobey*, 119 Cal. 599, 51 Pac. 962, holding that a stipulation in a contract by a divorced husband to restore the daughter to the mother, nolens volens, when she should be eighteen years old, was as much a contract to infringe her personal liberty as if the age fixed had been thirty-six or fifty-four years and was unlawful.

Restriction on right to borrow money.—In Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Champlin, 11 Okla. 184, 65 Pac. 836, 55 L. R. A. 109, a stipulation in a note forbidding the maker from discharging his obligation by borrowing money from any one except the payee was held contrary to public policy and void. But see Sheneberger v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 114 Iowa 578, 87 N. W. 493, 55 L. R. A. 269, where a somewhat similar provision was sustained.

31. Parsons v. Trask, 7 Gray (Mass.) 473, 66 Am. Dec. 502. See Pitts v. Allen, 72 Ga. 69. Pollock says: "It is clear law that a contract to serve in a particular business for an indefinite time, or even for life, is not void as in restraint of trade or on any other ground of public policy. It would not be competent to the parties, however, to attach servile incidents to the contract, such as unlimited rights of personal control and correction, or over the servant's property. By the French law indefinite contracts of service are not allowed." Pollock Contr. 316.

Rep. 431, 616, where it was held that an agreement before marriage between husband and wife of different religions that boys should be educated in the religion of their father and girls in the religion of their mother could not be enforced. See also Hussey v. Whiting, 145 Ind. 580, 44 N. E. 639, 57 Am. St. Rep. 220. In a recent case in one of the nisi prius courts of Pennsylvania it is held that a contract with an institution called a "Children's Home Society," by which a mother surrendered her child to the society, consenting that it might binding if they are clearly for the benefit and for the best interests of the child.³⁸

(c) Agreements of Quasi-Public Corporations. As we have seen, agreements by railroad companies, water and gas companies, and other quasi-public corporations not to perform duties which they owe to the public, or which prevent them from performing such duties, are contrary to public policy and void.³⁹

(d) Agreements Exempting From Liability For Negligence. Other agreements falling within this class are agreements by which it is sought to exempt one from liability for negligence. By the weight of authority, a master cannot by agreement with his servant exempt himself from liability for injuries to the servant caused by his negligence or by the negligence of those who, although engaged in the same service, are superior in authority and control.⁴⁰ But an

be adopted without notice to her by any person to whom the society might give it, and agreeing that she would not visit or seek to find it, was void as being against public policy, on the ground that it tended to encourage illegitimacy. In re Sleep, 6 Pa. Dist. 256.

38. In Enders v. Enders, 164 Pa. St. 266, 30 Atl. 129, 44 Am. St. Rep. 598, 27 L. R. A. 56, an agreement by a grandfather to pay his daughter twenty thousand dollars and her son ten thousand dollars, when he should come of age if the daughter would permit the boy to live with and be educated by him, she to see him whenever she should desire, was held not against public policy. The court said that the authorities establish that the contract of a parent, by which he bargains away for a consideration the custody of his child to a stranger, he attempting to relieve himself from all paternal obligation and place the burden on another, who is to shoulder it, without natural affection or moral obligation to prompt to the performance of parental duty, but only because of a bargain, is void as against public policy, as such a contract would be the mere sale of the child for money. But it was clearly of the opinion that the tendency of such contracts between grandparents of good character and ample estate and parents in reduced circumstances, where parental solicitude and affection are not to be extinguished, and where the welfare of the child is intended to be promoted, is neither to the injury of the public nor contrary to good morals. In Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370, and Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beav. 540, 17 Eng. Ch. 540, the contract of the parents was decided not to be against public policy, although made with strangers to the blood, because of the special facts, and on the ground that the contract was for the welfare of the child. And in Neal v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. St. 421, where a contract was made by the father, who was intemperate, relinquishing the custody of his two boys, respectively two and six years of age, to a childless couple, relatives of his, until the children should become of age, it was held that if the contract had been proven there was sufficient consideration to support and enforce it. In some cases the agreement is with the railroad company that if the employee accepts benefits under the policy it will release the railroad; in others it is with the insurance company and makes the release of the railroad a requisite to the obtaining of the insurance. In Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co., 71 Fed. 931, Ricks, J., not only held such an agreement binding, but also held that the statute of Ohio expressly declaring such agreements illegal and void was unconstitutional. This ruling has been criticized in a leading law review; and commenting in another issue on the decision in Vickers v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Fed. 139, the writer says that in these decisions there is a tendency to get the law into this condition: "Where a man ships goods over a railroad and accepts from the railway company a bill of lading in which the company endeavors to exonerate itself from the consequences of its own negligence, the clause by which the company endeavors to exonerate itself is void; but where a railroad company assumes the bailment of human lives and is negligent in taking proper care of them—and no matter how gross its negligence may be—it may contract that if it provides a hospital, kept up chiefly by the funds of the very men whose lives are in its charge, it may kill and maim them with impunity." 31 Am. L. Rev. 460. These federal decisions are those of district judges. But in Miller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 65 Fed. 305, the circuit court decided to the contrary. In the application for membership in the relief department, and in the contracts of insurance, a clause was inserted providing that in consideration of the payments by the company the acceptance of benefits by a member should operate as a release of all claims for damages against the company. The plaintiff, who was a member of the relief department, received injuries in consequence of the negligence of the defendant railway company and thereafter accepted benefits as a member of the relief department. It was nevertheless held that his right of action against the company was not barred by the acceptance of such benefits. On appeal to the federal court of appeals the decision was affirmed, Caldwell, J., saying: "Such contracts, in so far as they attempt to release a railroad company from liability for injuries inflicted on its employees through its negligence, are without sufficient consideration, against public policy, and void, and must ultimately be so declared by all courts." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 76 Fed. 439, 443, 22 C. C. A. 264.

negligence of its servants,⁴² although it may exempt itself from losses or injuries occurring from other causes than negligence, as from accident, for which it would be liable as an insurer.⁴³ It is settled on high authority that common carriers of goods may insure themselves by a contract with a third person against losses caused by the negligence of their servants or agents,⁴⁴ and following this ruling it has been held in New Jersey that a contract to indemnify a common carrier of passengers against losses occurring from injuries to passengers carried by it is not invalid as against public policy because it covers losses resulting from its negligence or the negligence of its servants.⁴⁵ Some of the courts also hold that a telegraph company cannot stipulate for exemption from liability for negligence in sending messages.⁴⁶ A provision in a lease of land from a railroad near its right of way that the lessor shall not be responsible for any damage caused by fire, whether from railroad engines, from the buildings of the lessor, or by fires caused from any other means, but the risk and damage from whatever source shall be alone sustained by the lessee, is not illegal.⁴⁷

45. Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Guarantors Liability Indemnity Co., 60 N. J. L. 246, 37 Atl. 609, 44 L. R. A. 213. A similar decision had been previously made in Maryland (American Casualty Ins. Co.'s Case, 82 Md. 535, 578, 34 Atl. 778, 38 L. R. A. 97), the court saying: "Unless it be assumed as a postulate that the mere possession of an indemnity will of itself necessarily and invariably produce negligence, it does not logically follow that such a policy or indemnity is even incidentally or indirectly repugnant to public policy. The indemnity in no way affects the liability of the carrier to the person injured. The utmost that it does, precisely as in the case of a carrier of goods is to afford him a fund out of which he may be reimbursed." The only other case in the books in which this question has been raised is an English one (Delanoy v. Robson, 5 Taunt. 605, 606, 1 E. C. L. 309) where the reporter queries as to whether an insurance against damages that a shipowner might be liable to pay in consequence of his ship running down another be not illegal; and it is said per curiam: "It would be an illegal insurance to insure against what might be the consequence of the wrongful acts of the assured."

C. Effect of Illegality—1. IN GENERAL. No principle of law is better settled than that a party to an illegal contract cannot come into a court of law and ask to have his illegal objects carried out; nor can he set up a case in which he must necessarily disclose an illegal purpose as the ground-work of his claim. The rule is expressed in the maxims, Ex dolo malo non oritur actio, and In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. The law in short will not aid either party to an illegal agreement; it leaves the parties where it finds them.⁴⁹ Therefore neither

The law permits a man to dispose of his own property at his pleasure, and no good reason can be assigned why he may not make a legal agreement to dispose of his property to a particular individual, or for a particular purpose, as well by will as by conveyance, to be made at some specified future period, or upon the happening of some future event. It may be unwise for a man in this way to embarrass himself as to the final disposition of his property, but he is the disposer, by law, of his own fortune, and the sole and best judge as to the time and manner of disposing it."

Submission to arbitration.—A claim arising out of an illegal transaction is not a legitimate subject-matter for submission to arbitrators, and an award founded thereon is a mere nullity. Benton v. Singleton, 114 Ga. 548, 40 S. E. 811. See ARBITRATION AND AWARD, 3 Cyc. 595.

Retention of benefits.—There are cases to the effect that so long as a party retains the benefit of an agreement he will not be allowed to avail himself of its illegality. Rowlan v. Adams, Sm. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 45; Manchester, etc., R. Co. v. Concord R. Co., 66 N. H. 100, 20 Atl. 383, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, rule refusing relief to either party to an illegal contract, where the contract is executed, is not to give validity to the transaction, but to deprive the parties of all right to have either enforcement of, or relief from, the illegal agreement.⁵⁰ While it may not always seem an honorable thing to do, yet a party to an illegal agreement is permitted to set up the illegality as a defense even though it may be alleging his own turpitude.⁵¹ Money paid under an agreement which is executed, whether as the consideration or in performance of the promise, cannot be recovered back, where the parties are in pari delicto.⁵² And goods delivered

Turner, 9 Tex. 385, 60 Am. Dec. 167. But these cases are clearly opposed to the general rule stated in the text, and contrary to the overwhelming weight of authority. See cases cited supra, this note.

Payment into court.—Where a suit is on an illegal contract, the payment of money into court gives the contract no validity. Scribner v. Hollis, 48 N. H. 30.

50. See cases cited in the preceding note. In the leading case of Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 341, 343, Lord Mansfield stated the ground on which courts refuse relief as follows: "The objection, that a contract is immoral or illegal as between plaintiff and defendant, sounds at all times very ill in the mouth of the defendant. It is not for his sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded in general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice, as between him and the plaintiff, by accident, if I may so say. The principle of public policy is this; ex dolo malo non oritur actio. No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act. If, from the plaintiff's own stating or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or the transgression of a positive law, there the court says he has no right to be assisted."

Illustration.—A striking illustration of the principle that the law will leave the guilty parties where it finds them is found in Jameson v. Carpenter, 68 N. H. 62, 63, 36 Atl. 554, where a person who owed another twenty dollars for services rendered paid him the money on Sunday, where the payment of the debt on Sunday was illegal under the statute of the state. In an action by the employee for the twenty dollars it was held that there could be no recovery, the court saying: "The contract of payment was fully executed before the parties appealed to the law by this action; and the law will leave them in this situation. It will no more aid the plaintiff in recovering the debt by setting aside his discharge, than it will aid the defendant in recovering back his money by setting aside his act in transferring it to the plaintiff as a payment." See also Cohn v. Heimbauch, 86 Wis. 176, 56 N. W. 638.

In equity the effect of illegality is the same as in a court of law. "A contract or instrument which fails in a Court of Law by reason of its illegality, can, nevertheless, be enforced in equity, because money has been paid and received in respect of that contract. Equitable terms can be imposed on a Plaintiff seeking to set aside an illegal contract as the price of the relief he asks; but as to any claims sought to be actively enforced on the footing of an illegal contract, the defense of illegality is as available in a Court of Equity as it is in a Court of Law." In re Cork, etc., R. Co., L. R. 4 Ch. 748, 762, 39 L. J. Ch. 277, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735, 18 Wkly. Rep. 26. And see the other cases cited in the preceding note.

Membership in unlawful association.—A court of equity will not lend its aid to a member of an unlawful association to enable him to retain his membership therein, and to restrain the association from suspending or expelling him therefrom for a violation of its illegal rules and by-laws. Greer v. Payne, 4 Kan. App. 153, 46 Pac. 190. And see CORPORATIONS.

or lands conveyed under an illegal agreement are subject to the same rule.⁵³ Courts will not even with the consent of the parties enforce an illegal contract.⁵⁴ And it would seem to follow that an illegal agreement cannot be rendered legal by ratification.⁵⁵ An agreement void as against public policy cannot be rendered valid by invoking the doctrine of estoppel.⁵⁶

2. EXCEPTIONS TO THE GENERAL RULE — a. In General. There are certain exceptions to the rule stated in the preceding section. These exceptions may be grouped under five heads, viz.: (1) Where public policy requires the intervention of the court; (2) where the parties are not in pari delicto; (3) where the law which makes the agreement unlawful was intended for the special protection of the party seeking relief; (4) where the illegal purpose has not been consummated; and (5) where the party complaining can exhibit his case without relying upon the illegal transaction.⁵⁷

b. Where Public Policy Requires Intervention of Court. Although the parties are in pari delicto, yet the court may interfere and grant relief at the suit of one of them where public policy requires its intervention, even though the result may be that a benefit will be derived by a plaintiff who is in equal guilt with the defendant. But here the guilt of the parties is not considered as equal to the higher right of the public; and the guilty party to whom the relief is granted is simply the instrument by which the public is served.⁵⁸ But "courts are and should be cautious in affording relief to a fraudulent debtor or other

Illustrations.—Thus it has been held that a grantor who has executed a deed pursuant to a lottery transaction may, in ejectment brought by him, set up the illegality of the conveyance, notwithstanding he is in pari delicto, as the statute for the suppression of lotteries, which declares such a conveyance void, can only be enforced by permitting the grantor to claim the invalidity of the transfer and obtain an annulment of the conveyance. Wooden v. Shotwell, 24 N. J. L. 789. And it was held that since public policy demanded that contracts founded on Confederate treasury notes be discouraged and de-violator of the law under this exception, and should act only where it is evident that some greater public good can be subserved by action than by inaction." ⁵⁹

c. Where Parties Are Not In Pari Delicto. Where the parties to a contract against public policy or otherwise illegal are not in pari delicto, or equally guilty, which they may not be, and where public policy is considered as advanced by allowing either, or at least the more excusable of the two, to sue for relief against the transaction, relief is given to him. ⁶⁰ The cases of this character are generally where the party asking to be relieved from the effect of an illegal agreement was induced to enter into the same by means of fraud. Here he is not regarded as being in pari delicto with the other party, and the court may relieve him. ⁶¹ The same is held where the complaining party has entered into clared void, parties to such agreements would be relieved therefrom, although they were in pari delicto. Hale v. Sharp, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 275.

the illegal contract through the duress or undue influence of the other.⁶² If one party is but an instrument in the hands of the other, then they are not in pari delicto. If the mind of one of the participants in the transaction exercises an undue influence over that of the other, whether by imposition or threat upon the one side and confidence or weakness upon the other, equity will grant relief to the latter. Even if the party had sufficient capacity to contract, yet if, through trusting confidence, the other has led him into the illegal act, such relief will not be refused.⁶³ Where money or property is exacted by a public officer by color of his office, the parties are not in pari delicto, but the one from whom it is exacted may maintain an action to recover the same.⁶⁴ In all such cases the action, it may be said, is not based on the agreement, but on the promise created by law to repay money of the plaintiff improperly obtained.⁶⁵

d. Where One Party Is Protected by the Law. The complaining party is especially protected by the law where the agreement is not illegal per se, but is merely prohibited, and the prohibition was intended for his protection, and in such case, not being in pari delicto, he is entitled to relief.⁶⁶ The fact that the

It was held that as the grantor had been induced to enter into the agreement by the fraud of the grantee, he was entitled to relief. Reynell v. Sprye, 1 De G. M. & G. 660, 21 L. J. Ch. 633, 50 Eng. Ch. 510. So where a debtor offered his creditors a composition of five shillings on the pound, and one of the creditors refused to assent unless the debtor would pay him £50 additional in fraud of the other creditors, and the debtor paid him the money and he assented to the composition agreement, it was held that the debtor could recover the money. The parties were regarded as not in equal guilt, because the one had the power to dictate and the other no alternative but to submit. Atkinson v. Denby, 6 H. & N. 778. So where a husband falsely represented to his wife that she was liable for certain debts, and that the creditors would take her property, and influenced by this, and intending to defraud such creditors, she transferred her property to him, it was held that the deed would be set aside. *Boyd v. Effect of imposing penalty.—Where a statute commands certain parties to do, or prohibits them from doing, certain acts, and prescribes the penalty for their violation of its commands, courts may not inflict other penalties for its violation upon other parties not named in the law by the avoidance of their contracts. Hanover Nat. Bank v. Burlingame First Nat. Bank, 109 Fed. 421, 426, 48 C. C. A. 482, where the court said: "Where a statute imposes a penalty on an officer for solemnizing a marriage under certain circumstances, but does not declare the marriage void, it is valid, but the penalty attaches to the officer who performed the prohibited ceremony. Milford v. Worcester, 7 Mass. 48. Section 5136 of the Revised Statutes impliedly forbids a national bank to loan money upon real-estate security. But a mortgage upon real estate given to a bank to secure a contemporaneous loan or future advances is valid between the parties, and may be enforced. Genesee Bank v. Whitney, 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443; St. Louis Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188. Section 5201 expressly prohibits a loan by a national bank upon a pledge of its own shares. But such a pledge was enforced in Xenia First Nat. Bank v. Stewart, 107 U. S. 676, 2 S. Ct. 778, 27 L. ed. 592. Section 5200 forbids any bank to loan to one person or firm an amount in excess of one tenth of its actually paid capital stock. But it is no defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned by a bank that the amount of the loan exceeded the limit prescribed by this section. Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Iowa 546; O'Hare v. Titusville Second Nat. Bank, 77 Pa. St. 96; Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 640, 24 L. ed. 648. Section 5202 provides that no national bank shall 'be indebted or in any way liable to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock . . . paid in . . . except on' circulation, deposits, special funds, or declared dividends. But it is no defense to an action for a debt of the bank that its indebtedness exceeded the limitation fixed by this provision of the banking act. Weber v. Spokane Nat. Bank, 64 Fed. 208, 12 C. C. A. 93." The court also cited Westheimer v. Weisman, 60 Kan. 753, 57 Pac. 969; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119; Speer v. Kearney County, 88 Fed. 749, 33 C. C. A. 101; *Rex v. 71. Where banks or other corporations are prohibited under penalties from issuing bills deposit payable at a future day;⁷² statutes prohibiting contracts or other dealings between a corporation and its directors or other officers;⁷³ statutes prohibiting or regulating the loaning of public funds;⁷⁴ and statutes for the protection of laborers.⁷⁵ And where a statute expressly authorizes one of the parties to an illegal agreement to sue, the right is of course clear; as in the case of statutes permitting the recovery of money lost at certain kinds of play or the like.⁷⁶ Only the party whom the law was designed to protect can take advantage of it.⁷⁷

e. Where Illegal Purpose Is Not Consummated. By the weight of authority, where money has been paid in consideration of an executory contract or purpose which is illegal, the party who has paid it may repudiate the agreement at any time before it is executed, and reclaim the money, for there is a locus pœnitentiæ. And on the same principle goods that have been delivered under an illegal agreement or for an illegal purpose may be reclaimed and recovered back so long as the agreement or purpose remains unexecuted.⁷⁸ Where a person has paid money or other securities, but no penalty is imposed on persons who receive them, it is held that the law creating the illegality is to protect the public against the prohibited securities, that the corporation issuing them is the only offender, and that persons who receive them may recover the money paid for them. Oneida Bank v. Ontario Bank, 21 N. Y. 490; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 349, 20 L. ed. 453. See, generally, BANKS AND BANKING; CORPORATIONS.

72. A person who has deposited money in a bank repayable at a future day, in violation of a statute, may recover back the deposit, for to decide otherwise would be to reward the offender (the bank) for an offense which the statute was intended to prevent. Atlas Bank v. Nahant Bank, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 581; White v. Franklin Bank, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 181. See Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 162, 67 Am. Dec. 132.

73. An insurance company has been permitted to recover a loan made to one of its officers, although a statute provided that no member of a committee or officer of a domestic insurance company charged with the duty of investing its funds should borrow the same, on the ground that the statute was intended to protect the company and policyholders from the dishonesty or self-interest of the officers. Bowditch v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 141 Mass. 292, 4 N. E. 798, 55 Am. Rep. 474. So where the president of a savings bank induced the bank to loan money and take as security a mortgage on land, in order that a mortgage belonging to him might be paid, it was held that the mortgagor could not, in defense to an action by the bank to foreclose, claim that its mortgage was invalid under a statute prohibiting any officer of a savings corporation from directly or indirectly borrowing its funds, as such statute was for the protection of the bank and its depositors. San Diego County Sav. Bank v. Burns, 104 Cal. 473, 38 Pac. 102. See CORPORATIONS.

74. Where a statute prohibited the loaning of public funds, except on mortgage on unencumbered lands, it was held that one who borrowed such funds and gave a mortgage on encumbered lands was liable on his contract. Scotten v. State, 51 Ind. 52; Dem-

the agreement is not completely executed.⁸² It has been said that a better test than whether or not the illegal purpose has been wholly or partially carried out is the actual effect of the retention of the money, and it is pointed out that if money were paid to induce one to commit a crime, to allow its recovery before the crime is committed would tend to induce the recipient of the money to commit the crime and thereby insure the retention of the money.⁸³

f. Where Party Complaining Can Establish Case Without Relying Upon Illegal Transaction. An agreement will be enforced, even if it is incidentally or indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, provided it is supported by an independent consideration, or if the plaintiff will not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case.⁸⁴ Thus it has been held that a vendor could enforce his lien, although he conveyed the land to the purchaser to enable him to execute an illegal contract for the manufacture of iron for the Confederate government;⁸⁵ that one could recover for coal ordered and delivered, although prior to the order he had given an option prohibited by statute to buy not exceeding a certain quantity in the future;⁸⁶ that it was no defense to an action for goods sold and delivered that plaintiff was a member of an illegal trust or combination to interfere with the freedom of trade and commerce, since the illegality of the combination was collateral to the contract of sale, and could not taint it with illegality or make it contrary to public policy;⁸⁷ that the want of a license to peddle did not bar a peddler from recovering against an innkeeper for the value of goods lost while in the keeping of the innkeeper, although the goods were intended for sale without license;⁸⁸ and that the rule that no particeps criminis can maintain an action founded on an illegal or immoral contract does not prohibit the vendor of land, where the sale is illegal and the conveyance void, from recovering the land, as he recovers it by virtue of his prior untainted legal title, against which the defendant cannot set up a title void by law.⁸⁹

g. Person in Possession of Profits of Illegal Transaction—(1) IN GENERAL. There are a number of decisions to the effect that after an illegal agreement has been fully executed, a party in possession of the gains and profits resulting from the illegal traffic or transaction will not be permitted to interpose the objection that the business which produced the fund was in violation of law, in order to defeat a recovery by one who is entitled to the whole or a part of such gains and profits.⁹⁰

(II) AGENTS AND PARTNERS IN ILLEGAL ENTERPRISES. It results from this doctrine that if money has been actually paid to an agent or to a partner, the illegality of the transaction of which the money was the fruit, or the fact that the firm venture from which the profits have arisen was an illegal one, does not affect

Other illustrations.—In Martin v. Hodge, 47 Ark. 378, 1 S. W. 694, 58 Am. Rep. 763, the owner of horses determined to dispose of them by a lottery, which was illegal, and sold tickets for the drawing. At the drawing it was supposed that A held the lucky tickets, and hearing his name called he went off, took possession of the horses, and drove them home; but it was afterward discovered that another person had won them. The owner thereupon brought suit to recover the horses. It was held that he could recover. As the taking was wrongful and he had never consented to it, and as it was not necessary for him to introduce any evidence in respect to the lottery to establish his right to the horses, his right to recover was not dependent on the illegal transaction. But see Funk v. Gallivan, 49 Conn. 124, 44 Am. Rep. 210. In Roselle v. Beckemeir, 134 Mo. 380, 35 S. W. 1132, an action was brought against a bank for the proceeds of a draft, in which an interplea was filed, and it appeared that the interpleader and several other holders of lottery tickets agreed to hold them jointly, and divide their winnings equally; that the interpleader, holder of a successful ticket, forwarded it with other successful tickets turned over to him to the lottery company, and received a single draft, payable to himself, for all the money won; that the bank accepted it for collection only, agreeing with the interpleader and another holder to pay the proceeds in specified portions to themselves and one other ticket-holder. It was held that the agreement with the bank was valid, although the transaction in which the draft was obtained was illegal, and that the bank was liable to the interpleader for the part of the proceeds assigned by it to him. And see Roselle v. McAuliffe, (Mo. 1896) 35 S. W. 1135. In Bowery Bank v. Gerety, 152 N. Y. 411, 47 N. E. 793, a bank made a loan to a person, who at the time held the office of sheriff, upon his note, indorsed for his accommodation and at his request by three persons, at whose request and for whose protection, he also assigned to the bank certain fees coming to him as sheriff. On his failure to pay the note the bank, at the indorsers' request, endeavored to collect such fees, but the assignment was held void as against public policy. The bank then sued the indorsers. It was held that they were not discharged by reason of the illegality of the assignment of the fees. In Allebach v. Godshalk, 116 Pa. St. 329, 9 Atl. 444, plaintiff agreed with several parties to convey his land to them, and to execute deeds therefor in accordance with the various portions which should fall to each from a lottery held to determine their shares, and deeds for the several lots were executed but never delivered. In an action by plaintiff against one of the purchasers to recover a lot, it was held that since plaintiff's claim rested upon an untainted legal title, unaffected by the collateral illegal contract, he was entitled to recover.

the right of the principal or partner to recover the money from the agent or copartner in whose hands it is.⁹¹ The ground taken is that, although the law would not have assisted the principal or partnership by enforcing the recovery of it from the party by whom it was paid, because the law will not aid the completion of an illegal contract, yet when that contract is at an end the agent or partner whose liability arises solely from having received the money for another's use can have no right to claim it.⁹² Another reason given for this doctrine appears sound: It is that it is contrary to public policy and good morals to permit employees, agents, or public servants to seize or retain the property of their principal, although it may be employed in an illegal business and under their control. No consideration of public policy can justify a lowering of the standard of moral

Illustrations.—Thus where a broker procured illegal insurance for his principal, and upon a loss the insurance company paid the money to the broker, who refused to pay it over to the insured, setting up the illegality of the insurance, it was held that the principal was entitled to recover; the implied promise of the defendant, arising from the receipt by him of the money, being a new undertaking, unaffected by the illegality of the insurance. Tenant v. Elliott, 1 B. & P. 3, 4 Rev. Rep. 755. So where a person employed another to make sales of candy by a scheme which was violative of the law prohibiting lotteries, and in a suit by the principal against the agent for the money so received, the agent pleaded the illegality of the transaction by which he obtained the money, it was held that the action would lie, the court saying: "The defendant (the agent) insists that, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not have enforced the contracts of sale as between himself and the purchaser, therefore, as the purchaser has performed the contracts by paying the money to the plaintiffs through me, as their agent, I can now set up the illegality of the contract of sale to defeat the action brought to enforce a contract on my part to pay the money that I as agent received, over to my principal. In other words, because my principal did not receive the money on a legal contract, I am at liberty to steal the money, appropriate it to my own use, and set my principal at defiance. We think the law is well settled otherwise." Baldwin v. Potter, 46 Vt. 402, 408. On the same principle where the treasurer of a horse-fair association received money for entrance fees, stock subscriptions, and commissions on pools sold, which he refused to pay over, and it was conceded that the business in which the money was earned was illegal, it was held that he was liable to the association in an action for money had and received. *Willson v. honesty required of persons in these relations.⁹³ Theoretically, it is said by a recent writer, there is a distinction between enforcing an illegal contract and enforcing a duty not springing from the contract, but arising solely from the receipt of the money or goods. But practically it is impossible to reconcile the actual decisions on this point.⁹⁴ A number of courts have refused to allow a recovery by a principal or partner in an illegal enterprise, on the ground that to do so would be to enforce, or at least to recognize, the illegal agreement.⁹⁵

R., spoke of the leading English case to the contrary (Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Phil. 801, 22 Eng. Ch. 801), as "unconclusive and unsatisfactory," and said: "The notion that because a transaction which is illegal is closed, that therefore a Court of Equity is to interfere in dividing the proceeds of the illegal transaction, is not only opposed to principle, but to authority,—to authority in the well-known case of the highwaymen, where a robbery had been committed, and one highwayman unsuccessfully sued the other for a division of the proceeds of the robbery. So in the case he puts of one of two partners engaged in merchant trade. As I read it, he meant the trade of smuggling goods. If two persons go partners as smugglers, can one maintain a bill against the other to have an account of the smuggling transaction? I should say certainly not. It is not sufficient to say that the transaction is concluded as a reason for the interference of the Court. If that were the reason, it would be lending the aid of the Court to assert the rights of the parties in carrying out and completing an illegal contract. If the partnership is for the purpose of smuggling, that is an illegal contract, and the Court cannot maintain it, and the Court will not lend its aid at all to it. That reasoning, then, of Lord Cottenham's is not sufficient; and I should have answered the question—not as Lord Cottenham does, in the affirmative—but in the negative. I do not say that this observation at all affects the authority of Sharp v. Taylor as it stands; but I think it does affect very much the dicta which I have read from the judgment; and that is the reason I have read them. It is no part of the duty of a Court of Justice to aid either in carrying out an illegal contract, or in dividing the proceeds arising from an illegal contract, between the parties to that illegal contract. In my opinion, no action can be maintained for the one purpose more than for the other."

Illustration.—In Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Ves. Jr. 470, 473, 6 Rev. Rep. 151, a sale of the command of an East India company ship was made to the defendant, who agreed to pay therefor an annuity of two hundred pounds. Under regulations adopted by the company to prevent such sales, the defendant subsequently relinquished the command, and was allowed three thousand five hundred pounds, two thousand and forty pounds

Certainly where the profits of an illegal transaction have been actually divided or invested in other property, the illegality of the original transaction in no way affects the title to such property or subsequent dealings in regard to it.⁹⁶ If one of the parties to an illegal and unenforceable contract, who has received profits under it, admits that a specified sum is due to the other party, it has been held that the latter may maintain an action upon an account stated between them;⁹⁷ or if he has made a special promise to pay him the action may be brought on that promise.⁹⁸

h. Recovery by Agent Against Principal. It is held everywhere in this country that a broker or other agent who is employed to carry out an illegal transaction cannot recover for his services in the employment, on either an express or an implied contract for the same with his principal.⁹⁹ So if he by

of which was delivered to an agent of the defendant. A bill was filed by the annuitant for the purpose of procuring a decree declaring the value of the annuity, and enforcing its payment out of the allowance to the defendant. The master of the rolls found the agreement for the payment of the annuity to be illegal, and admitting there existed an equity against the fund, if it could be reached through a legal agreement, said: "You have no claim to this money except through the medium of an illegal agreement; which according to the determinations you cannot support. I should have no difficulty in following the fund; provided you could recover against the party himself. If the case could have been brought to this, that the company had paid this into the hands of a third person for the use of the Plaintiff, he might have recovered from that third person, who could not have set up this objection, as a reason for not performing his trust. Tenant v. Elliott, 1 B. & P. 3, 4 Rev. Rep. 755, is, I think, an authority for that. But in this instance it is paid to the party; for there can be no difference as to the payment to his agent. Then how are you to get at it except through this agreement? There is nothing collateral; in respect of which, the agreement being out of the question, a collateral demand arises; as in the case of stock-jobbing differences. Here you cannot stir a step but through that illegal agreement; and it is impossible for the Court to enforce it."

Distinction in case of mere statutory prohibition.—Some cases make a distinction where the agreement is to do something per se immoral, criminal, or involving moral turpitude, and where its illegality is merely in the thing being prohibited by statute. Watson v. Murray, 23 N. J. Eq. 257; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. St. 308; Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 11 S. Ct. 496, 35 L. ed. 107; *Central Transp. Co. v. Ch. 801, the parties, who were British subjects, bought an American vessel which had stranded off the port of Liverpool, rescued and repaired her, and put her in service between British and American ports. The ship was registered in the name of a citizen of the United States to evade an act of parliament which prohibited other than British ships to engage in such service under British ownership. One of the owners having refused to account to the other for profits earned, suit was brought, and relief decreed. "The violation of law suggested was not," said the lord chancellor, "any fraud upon the revenue, or omission to pay what might be due; but, at most, an invasion of a parliamentary provision, supposed to be beneficial to the ship owners of this country."

The status of such a case has been well put thus: "Two men enter into a conspiracy to rob on the highway, and they do rob, and while one is holding the traveler the other rifles his pockets of $1,000 and then refuses to divide, and the other files a bill to settle up the partnership, when they go into all the wicked details of the conspiracy and the rencounter and the treachery. Will a Court of justice hear them? No case can be found where a Court has allowed itself to be so abused. Now if these robbers had taken the $1,000, and invested it in some legitimate business as partners, and had afterwards sought the aid of the Court to settle up that legitimate business, the Court would not have gone back to enquire how they first got the money; that would have been a past transaction, not necessary to be mentioned in the settlement of the new business." *King v. virtue of his employment makes disbursements, suffers losses, or incurs liabilities, he has no remedy against his principal.¹ In England, however, there are decisions holding that the principal is bound to indemnify the agent employed by him in an illegal transaction.² In all jurisdictions if the agent had no knowledge of the illegality of the transaction, or if his act was not a part of it then he may sue.³ For example if a broker be employed to make purchases or sales the illegality of which depends upon the intention of his principal, the former may recover if he was not aware of the latter's illegal intent.⁴

3. RIGHT OF THIRD PARTIES TO SET UP ILLEGALITY. The defense of illegality, although open to the parties and those claiming under them, cannot generally be invoked by third persons.⁵ Thus one who has given his note for a legal and valuable consideration cannot avoid payment because the payee has transferred it in payment of a debt which the law would declare illegal.⁶

4. FORM OF ILLEGAL AGREEMENT. The substance, not the form, of the agreement is looked at, and although valid on its face, oral evidence is always admissible to show an illegal purpose.⁷ Therefore, in order to arrive at the substance of it, a court will not confine its attention to the mere words in which it is expressed, for an illegal agreement may be sometimes concealed under the guise of language which on the face of it, if words were only to be considered, might constitute a legally enforceable contract.⁸

5. NEW AGREEMENT ON SAME CONSIDERATION VOID. If a connection between the original illegal transaction and a new promise can be traced, no matter how many times and in how many different forms it may be renewed, it cannot form the basis of a recovery. Repeating a void promise cannot give it validity.⁹ So every goods for it cannot defend an action for damages resulting from his negligence in transporting such goods on the ground that the corporation could not lawfully acquire title to them. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 17 Wis. 372. And the fact that one who delivers goods to a carrier for transportation carries on business under a firm name, when in fact he has no partner, and thus violates a law of the state, is no defense to an action by him against the carrier for injuries to the goods in course of transportation, if in fact he is the true owner of the goods. Wood v. Erie R. Co., 9 Hun (N. Y.) 648 [affirmed in 72 N. Y. 196, 58 Am. Rep. 125]. So also, although a wager is illegal and may be rescinded by the parties, a creditor cannot rescind his debtor's wager agreement and claim the money deposited with the stakeholder, unless the debtor is insolvent or financially embarrassed. Clark v. Gibson, 12 N. H. 386.

8. In a well-known case, under the guise of a contract for the sale by the defendant to the plaintiff of a horse at a price to depend on the event of a trial of its speed and staying power, there was concealed a mere bet of the defendant's horse to £200 that the horse within a month should trot eighteen miles within an hour. The defendant's horse, having failed to accomplish the task set him, was claimed by plaintiff at the nominal price of one shilling. The nature of this wagering contract was transparent, and the plaintiff in vain argued that it was a bona fide conditional bargain. Brogden v. Marriott, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 88, 2 Hodges 136, 5 L. J. Successive or renewal notes.—"If a note is tainted by the consideration of the demand for which it is given, there can be no good reason for drawing the line at the first note. If the first is taken up and a new one given in its stead, to obtain an extension of time, to embrace in it additional demands, or for other purposes, the illegal consideration is as distinctly traced in the second note as in the first. The new considerations dilute but do not neutralize or extinguish the poison. If the second note is enforced, the money promised for an illegal consideration collected by one of the guilty parties—the other guilty party is forced by the law to do

new agreement in furtherance of, or for the purpose of carrying into effect, any of the unexecuted provisions of a previous illegal agreement is likewise illegal and void.¹⁰

6. SECURITIES GIVEN IN ILLEGAL TRANSACTION. It follows from the principle just stated that notes given for illegal claims or as the consideration for illegal promises cannot be enforced.¹¹ The same is true of deeds, bonds, mortgages, and other securities.¹²

7. NEW AGREEMENT ON NEW CONSIDERATION. When an illegal agreement is carried out or abandoned, as the case may be, a new agreement wholly unconnected with the illegal act and in no sense a continuation of the old or including any claim or right springing therefrom is valid.¹³ Thus a lender may recover from a what he is commanded by the law not to do." Wegner v. Biering, 65 Tex. 506, 510. See also Cotton v. Brien, 6 Rob. (La.) 115; Scudder v. Thomas, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,567, 35 Ga. 364.

Negotiable instruments.—In the case of negotiable instruments, however, we have to consider not only the effect of the illegality as between the original parties, but the effect upon subsequent holders of the instrument. While as between the parties it is void, yet where it has passed into the hands of a bona fide holder for value without notice, its illegality is no defense as against him unless a statute expressly or by necessary implication declares it void, in which case even a bona fide holder cannot recover on it. borrower money paid at his request in discharge of an illegal contract.¹⁴ On the same principle, where a county made an illegal contract for the purchase of corn, a part of which was not delivered, and it afterward purchased and used the undelivered portion for a legal purpose, giving a warrant therefor, it was held that the consideration of the warrant was valid.¹⁵ And where a promissory note, the consideration of which was the hiring of a substitute in the Confederate army, was, at the request of the principal, paid off by the surety at its value, and the principal gave his note to the surety for the amount paid, it was held that the last contract was not affected by the illegality of the original note.¹⁶ There is, as we have seen, a difference of opinion in the courts as to the legality of a promise to pay over property or profits, the proceeds of an illegal adventure by a partner or agent, to the principal or copartner. Some courts hold such promise void,¹⁷ while others hold it good on the ground that the new promise is not part of the illegal contract which has been executed before the making of the new agreement,¹⁸ or on the ground that courts should not encourage violations of contracts for payment of debts, as between the parties, because growing out of tainted originals.¹⁹

8. EFFECT OF ILLEGAL AGREEMENT ON PRIOR LEGAL ONE. A subsequent illegal agreement will not affect a prior lawful one between the same parties.²⁰ Thus where the holder of a valid note gave the maker his receipt for the amount in consideration that the maker should desist from the prosecution of the holder for perjury, it was held that the illegality of the receipt did not affect the validity of the note.²¹

9. CONSIDERATION OR PROMISE WHOLLY ILLEGAL. Where an agreement consists of a single promise based on a single consideration, if either the promise or consideration is illegal, the agreement is void. This is elementary and undisputed.²²

10. CONSIDERATION LEGAL BUT PROMISE PARTLY ILLEGAL. Where an agreement founded on a legal consideration contains several promises or a promise to do several things, and some only of the things to be done are illegal, the promises which can be separated, or the promise so far as it can be separated, from the illegality, may be valid. The rule is that a lawful promise made for a lawful consideration is not invalid merely because an unlawful promise was made at the same time and for the same consideration.²³ Thus if the terms of a contract in restraint of trade can be construed divisibly as to the limits, it may be valid as to the limits which are reasonable, although other limits imposed are excessive, unreasonable, and void.²⁴ On the other hand, if a promise to do several things or several dis-

Illustrations.—Thus, where the restraint was to operate in London, or in any place in England or Scotland where the employer might have been practising during the employment, the restraint was held good as to London, but void as to the rest, because possibly extending everywhere. Mallan v. May, 7 Jur. 536, 12 L. J. Exch. 376, 11 M. & W. 853; Chesman v. Nainby, 2 Ld. Raym. 1456. So a covenant not to exercise a certain trade within the cities of London or Westminster, or within six hundred miles of the same, was construed divisibly, and held good as to London and Westminster, but void as to the six hundred miles beyond, which was not divisible. Green v. Price, 9 Jur. 880, 16 L. J. Exch. 108, 16 M. & W. 346. So a contract not to engage in a particular trade for a specific time, "in the city of St. Louis, or at any other place," was considered divisible, and as to the restriction imposed in St. Louis was held not void as in restraint of trade. Peltz v. Eichele, 62 Mo. 171. Upon the same principle a covenant by the articulated clerk to a solicitor not to act for any person who had already been or who thereafter should become a client of the solicitor was held to be unreasonably large, but valid as to persons who were clients before and during the clerk's articles. Nicholls v. Stratton, 10 Q. B. 346, 11 Jur. 1009, 59 E. C. L. 346. So where a person agreed with another not to manufacture ocher in Lehigh county or elsewhere, it was held that he might be enjoined from manufacturing ocher in Lehigh county. Smith's Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 579, 6 Atl. 251.

A distinction between illegality at common law and illegality by reason of the provision of a statute was made in the common law, it being said that a "statute is like a tyrant; where he comes he makes all void; but the common law is like a nursing father, makes void only that part where the fault is, and tinct promises, although they be founded on a legal consideration, are indivisible, and one or more of the promises are illegal, the legal promise or promises cannot be enforced, but the whole agreement is void.²⁵ Whether the promises are separable or indivisible is a question of interpretation by the court. And where a contract contains illegal stipulations, and to sustain it in part would be practically to sustain it altogether, the court will treat it as wholly void.²⁶ So a contract illegal in part, and of such a nature that the good cannot be separated from the bad, is entirely void.²⁷ It has been held that separation of the good consideration from that which is illegal will be attempted only in those cases in which the party seeking to enforce the contract is not the wrong-doer.²⁸

11. CONSIDERATION PARTLY ILLEGAL OR SEVERAL CONSIDERATIONS, SOME OF WHICH ARE ILLEGAL. If any part of a single consideration for one or more promises be illegal, or if there are several considerations for one promise, some of which are legal and others illegal, the promise is wholly void, as it is impossible to say which part or which one of the considerations induced the promise.²⁹ Thus if the con-preserves "the rest." Maleverer v. Redshaw, 1 Mod. 35; Pollock Contr. 321; Anson Contr. 206. And see Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 252. This distinction, however, is no longer recognized either in England or the United States, and although part of an agreement is contrary to statute, this does not avoid or annul other parts of the agreement which are separable from the bad part and not founded upon it, unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication declares the whole void.

Consideration void but not illegal.—The consideration must be illegal and not merely void. 12. PROMISES AND CONSIDERATIONS SEVERABLE. Where the agreement consists of several promises based on several considerations, the fact that one or more of the considerations are illegal will not avoid all the promises, if those which are made on legal considerations are severable from the others.³⁹ Thus where goods are sold at a separate price for each article, and the sale of some of the articles is illegal, an action will lie nevertheless for the price of any of the other articles.⁴⁰ The same principle applies in proper cases to contracts to pay for labor or services.⁴¹

13. INTENTION — a. Unlawful Intention on Both Sides — (1) IN GENERAL. Where the direct object of the parties is to do an illegal act, the agreement is void, and it is immaterial that either or both did not know that the object was illegal, for as a general rule ignorance of the law is no excuse.⁴² An agreement, on the face of which no illegality appears, and of which neither the consideration nor the promise in itself imports any illegality, may nevertheless be made for an illegal purpose, and the agreement, although unobjectionable in its terms, may then be rendered void by the illegality of the purpose for which it is made, the illegal intention being common to both parties.⁴³

Laws of another state.—But a contract made in one state, with the full knowledge of the parties that the property, which is its subject-matter, is to be used in another state, in no immoral manner, but in violation of the positive law of the latter state, is valid, and will be enforced in the latter state, when it is not shown that the parties knew that such use was forbidden. Merchants' Bank v. Spalding, 9 N. Y. 53.

43. Whetstone v. Montgomery Bank, 9 Ala. 875; Ralston v. Boady, 20 Ga. 449.

(11) WHEN THE RULE DOES NOT APPLY. To the general principle that ignorance of the law is no excuse for making a contract violating that law, there are some exceptions. The rule does not apply where the performance of the agreement in the manner intended would, unknown to parties, be illegal, but a legal method of performance is possible.⁴⁴ Nor does the rule apply where the mistake is really one of fact and not of law. Where a person sues for services rendered another in an occupation which is illegal, unless the employer is duly licensed to carry it on, which he is not, he may recover unless he knew that the employer had no license; for while he is bound to know that the employer must have a license to make the business legal, his mistake as to his having a license is a mistake of fact and not of law.⁴⁵ So it is held that a bond given to a person to indemnify him against liability for seizing goods under a writ, or arresting a person, is illegal if the person to whom it is given knew the seizure or arrest to be without right, but legal if he believed it to be authorized.⁴⁶ An agreement is not necessarily illegal because carried out in an illegal way, if this was not contemplated when the agreement was made.⁴⁷

b. Unlawful Intention on One Side Only. Where an agreement is lawful on its face or is capable of being executed in a lawful way, and the intention of one of the parties is that it be so executed, he is entitled to enforce it notwithstanding that the other party intended an illegal act, if he was unaware of the illegal

Charter-party.—Thus where a person had chartered another's ship to take a cargo of hay from a port in France to London, the cargo to be taken "from the ship alongside" and landed at a certain wharf, and unknown to the parties an order in council had forbidden the landing of French hay, and the charterer on learning this instead of landing the cargo took it "from the ship alongside" into another ship and exported it, it was held in an action by the ship-owner for delay of his vessel that the charterer could not set up the unlawful intention as avoiding the contract. The court said: "We quite agree, that, where a contract is to do a thing which cannot be performed without a violation of the law it is void, whether the parties knew the law or not. But we think, that in order to avoid a contract which can be legally performed, on the ground that there was an intention to perform it in an illegal manner, it is necessary to shew that there was the wicked intention to break the law; and, if this be so, the knowledge of what the law is becomes of great importance." Waugh v. Morris, L. R. 8 Q. B. 202, 42 L. J. Q. B. 57, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 265, 21 Wkly. Rep. 438.

Contract of mail-carrier.—So it was held that a contract by a mail-carrier to carry and deliver a letter in a manner prohibited by statute was not void, where the contract was made without intent to defraud the post-office, and under a misapprehension of the parties as to the true meaning of the statute, and where the letter could have been delivered in such a way by the mail-carrier as to have answered all the purposes which he who sent it had in view without any violation of the statute. Favor v. Philbrick, 7 N. H. 326.

Mistake of law distinguished.—In Stewart v. Thayer, 168 Mass. 519, 47 N. E. 420, 60 Am. St. Rep. 407, plaintiff sued defendant on an agreement for services in giving concerts on Sunday afternoon, when a statute permitted the licensing of sacred concerts on the evening of such day. The defense being that defendant had no license, it was argued that as plaintiff did not know this fact, it did not affect him; but it was held that the statute gave no right to license concerts on Sunday afternoon, and that plaintiff could not recover, his mistake being one of law, that the concert might be licensed, and not of fact.

intention.⁴⁸ If a person enters into a lawful contract, as an agreement to let premises or sell goods, which may be used and applied to various lawful purposes, and afterward discovers that the other party intends to use them for an illegal purpose, he may avoid the agreement and refuse completion.⁴⁹

c. Mere Knowledge of Unlawful Intention of Other Party—(1) IN GENERAL. It is held in England that where the agreement is innocent in itself, but the intention of one of the parties is unlawful, as where goods are bought or money borrowed to be used for an unlawful purpose, the mere fact that the other party knows of such purpose renders the agreement illegal and void.⁵⁰ In the leading English case action was brought to recover payment for the hire of a brougham engaged by a prostitute, and it being found that the plaintiffs knew that the brougham was hired for an immoral purpose, it was held that they could not recover.⁵¹ In the United States, while some courts have followed the English rule,⁵² most of the courts have taken a different view and have held that the

Horse-racing.—A horse-trainer may recover money laid out and expended for feed and shoes for a horse which he is fitting for a race on which money is bet; for, whether the race is run or not, it is necessary that the lottery,⁵⁹ or for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors;⁶⁰ or that the seller of goods knew that the buyer intended to resell them in a state where the sale of such goods was unlawful.⁶¹ Where a tract of land was bought for the purpose of subdividing it into lots, and illegally disposing of them by a lottery, the fact that the vendor knew of the purchaser's intention with reference to the lottery was held not to bar a recovery of the purchase-money, there being no agreement that the vendor should participate in the profits of the lottery.⁶²

(ii) CONTEMPLATED ILLEGAL ACT HIGHLY IMMORAL OR HEINOUS. There are several exceptions to the prevailing American rule. In the first place, when the contemplated illegal act is of a highly immoral or heinous character, the bare knowledge of the seller of the illegal intention of the buyer will bar his suit.⁶³ Thus one who should sell poison with knowledge that the buyer is going to poison another with it would be so nearly a participator in the intended crime as to be himself charged with its immorality.⁶⁴ And it is held that one who, bound by his allegiance to his government, sells goods to the agent of an armed combination to overthrow that government, knowing that they are to be used for that purpose, is himself guilty of treason or a misprison thereof, and cannot say that although the purchaser bought them for the illegal purpose, he did not sell them for that purpose.⁶⁵

(iii) WHERE ILLEGAL PURPOSE IS IN VIEW. So also, where goods are sold, premises leased, or services rendered for the express purpose of enabling the buyer, lessee, or beneficiary to accomplish an unlawful purpose, the agreement is void, and there can be no recovery of the price or rent; for here there is evidence of an unlawful intent common to both parties.⁶⁶ Thus it has been held that there can be no recovery where intoxicating liquors are sold to another for the express purpose of enabling the buyer to sell them in violation of law,⁶⁷ or where premises are rented for the express purpose of having them used as a animal should be fed and shod, and such items are not necessarily a part of the gaming transaction. Mosher v. Griffin, 51 Ill. 184, 99 Am. Dec. 541.

67. Kohn v. Melcher, 43 Fed. 641, 10 L. R. A. 439. Where one has sold liquor to another to be sold by the buyer in a state in which the sale of liquor is contrary to law, and the seller "expected and desired the buyer to sell unlawfully" in such state, "and intended to facilitate his doing so," the purchase-price cannot be recovered. "If the buyer knows that the sale is made only for the purpose of facilitating his illegal conduct, the connection is at the strongest. If the sale is made with the desire to help him to his end, although primarily made for money, the seller cannot complain if the illegal consequence is attributed to him. If the buyer knows that the seller, while aware of his intent, is indifferent to it, or disapproves of it, it may be doubtful whether the connection is sufficient." Graves v. Johnson, 156 Mass. 211, 214, 30 N. E. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 446, 15 L. R. A. 834.

bawdy-house or for any other unlawful business.⁶⁸ So where a person in addition to conducting lawful races has arranged booths and appliances for gambling on the races, a contract with another whereby he is to furnish refreshments, thus increasing the attraction and promoting the gambling, is illegal and void.⁶⁹ And so it is where a person leases premises for the illegal sale of liquors and also agrees to supply ice to keep them cool;⁷⁰ and where the subject of a sale is a "slot machine" which can be used for no other purpose than for gambling.⁷¹

(IV) MONEY LOANED. At first glance no legal distinction can be observed between a loan of money and a sale of goods, the lender or the seller knowing that the borrower or buyer intends an illegal use of them. The seller sells to make a profit, the lender lends for the purpose of a profitable investment. Yet as money is in many cases loaned to assist the borrower in some undertaking, and since, if the undertaking be an illegal one, the lender may be said to assist in it, some courts have held that money loaned to gamble with, or to enable the borrower to use it in any other illegal purpose, cannot be recovered.⁷² Other courts make no distinction between the case of a loan and a sale; the right of recovery being permitted in both.⁷³ If, instead of there being mere knowledge

Lease for purpose of unlawful liquor traffic.—In *Mound v. St. Rep. 301, where it was said: "It does not follow that a lender has a guilty purpose merely because he knows or believes that the borrower has. There may be a visible line between the motives of the two. If it were not so men would have great responsibilities for the motives and acts of others. A person may loan money to his friend,—to the man, and not to his purpose. He may not be willing to deny his friend, however much disapproving his acts. In order to find the lender in fault, he must himself have an intention that the money on the part of the lender that the money is to be used in an illegal transaction, it is the understanding of both parties that it shall be so used, it cannot be recovered.⁷⁴

(v) WHERE PARTY AID IN ILLEGAL PURPOSE. If in addition to mere knowledge of the buyer's illegal intention the seller does some act in aid of or in furtherance of the unlawful design; if in short he assists in any way the carrying out of the design, the agreement is void and he cannot recover the price.⁷⁵ Thus where the plaintiff had sold goods to the defendant knowing that they were to be smuggled into England, and had, by packing and marking the goods in a particular way so as to escape the eyes of the officers, furthered the defendant's design to violate the revenue laws, it was held that he could not recover.⁷⁶ And so it was held where the seller had marked casks of liquor in a certain way so as to conceal their contents from the authorities,⁷⁷ and where the plaintiffs had sold goods to the defendant with the knowledge that he intended to make an unlawful use of them, and to enable him to make such unlawful use, by his direction, put them up in packages in a convenient form for sale in violation of the law, with labels thereon calculated to facilitate such sales.⁷⁸

D. Conflict of Laws as to Time⁷⁹—1. IN GENERAL. The agreement may have been valid when it was made, but may have afterward become illegal by a change in the law or by express legislation, or it may have been illegal when it was made and the law which made it unlawful may have been afterward repealed. The validity of an agreement depends upon the state of the law at the time it was entered into.⁸⁰ shall be illegally used. . . . The lender must in some manner be a confederate or participator in the borrower's act, be himself implicated in it. He must loan his money for the express purpose of promoting the illegal design of the borrower; not intend merely to serve or accommodate the man."

Sale of furniture for use in bawdy-house.—Where a seller of household furniture on conveying it to a prostitute with knowledge that she intended to put it to an immoral use reserved the title and the right to take possession whenever he might deem himself insecure, even before the maturity of deferred payments, it was held that he so aided and participated in such immoral use as to make the sale void. But if a man covenants not to do a thing which then was unlawful, and an act

2. AGREEMENT ILLEGAL WHEN MADE BUT AFTERWARD LEGALIZED. It follows that if an agreement was illegal by statute or on grounds of public policy when made, it is not rendered legal by repeal of the statute or a subsequent change in public or legislative policy.⁸¹ "Perhaps the parties might be entitled to the benefit of a subsequent change in the law if their actual intention in making the contract was not unlawful."⁸² And a contract which provides for something known to the parties to be illegal at the time being done in the event and only in the event of its becoming lawful is good,⁸³ unless the thing is of such a character that its becoming lawful cannot be seriously contemplated.⁸⁴

3. AGREEMENT LEGAL WHEN MADE BUT AFTERWARD PROHIBITED. So a change in the law cannot make an agreement illegal which was legal when it was made.⁸⁵ Therefore where an agreement when entered into is legal, and is afterward made by statute illegal, acts done under it while it remained legal are legal,⁸⁶ and a contract that is valid when made is not affected by a change in the public policy of the state.⁸⁷ An agreement made after the passage of a prohibiting statute but before the act went into effect is not affected by it.⁸⁸ But a contract is discharged by illegality supervening subsequently to the time of contracting, which may occur by a new statute or other act of public authority rendering the performance legally impossible,⁸⁹ unless the discharge is prevented by the constitutional prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts.⁹⁰

VIII. CONSTRUCTION.

A. In General.⁹¹ The law furnishes certain rules for the construction of written contracts for the purpose of ascertaining from the language the manner and extent to which the parties intended to be bound; and those rules should be applied with consistency and uniformity; and it is not proper for a court to vary, change, or withhold their application.⁹²

B. Intention of Parties—1. IN GENERAL. The first and main rule of construction is that the intent of the parties as expressed in the words they have used must govern.⁹³ Greater regard is to be had to the clear intent of the parties than to any particular words which they may have used in the expression of their intent.⁹⁴ If the words used clearly show the intention there is no need for apply-

2. SECRET INTENTION. The secret intention of the parties, however, if different from the expressed intention, will not prevail, as the law looks to what the parties said as expressing their real intention.⁹⁶

3. WORDS TO BE TAKEN IN ORDINARY SENSE. In construing a written contract the words used are to be taken in the ordinary and popular sense,⁹⁷ unless from the context it appears to have been the intention of the parties that they should be understood in a different sense.⁹⁸ Language must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor knew, or had reason to know, that the promisee understood it.⁹⁹

Illustrations.—Where a building contract provided that if there should arise any dispute between the parties the architect should decide them, and that his decision should be final and conclusive, the court held that while the literal meaning of the words was that the decision of the architect was to be final and conclusive, even if it was a wilful and fraudulent decision, yet the intention of the parties being clearly to provide for a fair and definite decision of matters arising in dispute between them, that intention would prevail over the words used by them. Chism v. Schipper, 51 N. J. L. 1, 15, 16 Atl. 316, 14 Am. St. Rep. 668, 2 L. R. A. 544. See BUILDERS AND ARCHITECTS, 6 Cyc. 1. In the case just cited the court also said: "Another illustration of the principle that a literal interpretation is out of place when its adoption would run counter to the expressed general object of the contract, reference may be made to the familiar case of clauses so frequent in leases, that if the rent is in arrear for a certain time the instrument shall be void. In all these instances the courts have declared, notwithstanding the literal meaning of the terms, that the lease, on the happening of the event, is not absolutely vacated, but only becomes voidable at the option of the lessor." See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Contract or gift.—Where a person by writing said that he would "give" another a certain sum of money if he would do a certain thing, it was held that the word "give" should be construed as importing a contract

And all parts of the writing, and every word in it, will if possible be given effect.³

6. SEVERAL WRITINGS CONSTRUED TOGETHER. Where several instruments are made as part of one transaction, they will be read together, and each will be construed with reference to the other.⁴ Thus where two or more written instru-and not a gift. Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N. Y. 538, 27 N. E. 256, 36 N. Y. St. 888, 21 Am. St. Rep. 693, 12 L. R. A. 463; Wilkinson v. Oliveira, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 490, 27 E. C. L. 733. See GIFTS.

Agreement to "devote whole time" to work.—Where a person agreed to "devote his whole time and attention to the management" and cultivation of an orchard, it was held no breach of contract for him to occasionally absent himself from the premises at times when his presence was not necessary. Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62; Ehrlich v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 88 Mo. 249. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Where a policy of insurance on a stock of goods in a store provided that it should be null and void "if the said property should be sold or conveyed," it was held that, although the words were broad enough to cover any kind of a sale, the intention of the parties was clearly not that they should have so wide a meaning; for such a construction "would bring the first mercantile sale at the counter within the condition"; but the kind of sale the parties intended was a sale of the property interest in the stock. Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337. See INSURANCE.

ments are executed on the same day, relate to the same subject-matter, and one refers to the other, the presumption is that they evidence but a single contract.⁵ So if two or more agreements are executed at different times as parts of the same agreement they will be taken and construed together.⁶ As a rule several instruments executed at the same time and relating to the same subject-matter cannot be construed together as one contract, unless they are between the same parties,⁷ but sometimes this may be done.⁸

C. Implied Terms — 1. IN GENERAL. A contract must be construed so as to include not only what the parties actually wrote down or said, but also all those things which the law implies as part of it, and likewise all matters which the parties intended to express but did not.¹⁰ This is subject, however, to the rule that in the absence of fraud or mistake parol evidence is not admissible to add to or vary a written contract.¹¹

2. CUSTOM OR USAGE. A particular or general custom or usage may be proven to vary the usual meaning of the language of the contract, or to import a term not expressed therein.¹²

3. LAW OF PLACE IMPLIED. The law of the place where the contract is entered into at the time of making the same is as much a part of the contract as though it were expressed therein.¹³ But a contract cannot be construed with reference

D. Words and Clauses—1. ALL WORDS TO BE CONSIDERED. No word in a contract is to be treated as a redundancy, if any meaning reasonable and consistent with other parts can be given to it.¹⁵

2. MEANING OF PARTICULAR WORDS. As we have seen, all words are to be taken in the ordinary and popular sense, unless there is something to show that they were used in a different sense.¹⁶

4. REPUGNANT WORDS. Where it is clear that a word has been used inadvertently, and it is clearly inconsistent with and repugnant to the meaning of the parties, it will be rejected altogether.²¹

5. INCONSISTENT AND CONFLICTING CLAUSES. Where two clauses are inconsistent and conflicting, they must be construed so as to give effect to the intention of the parties as collected from the whole instrument.²² If one clause be at variance with another the one contributing most essentially to the contract will be entitled to more consideration than that which contributes less.²³

6. WRITING AND PRINTING. Where, as in the use of printed forms, a contract is partly printed and partly written, and there is a conflict between the printing and the writing, the writing will prevail.²⁴

7. EXPRESSIO UNUS. The expression in a contract of one or more things of a class implies the exclusion of all not expressed, although all would have been implied had none been expressed.²⁵

8. GENERAL AND SPECIFIC DESCRIPTIONS. The court will restrict the meaning of general words by more specific and particular descriptions of the subject-matter to which they are to apply.²⁶ Thus general words following particular or specific

Illustration.—In Union Pac. R. Co. v. Graddy, 25 Nebr. 849, 41 N. W. 809, defendant was employed by plaintiff to render such services as might be necessary as "consulting oculist and aurist," the contract being partly written and partly of printed form. By the printed form the physician employed agreed "to perform all necessary surgical and medical services for the treatment of said persons, if required to do so, and to furnish the necessary medicines and surgical appliances for the same." The words "and to furnish the necessary medicines and surgical appliances for the same" were erased, so that the portion of the contract which was in writing immediately following the words, "if required to do so" was "by the chief surgeon as consulting oculist and aurist," etc. Under a statute declaring that when an instrument is partly in writing, and partly in printed form, the former controls in case of inconsistency, it was held that the employment was only as consulting oculist and aurist and not as operating physician or surgeon.

Bill-heads and letter-heads.—A printed bill-head or letter-head cannot be allowed to control, modify, or alter the terms of a contract which is clearly expressed in writing below it. Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 S. Ct. 99, 37 L. ed. 1093. Where a person wrote another an unconditional offer to buy certain goods, and the other wrote back, accepting the offer, and the acceptance was unqualified, but was written on a letter-head, at the top of which were printed the words, "All sales subject to strikes and accidents," it was held that these words formed no part of the contract. Summers v. Hibbard, etc., Co., 153 Ill. 102, 38 N. E. 899, 46 Am. St. Rep. 872 [affirming 50 Ill. App. 381]. Limitation of rule.—But a special provision will be held to override a general provision only where the two cannot stand together. If reasonable effect can be given to both then both are to be retained. Corwin v. Hood, 58 N. H. 401; Geyman F. Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio 581, 45 N. E. 1097, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, terms are restricted in meaning to those things or matters which are of the same kind as those first mentioned.²⁷ And in like manner general expressions will be restricted by particular descriptions or additions following them.²⁸

9. RECITALS. Where the language of the covenants or promises in a contract is more comprehensive than that of the recitals, the intent is to be ascertained from a consideration of the entire instrument.²⁹

10. CLERICAL ERRORS AND OMISSIONS. The contract must be read according to the intent of the parties in spite of clerical errors and omissions which if followed would change that intention.³⁰

11. SURPLUSAGE. If no meaning can be given to a word from the connection in which it is used, nor consistently with express provisions of the instrument, nor upon examination of the whole instrument, such word or term will be treated as surplusage.³¹

E. Grammatical Construction — 1. IN GENERAL. The grammatical construction of a contract will not be followed, if a different construction will give effect to the intention of the parties as shown by the whole instrument and accomplish the object for which the contract was executed.³²

Illustration.—In Jackson v. Topping, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 388, 19 Am. Dec. 515, a father conveyed his property to his son in consideration that the son would support him and pay his debts. The deed contained a condition that if the son should neglect or refuse to pay his debts and should suffer the grantor to be put to cost, trouble, or expense on account thereof, the property should revert to him. The son failed to pay the debts, but the father was not put to any cost or trouble, for they were not demanded of him. It was held that as the intent of the father was that the property should revert if his debts were not paid, the estate was forfeited, and this intent would be carried out by the court, which would dis-

2. PUNCTUATION. The punctuation of a document, although it may aid in determining the meaning, will not control or change a meaning which is plain from a consideration of the whole document and the circumstances.³³

F. Construction to Uphold Contract and to Exclude Fraud — 1. VALID RATHER THAN INVALID. Where a particular word or words, or the contract as a whole is susceptible of two meanings, one of which will uphold the contract or render it valid, and the other of which will destroy it or render it invalid, the former will be adopted so as to uphold the contract.³⁴ Thus where an assignment was in the form: "I hereby assign to Reuben R. Thrall a note in my favor against Theodore Woodward and John H. Phillips, dated 13th Nov. 1838, for one hundred and fifty dollars payable in one year from date with use for value received," and to sustain the assignment it was necessary to show a consideration for it, so that the question was whether the words "for value received" referred to the note or to the assignment, they were construed as referring to the assignment, as that construction was necessary to sustain the instrument.³⁵

2. CONSTRUCTION AS LEGAL RATHER THAN ILLEGAL. So where one construction will make the contract legal and another will make it contrary to law or public policy, the former construction will be adopted, if reasonable.³⁶

35. Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202, 47 Am. Dec. 682. They were held as referring to the assignment for the further reason that the language of a contract is to be construed most strongly against the party using the words. See infra, VIII, J.

Further illustration.—Where a man gave a note payable Jan. 1, 1836, "with interest from eighteen hundred and thirty-five," it was held that interest was recoverable from Jan. 1, 1835, because otherwise the clause as to interest was of no effect, since without it interest would be recoverable only from Jan. 1, 1836. 3. GOOD FAITH AND BAD FAITH. So where an instrument is susceptible of two conflicting constructions, one of which imputes bad faith or fraud to one of the parties, and the other does not, the latter construction should be adopted.³⁷

G. Reason and Equity — 1. IN GENERAL. The words of a contract will be given a reasonable construction, where that is possible, rather than an unreasonable one,³⁸ and the court will likewise endeavor to give a construction most equitable to the parties, and which will not give one of them an unfair or unreasonable advantage over the other.³⁹ Thus where the meaning is doubtful, the construction will be avoided which will entail a forfeiture.⁴⁰

2. WHERE MEANING NOT UNCERTAIN. It is not the province of a court, however, to change the terms of a contract which has been entered into, even though it may be a harsh and unreasonable one. Nor will the dictates of equity be followed if by doing so the terms of a contract are ignored; for the folly or wisdom of a contract is not for the court to pass upon. Its terms, however onerous they may be, must be enforced if such is the clear meaning of the language used, and the intention of the parties using that language.⁴¹

H. Nature and Objects of Agreement and Situation of Parties. To determine the intention of the parties, if the meaning is not clear, it is necessary that regard shall be had to the nature of the instrument itself, the condition of

Illustration.—Thus where a contract between a ferry company and railroad company provided that the railroad company would always employ the ferry company to transport across the river all persons and property taken across to or from the railroad, and that "no other than the said ferry" should ever be employed by the railroad company to cross any passengers or freight coming or going on such road, it was held that the contract did not prevent the railroad company from crossing its freight and passengers by means of a wagon and railroad bridge afterward constructed, but simply prohibited them from employing any other ferry to transport them. If the contract prevented the use of the bridge by the railroad company for the transportation of its freight and passengers, it would have been contrary to public policy and void, and therefore it was construed so as to uphold it as a legal contract. the parties executing it, and the objects which they had in view, for which purpose parol evidence is admissible.⁴² This rule does not apply, however, where the language of the contract leaves no doubt as to the meaning of the parties; but in such a case the contract is to be construed without regard to extraneous facts.⁴³ Facts of public notoriety relating to the subject of a contract must be presumed to have been known to the parties at the time of making the contract, and the language used must be construed in reference to such facts.⁴⁴

I. Construction by Parties — 1. IN GENERAL. Where the parties to a contract have given it a particular construction, such construction will generally be adopted by the court in giving effect to its provisions. And the subsequent acts of the parties, showing the construction they have put upon the agreement them-which the parties themselves thought first class.⁴⁶ So also the fact that one who had contracted to construct the road-bed of a railroad between two towns had performed the work within the corporate limits of such towns, without asking for terms or for a contract as to that part of the work, was held evidence that he understood the work within the corporate limits of the towns to be embraced in his original contract.⁴⁷ And in an action on a note, evidence that defendants, on receiving from plaintiff a letter stating that he understood that a certain deed was to be delivered to them, not at the making, but on the payment of the note, remained silent, was held to raise a presumption that they acquiesced in such construction of the contract.⁴⁸

2. WHERE MEANING NOT UNCERTAIN. The rule above stated does not apply, however, where the meaning of the terms used is clear. In such a case the fact that the parties have themselves, by their subsequent conduct or otherwise, placed an erroneous construction upon them will not prevent the court from giving the true construction.⁴⁹

3. OPINION NOT CARRIED INTO EFFECT. The opinion of the parties as to the meaning of the contract not carried into effect by them is irrelevant.⁵⁰

J. Construction Against Party Using Words. It is a well-settled rule of construction that words will be construed most strongly against the party who used them;⁵¹ the reason for the rule being that a man is responsible for ambigui-

Other illustrations.—In O'Dea v. Winona, 41 Minn. 424, 43 N. W. 97, grading and other work was to be done under the direction of the city engineer, and he fixed the grade line on the ground in conformity with the new line alleged by plaintiff to have been laid down on the profile; and plaintiff in good faith filled the street up to such grade line under the constant supervision of the engineer, who finally approved the work and certified that it had been performed in accordance with the contract. It was held that there was a practical construction of the contract, which the court could not ignore. In Vermont, etc., R. Co. v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 34 Vt. 1, where a contract of lease between two railroad companies required the lessee to pay eight per cent on the whole cost of the leased road, it was held that, although it would seem from the language of the contract that the sum on which the eight per cent should be calculated was the actual outlay of money directly made for the construction of the leased road, yet the meaning put on the contract by the parties themselves by the payment of rent and adjustment of accounts, that the basis of the costs should be measured by the capital stock paid in, with interest on the expenditures from the time they were made in pursuance of the contract of lease, would govern in determining the true meaning of the contract in that respect. And in Kidwell v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 11 Gratt. (Va.) 676, where a person had contracted with a railroad company to build a bridge on its road and received the monthly estimates of the amounts to which he was entitled, founded on a particular construction of his contract, without making any objection, he was held to have acquiesced in that construction and to be bound by it.

ties in his own expressions and has no right to induce another to contract with him on the supposition that his words mean one thing, while he hopes the court will adopt a construction by which they would mean another thing more to his advantage.⁵² But this rule, it is said, is the last one which the courts will apply, and then only if a satisfactory result cannot be reached by the other rules of construction.⁵³ The rule is never applied to words which are the common language of both parties;⁵⁴ and it will not be followed where it will cause a forfeiture.⁵⁵

an oral contract is doubtful, although there may be no conflict in the evidence, the jury are to determine what the contract was.⁶⁰

IX. DISCHARGE.

A. Modes of Discharge. A contract may be discharged in various ways, namely, (1) by agreement, (2) by performance, (3) by impossibility of performance, (4) by operation of law, and (5) by breach.⁶¹

B. Discharge by Agreement—1. By NEW AGREEMENT—a. In General. As a contract is the result of agreement, so an agreement may put an end to a contract. Therefore a contract may be discharged at any time before the performance is due, by a new agreement with the effect of altering the terms of the original agreement or of rescinding it altogether; and a claim under the original contract may then be met by the new agreement, so far as the latter operates to alter or rescind the former.⁶² A proposition for a mutual rescission of a contract assumes its validity, and the proposition being rejected the parties stand where they did before.⁶³

b. Sufficiency of Agreement and Consideration. The new agreement must have all the requisites of a valid and enforceable agreement or it will not be binding.⁶⁴ Therefore a consideration is essential, unless there is an instrument under seal dispensing with the necessity for a consideration.⁶⁵ While a contract remains executory on both sides, an agreement to annul on one side is a consideration for the agreement to annul on the other, and vice versa.⁶⁶ On the other hand if the contract has been executed on one side, an agreement without any new consideration that it shall not be binding is without consideration and void.⁶⁷ In England it is said that bills of exchange and promissory notes are an exception to this rule, and that the rights of the holder may be waived and discharged without any consideration moving to him for such act.⁶⁸ The rule in this country is that such instruments in this respect stand on the same footing as any other simple contract, but that if the instrument itself is destroyed or surrendered for the purpose of discharging the debt, it will so operate without any consideration, for here there is a valid executed gift of the instrument; such instruments being regarded as the contract and not merely the evidence of the contract.⁶⁹

c. Substituted Agreement—(i) IN GENERAL. The discharge may take the form either of a total obliteration of all contractual relations between the parties in regard to the subject-matter of the contract,⁷⁰ or it may be effected by the substitution of a new agreement in place of the old one. In such case the new agreement takes the place of the old⁷¹ and consists of the new terms and as much of the old agreement as the parties have agreed shall remain unchanged; in other words a contract may be rescinded in part and stand as to the residue.⁷² Thus the period for the performance of a written contract or the payment of money may be enlarged by agreement, and an action in the contract cannot be sustained until the expiration of the new time.⁷³ An agreement in writing to deliver an article at a particular place may be controlled and modified by a subsequent agreement to deliver it at a different place.⁷⁴ And a provision in a contract against extra work, except as agreed to in writing, may be rescinded by the parties, who may agree to alterations by parol.⁷⁵

(ii) EFFECT AS TO THIRD PARTIES. The making of a new contract between the parties to an old one does not affect the rights of third persons which have accrued thereunder.⁷⁶ Executory contracts may be rescinded by the parties to them only where they continue interested until the agreement to rescind is made.⁷⁷ Where a promise is made for the benefit of a stranger to the contract, it may be rescinded by the parties thereto before it is accepted by the stranger.⁷⁸

d. Novation. A contract may also be discharged by the acceptance by the creditor of a new debtor in place of the old one, where the original parties and the new party are all parties to the agreement. This is called a novation.⁷⁹

e. Implied Rescission—(i) INCONSISTENT SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT. One written contract complete in itself will be conclusively presumed to supersede another one made prior thereto in relation to the same subject-matter. If agreements be made between the same parties concerning the same matter, and the terms of the later are inconsistent with those of the former so that they cannot subsist together, the later will be construed to discharge the former.⁸⁰ But where it is claimed that by reason of inconsistency between the terms of a new agreement and those of the old the old one is discharged, the fact that such was the intention of the parties must clearly appear.⁸¹ A new contract with reference to the subject-matter of a former one does not supersede the former and destroy its obligations, except in so far as the new one is inconsistent therewith, when it is evident from an inspection of the contracts and from an examination of the circumstances that the parties did not intend the new contract to supersede the old, but intended it as supplementary thereto.⁸² Where a new contract is consistent with the continuance of the former one, and only provides a new mode of discharging the same, it has no effect unless or until it is performed.⁸³

(ii) LAPSE OF TIME. A rescission may be implied where the first agreement has never been followed or acted upon for a length of time.⁸⁴

f. Form of New Agreement—(i) CONTRACTS UNDER SEAL—(A) In General. The ancient rule of the common law was that the new agreement to discharge the old must have been in the same form or at least in as high a form as the old, and hence a sealed executory agreement could not be discharged by a parol agreement, whether oral or in writing; and this rule has been repeatedly followed in the United States.⁸⁵ In some jurisdictions, however, there are decisions to the contrary.⁸⁶ And it has been held that the time fixed for the performance of a contract under seal may be extended by parol,⁸⁷ and that a condition in a sealed instrument may be waived by parol.⁸⁸ Parties to a contract under seal may by parol fix the time of performance where the contract is silent on the subject.⁸⁹

(b) Parol Contract at Variance With Sealed Contract. It is clearly settled that parties who have undertaken contractual obligations by an agreement under seal may nevertheless enter into a new parol agreement creating obligations separate from the old ones, and at variance with them, and such new agreement will be binding.⁹⁰

(c) Parol Agreement Acted On. And in this country it is almost universally held that where a contract under seal has been rescinded or modified or altered by a subsequent parol agreement, and this new agreement has been executed, the parol agreement may be shown in an action on the sealed instrument.⁹¹

(ii) WRITTEN CONTRACT NOT UNDER SEAL—(A) In General. A simple contract, whether written or oral, may be discharged, according to the weight of

L. 259, where a person had let rooms to another by contract under seal for a certain time, at a rent to be ascertained in a certain way; and after his death his administrator entered into a parol agreement with the tenant by which, in consideration of a certain sum to be paid by the latter to be taken as a reasonable rent, neither party should be called upon to perform his part under the deed. The tenant failed to make the payment so agreed upon and the administrator sued him upon the parol contract. It was held that the parol contract created a new binding obligation.

In the leading case of Goss v. Nugent, 5 B. & Ad. 58, 65, 2 L. J. K. B. 127, 2 N. & M. 28, 27 E. C. L. 34, it is said: "By the general rules of the common law, if there be a contract which has been reduced into writing, . . . it is competent to the parties, at any time before breach of it, by a new contract not in writing, either altogether to waive, dissolve, or annul the former agreement, or in any manner to add to, or subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it, and thus to make a new contract; which is to be proved, partly by the written agreement, and partly by the subsequent verbal terms ingrafted upon what will be thus left of the written agreement."

Executory oral agreement.—There are some cases holding that a contract in writing is not discharged by a mere executory oral agreement varying or modifying its terms. Walker v. Greene, 22 Ala. 679; Adams v. Nichols, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 275, 31 Am. Dec. 137; Rucker v. Harrington, 52 Mo. App. 481. See also Romaine v. Judson, 128 Ind. 403, 26 N. E. 563, 28 N. E. 75.

93. In California by statute (Civ. Code, § 1698) a contract in writing cannot be altered otherwise than by a contract in writing or an executed oral agreement. See Benson v. Shotwell, 103 Cal. 163, 37 Pac. 147; Erenberg v. Peters, 66 Cal. 114, 4 Pac. 1091.

that no modification shall be made except in writing, for this provision itself may be changed by word of mouth.⁹⁴

E. 13, where it was said: "We know of no principle of law which will permit a party to a contract, who is entitled to demand the performance by the other party of some act within a specified time and who has consented to the postponement of the performance to a time subsequent to that fixed by the contract, and where the other party has acted upon such consent and in reliance thereon has permitted the contract time to pass without performance, to subsequently recall such consent and treat the nonperformance within the original time as a breach of the contract. The original contract is not changed by such waiver, but it stands as an answer to the other party who seeks to recover damages for nonperformance induced by an unrecalled consent. The party may, in the absence of a valid and binding agreement to extend the time, revoke his consent so far as it has not been acted upon, but it would be most inequitable to hold that a default, justified by the consent, happening during its extension, should furnish a ground of action. It makes no difference, as we conceive, what the character of the original contract may be, whether one within or outside the Statute of Frauds."

2. NON-FULFILMENT OF TERM IN CONTRACT—a. Condition Subsequent. By the very words of the agreement the non-fulfilment of a certain term in it may give to one of the parties a right to treat it as a discharge.⁹⁹ Whether conditions are precedent or subsequent is to be determined by the intent of the parties as collected from the contract, whatever may be the order in which they are placed or the manner in which they are expressed.¹ The question whether an agreement is void for breach of condition subsequent is proper for a court of law; and until the question is so determined, equity will not restrain the parties from acting under the agreement.²

b. Occurrence of Particular Event. It may be a term in the contract, either express or implied, that the occurrence of some act or event shall discharge the contract.³ An illustration of this is in case of the excepted risks in a charter-party. In a contract of that nature the ship-owner agrees with the charterer to make the voyage on the terms expressed in the contract, the act of God, fire, collision, and other dangers of the seas, etc., excepted. The occurrence of such an excepted risk releases the ship-owner from the strict performance of the contract; and if it should take place while the contract is wholly executory, and frustrate the entire enterprise, the parties are altogether discharged.⁴

c. Option to Determine Contract. A contract may provide that it shall come to an end at the option of one or either of the parties.⁵ Every contract is prima facie permanent and irrevocable, and it lies upon a person who says that it is revocable or determinable to show either some expression in the contract itself,

99. Thus in a contract of sale of personal property it may be a term of the agreement that if the chattels do not answer the description they may be returned to the seller. See SALES. And a contract of hiring may give the master the right to terminate the contract upon the happening or non-performance of a condition subsequent. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Common carriers.—Illustrations of conditions subsequent also occur in the case of common carriers. Bills of lading contain numerous terms on which their liability is to cease; and in the absence of such terms the law implies certain events on the happening of which the carrier is discharged from his agreement to carry safely. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 352.

Insurance.—So in insurance policies, the occurrence of some event, as leaving the premises vacant or traveling in prohibited places, etc., may discharge the contract. See INSURANCE.

Landlord and tenant.—Leases are commonly made subject to conditions of forfeiture upon default of the tenant, as for non-payment of rent, not repairing, or other breach of covenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Sales.—And a contract of sale of goods may be made upon the express condition that in case of a breach of warranty of the goods sold the buyer may rescind the contract and return the goods and recover the price paid. See SALES.

Leases of land are frequently determined by notice. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Contracts of hiring are often made determinable by notice to be given to either party to put an end to the engagement; and in many kinds of hiring and service certain notices for determining the contract are impliedly imported by usage or rules of law, in the absence of express stipulation to that effect. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

or something in the nature of the contract, from which it is reasonably to be implied that it was not intended to be permanent and irrevocable, but was to be in some way or other subject to determination.⁶

C. Discharge by Performance — 1. PROMISE ON EXECUTED CONSIDERATION. Where a promise has been given on an executed consideration, performance of the promise by the promisor necessarily discharges the contract, for the obligation existing between the parties is thereupon extinguished.⁷

2. CONTRACT WHOLLY EXECUTORY. But when the contract is wholly executory, that is, where one promise is given in consideration of another,⁸ performance by one party does not discharge the contract, although it discharges him from further liability.⁹ Neither party to a contract can recover against the other for a breach thereof or put the other in default, without a tender of performance upon his part, or showing a willingness and ability to perform, and that actual performance was prevented or expressly waived by the other.¹⁰

3. STRICT AND SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE — a. At Common Law. By the common-law rule, to discharge a promise by performance, the performance must be in strict accordance with the terms of the contract.¹¹

b. In Equity. In equity, on the other hand, it has always been held that

6. In Llanelly R., etc., Co. v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 8 Ch. 949, 42 L. J. Ch. 884, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 357, 21 Wkly. Rep. 889, where a contract was made between two railroad companies for giving to one of them running power over the lines of the other, and making permanent provisions for the exercise of the power, but without mentioning any limit of time or any mode of terminating the power; it was held that, considering the perpetuity of the legal personality of the contracting parties and of the subject-matter, the contract must have an indefinite duration, according to the prima facie construction of its terms, and that there was no implied condition to terminate it by notice or otherwise. In St. Barnabas Hospital v. Minneapolis International Electric Co., 68 Minn. 254, 70 N. W. 1126, 40 L. R. A. 388, defendant took one of its employees who had been seriously injured to the plaintiff hospital, and at its request and upon its promise to pay for his care and treatment, plaintiff accepted and received him as a patient for an indefinite period, no length of time being mentioned. Subsequently, and while the patient was yet incapable of being removed or discharged from the hospital without great danger to his life or health, defendant gave notice that thereafter it would not be responsible for his care or treatment. It was held that defendant had no right to thus terminate its liability; that under the circumstances it was an implied condition of the contract that defendant could only terminate it by removing the patient or when he could be dismissed by plaintiff without serious danger to his life or health.

So where plaintiff contracted to do advertising for defendant in one thousand and seventy-five newspapers, the advertisement to be set up in a certain style, under the head of new advertisements, and the advertisement was inserted in one thousand and twenty-two papers, in two hundred and thirty-three of which the directions as to style and type were not complied with, in two hundred and ninety-one of which they were only partly complied with, and in half of which the insertion was not under the head of new advertisements, and it appeared that the style and position were of importance, it was held that plaintiff had not complied with his contract, and that it was immaterial that the position given to the advertisement was better where the contract is substantially performed, the party may recover as for a complete performance, less such damages as the other party may have been put to by reason of the matters not performed.¹² The equity doctrine of substantial performance has been generally adopted by the courts of law in the case of building contracts,¹³ it being laid down that where the builder has in good faith intended to and has substantially complied with the contract, although there may be slight defects caused by inadvertence or unintentional omissions, he may recover the contract price, less the damage on account of such defects.¹⁴ In commercial contracts a strict performance is required.¹⁵

Goodhue*, (Vt. 1902) 52 Atl. 971. So where a contractor agreed to decorate the walls, ceiling, and woodwork of a room, and equip it with furniture at the agreed price of five thousand two hundred dollars, and defects in the woodwork afterward developed which were shown to be completely remediable at a cost not to exceed five hundred dollars, it was held a substantial performance. *Philip Hiss Co. v. whole or be so material that the object which the parties intended to accomplish, to have a specified amount of work performed in a particular manner, is not accomplished.¹⁶ The non-performance of a material part of the contract will prevent the performance from amounting to a substantial performance.¹⁷ "Substantial performance," as defined by the cases, permits only such omissions or deviations from the contract as are inadvertent or unintentional, are not due to bad faith, do not impair the structure as a whole, are remediable without doing material damage to other parts of the building in tearing down and reconstructing, and may without injustice be compensated for by deductions from the contract price. So much is allowed in building contracts because of the hardship to the contractor if slight, unintentional deviations should bar his recovery. Substantial performance is a question of fact for the trial court.¹⁸

d. Recovery For Benefits Received. In some cases a liability to pay is made to arise, not out of the contract, but from a quasi-contractual liability; and it is held that a person may recover for work done under a contract, although not strictly according to it, where the work was beneficial to the other party and the parties cannot be placed in statu quo.¹⁹

ing changes in the sketch suggested by defendant was a letter stating that plaintiffs trusted "the cover as now made will be entirely satisfactory." Defendant answered, "The print as now made will be satisfactory if the covers furnished will be equal to those in good effect." Plaintiff acknowledged a letter "advising us that the proof of cover as already submitted will be entirely satisfactory, providing the finished work will be equal to same. We will therefore proceed with the printing, . . . and feel sure that the finished result will be entirely satisfactory to you." It was held that the contract was to furnish catalogues in accordance with the proofs, and that plaintiffs, having printed their firm name at the bottom of the last page without permission of defendant, had not complied with it so as to entitle them to recover.

As it ripened, plaintiff delivered and defendant accepted quantities from time to time, but defendant declined to pay for any until the whole was delivered. Plaintiff discontinued delivering and sued for the price of that delivered. It was held that the action was maintainable.

at or within the time fixed, in order to bind the other party, unless time is not of the essence of the contract, as explained in the sections following; and even when performance after that time is accepted by the other party, it is not performance in the eye of the law, but is satisfaction for the breach which has taken place.²⁰ In determining whether stipulations as to the time of performing a contract are conditions precedent, the court seeks simply to discover what the parties really intended; and if time appears, on a fair construction of the language and under the circumstances, to be of the essence of the contract, the stipulations in regard to it will be held conditions precedent.²¹

(II) TIME OF ESSENCE OR NOT—(A) In General. Where the time of performance is fixed by the contract, the question is whether it is of the essence of the contract or not; and this is a question of construction. Since it is entirely competent for parties to agree upon what shall be the effect of non-compliance with any of the stipulations of their contracts, they may agree that the time of performance shall be treated as essential and the courts will uphold and enforce any clearly expressed intention to that effect.²² It is generally laid down that where time is of "the essence of the contract," performance after such time will not be a performance of the contract, unless assented to by the other party.²³ But it is otherwise where the contract shows that time was not deemed

If a party accepts an agreement from which he is to derive a benefit when he shall have performed any act on or before a certain day, such acceptance is equivalent to an affirmative agreement on his part, to perform to be of its essence.²⁴ Time is of the essence of a contract when it is a material object to which the parties looked in the first conception of it. A provision in a contract is said to be of the essence of the contract when compliance with it was known by both parties at the time of entering into the contract to be of such importance that performance of the contract without strict compliance with it might be of no avail.²⁵ Although time is not made of the essence of a contract, either party may enforce performance by executing or tendering the execution of the contract on his part and demanding the same of the opposite party.²⁶

(B) At Common Law. At common law time is always of the essence of the contract, that is to say, if a person promises another to do a certain thing by a certain day, in consideration that the latter will do something for him, the thing must be done by the date named or the latter is discharged from his promise.²⁷

(C) In Equity. Courts of equity, however, look further into the intention of the parties, so as to ascertain whether in fact the performance of the contract by one party was meant to depend upon the other party's promise being fulfilled by the day named therefor, or whether a day was named merely in order to secure performance within a reasonable time. If the latter is found to have been the intention, equity will not refuse to enforce the contract if the promise required to be so performed was performed within a reasonable time.²⁸ By the weight the act by the time stated. Roberts v. Marston, 20 Me. 275, 37 Am. Dec. 52.

Contract fixing hour for performance.—Where it appears that the parties intended to make time of the essence of the contract, the rule that the stipulation as to time must be observed applies to an hour as well as to a day. Shinn v. Roberts, 20 N. J. L. 435, 43 Am. Dec. 636. But in order to determine the intentment of exactness regard should be had to the character and objects of the contract and the circumstances under which it was made. Punctuality to a minute is not required, unless indispensable. Furlong v. Barnes, 8 R. I. 226. Thus where the purchaser of merchandise for cash agreed to call at the seller's office before nine o'clock in the evening to pay a balance, it was held that a tender made a few minutes after nine would have been good. Furlong v. Barnes, 8 R. I. 226.

Excuse for delay.—If parties by clear and explicit terms provide that time shall be of the essence of their contract, nothing but the act of God will excuse a failure to perform. Miller v. Phillips, 31 Pa. St. 218. Where, under a contract to pay money, time is of the essence of the contract, business losses and deprivation of rents occasioned by the burning of the promisor's buildings do not constitute a sufficient excuse for failure to pay within the agreed time. Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18. Under Rev. Civ. Code, art. 1933, providing that a fortuitous event which prevents the execution of a contract shall not shield a party from damages, if the force was preceded by some fault of his own, without which the loss would not have occurred, performance of a contract to deliver corn within twenty days is not excused by the freezing of a river on the eleventh day, when transportation could have been made before that time, and there was reason to expect a freeze. *Eugster v. of authority, however, it is always open to the parties, even in equity, to make time of the essence of the contract by express agreement.²⁹ And where time is not made of the essence of the contract by express stipulation, it may nevertheless be held to have been so intended from the nature of the contract.³⁰ In mercantile contracts, such as contracts for the manufacture and sale of goods and the like, it is generally so held.³¹ In contracts for the sale of land, for the Parol evidence.—While equity presumes that the time of performance named in the contract is not essential, yet this presumption may be rebutted by parol evidence, which is always admissible to show that time was intended to be of the essence of the contract. Thurston v. Arnold, 43 Iowa 43.

Decisions to the contrary.—In some of the states, even where time is expressly declared to be of the essence of the contract, courts of equity will disregard the stipulation if its enforcement would be unconscionable. Quinn v. Roath, 37 Conn. 16; Cole v. Wells, 49 Mich. 450, 13 N. W. 813; Richmond v. Robinson, 12 Mich. 193; Austin v. Wacks, 30 Minn. 335, 15 N. W. 409; Ballard v. Cheney, 19 Nebr. 58, 26 N. W. 587. And in Michigan, it seems, the stipulation will be disregarded in such case without regard to the intention of the parties. Richmond v. Robinson, 12 Mich. 193. And see Cole v. Wells, 49 Mich. 450, 13 N. W. 813.

30. Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326, 59 Am. Dec. 677 (holding that time will be deemed of the essence of the contract, wherever the benefit to accrue from the consideration materially depends on a strict performance in point of time); Westerman v. Means, 12 Pa. St. 97 (holding that time will always be regarded as material where there are not mutual remedies); Bellas v. Hays, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 427, 9 Am. Time not of essence.—In a contract by a lithographing company to furnish, "in the course of the year," designs of certain buildings of a manufacturing company, with sketches of its trade-marks, to execute engravings, and to embody them on large amounts of stationery, to engrave a vignette of one of the firm's plants, and to furnish a certain number of hangers, after approval of proofs, it was held that the stipulation as to time was not of the essence of the contract so as to justify a repudiation thereof because of a delay in delivery till eight days after the close of the year. Beck, etc., Lithographing Co. v. Colorado Milling, etc., Co., 52 Fed. 700, 703, 3 C. C. A. 248, where it was said: "In contracts for work or skill, and the materials upon which it is to be bestowed, a statement fixing the time of performance of the contract is not ordinarily of its essence, and a failure to perform within the time stipulated, followed by substantial performance after a short delay, will not justify the aggrieved party in repudiating the entire contract, but will simply give him his action for damages for the breach of the stipulation."

Time held of essence.—In Thornton v. Sheffield, etc., R. Co., 84 Ala. 109, 4 So. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 337, it was held that where one executed an instrument binding herself to convey a right of way to certain persons on condition that they should commence the construction of a railroad within three months, and complete it through certain counties within three years, time was of the essence; and in default in that regard compensation might be recovered for such right of way. In Spencer v. Burton, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 57, it was held that the day fixed in a lease of real estate for years on which the lessee was to have possession was of the essence of the contract. In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Rierison, 38 Kan. 359, 16 Pac. 443, it was held that where, on obtaining judgment against a railroad company for damages for failure to erect a cattle-guard, plaintiff agreed to accept less than the amount of the judgment, if it should be paid and the defect remedied within thirty days, time was an important element of the agreement; and the thirty days having elapsed without performance plaintiff could enforce the whole amount of his judgment. In Carter v. Phillips, 144 Mass. 100, 10 N. E. 500, it was held that in a contract for carrying on the business of manufacturing, purchasing, and selling cloaks and garments, providing that it might be terminated by either party on giving sixty days' notice to the other, and that if terminated by one named the other should have the right to purchase the business within the said sixty days, time was of the essence of the contract to purchase. And in Pickering v. Greenwood, 114 Mass. 479, it was held that where a written contract provided expressly for the doing of work before a given time, time was of its essence; and no work having been done before that time a subsequent offer to perform gave no right to compensation. In Utley v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 59 Mich. 263, 26 N. W. 488, it was held that in a contract between the owner of pine lands and persons who undertook to cut and deliver the timber on shares, the work to be done by a certain season, time was of the essence of the contract. And in Jennison v. Leonard, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 302, 22 L. ed. 539, it was held that time was of the essence of a contract to buy timber land, whose chief value was the timber, where the contract was payable in three annual instalments, and required the cutting of sufficient timber each year to pay the instalments, and the making of monthly payments in proportion to the quantity of timber cut. So in Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. (U. S.) 28, 16 L. ed. 360, and Slater v. Emerson, 19 How. (U. S.) 224, 15 L. ed. 626, where a railroad contractor agreed with a stock-holder of the railroad, in consideration of certain payments to be made by the latter, that the road should be completed by a certain day, it was held that time was of the essence of the agreement; and consequently no recovery could be had on it, where it was not performed at the day prescribed.

In contracts for the payment of money time may be of the essence. Sneed v. Wiggins, 3 Ga. 94; Bishop v. Lawrence, 85 Ky. 25, 2 S. W. 499, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 643; Ames v. Brooks, 143 Mass. 344, 9 N. E. 737; Longley v. Cotting, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 329; Hollingsworth v. Fry, 4 Dall. 345, 12 Fed. Cas. No.

(D) Waiver and Estoppel. Even where time is expressly declared to be of the essence of the contract, it may be waived by the conduct of the party for whose benefit the stipulation is made; as for instance where he recognizes the contract as still in force after the time for performance has passed or directs changes making a longer time necessary.³⁴ If the party prevents performance by the other, he cannot insist on the stipulation.³⁵

(III) CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENTS AS TO TIME. The determination of the time for the performance of particular contracts depends of course upon the language used and the intention of the parties.³⁶ It has been held in some cases, but not in others, that a contract to pay money or perform any other act "forthwith," "as soon as possible," "when convenient," etc., requires payment or per-

Contract to construct canal.—Randel v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 1 Harr. (Del.) 151.

Contract to clear and cultivate land.—An agreement executed in January, 1853, to clear certain lands and to cultivate them for two years from March 1, 1853, was held to require the lands to be cleared before March 1, 1853, and their cultivation to commence with the cropping season of 1853. Basler v. Nichols, 8 Ind. 260.

Contract with playwright.—Yeamans v. Tannehill, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 958.

Allowance of a certain time.—An agreement that the time within which it shall be incumbent on the plaintiff to complete his contract shall not be taken to be less than four years is a covenant by the defendant that he will allow the plaintiff four years to complete it in, and the unlawfully driving him away from the work within that time is a breach of the covenant. Randel v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 1 Harr. (Del.) 233.

"The latter part of January."—Under a contract fixing the time of performance as "the latter part of January," the whole of that part is meant; hence a suit for non-performance will not lie until the expiration of the month. Bailey v. Ricketts, 4 Ind. 488.

Reasonable time.—Where a manufacturing company offered to remove its plant to another town, and a committee of the inhabitants was appointed to investigate its financial standing, but, on the plea of expense in taking an invoice during the busy season, the directors executed a guaranty that an invoice would show a certain standing "on April 1, 1888" (a future date), it was held that this implied a promise to take an invoice showing the condition on that date within a reasonable time, and a failure to do so was a breach of the contract. Ft. Wayne Electric Light Co. v. Miller, 131 Ind. 499, 30 N. E. 23, 14 L. R. A. 804.

Where the contract sued on was to be performed within the lifetime of plaintiff, it was held proper to refuse to instruct the jury that it must be performed in a reasonable time, and as to what constituted a reasonable time. Michael v. Foil, 100 N. C. 178, 6 S. E. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 577.

"In equal annual payments."—A covenant to pay a certain sum, "in equal annual payments," without further specification, was held to be payable in two equal instalments in one and two years from date, with interest only from maturity. Turner v. Roby, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 209.

"In a short time."—Where there was an agreement to sue another "in a short time," it was held that a delay of ten months was not within the meaning of the words. Murry v. Smith, 8 N. C. 41.

A contract to make title to real estate by a judicial sale contemplates no time for its completion inconsistent with the due course of the process of the law. Moorhead v. Gibson, 3 Grant (Pa.) 157.

37. "As soon as possible," "with all possible despatch," etc.—In Florence Gas, etc., Co. v. Hanby, 101 Ala. 15, 13 So. 343, it was held that a stipulation for the completion of work "as soon as possible" required its completion within a reasonable time, or within such time as was reasonably necessary under the circumstances. And in Rowan v. Sharps' Rifle Mfg. Co., 33 Conn. 1, it was held that a contract providing for the manufacture and delivery of certain articles "with all possible despatch" meant that the articles should be made and delivered within a reasonable time. So in Hinds v. Kellogg, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 922, where plaintiffs agreed to manufacture and deliver a quantity of soap wraps to the defendant "as soon as possible," and fifty days after approval of a design for the circulars they delivered a part of them, which defendant accepted and paid for, and plaintiffs tendered the remainder the next day, but defendant refused to accept them on the ground of non-delivery in time, it was held that the agreement meant within a reasonable time, under particular circumstances, and that acceptance by defendant of a part of the wraps was conclusive upon him that the delivery was within a reasonable time. But in Sentenne v. Kelly, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 512, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 529, 37 N. Y. St. 162, it was held that a contract to do a particular thing "as soon as possible" does not mean that it is to be done "within a reasonable time," but that it should be done with all possible expedition. In Rowlett v. Lane, 43 Tex. 274, it was held that an obligation to pay a sum of money "at the earliest possible moment" was conditional, and that it was incumbent on plaintiff suing thereon to prove the ability of the maker to pay the debt. And in Snodgrass v. Wolf, 11 W. Va. 158, it was held that the expression "as soon as possible," in a contract by one person to convey certain lands to another "as soon as possible," means under the circumstances as soon as it shall be within the vendor's power, or as soon as he has the ability to convey.

"Forthwith."—In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261, it was held that an agreement to do a certain thing "forthwith" means in a reasonable time. And in Adams v. Foster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 156, where the owner of a vessel had covenanted with the mortgagee thereof "forthwith as soon as may be" to sell the vessel "for the largest sum that he could reasonably obtain for her," and to pay the proceeds, deducting certain expenses and charges, to the mortgagee, it was held that the owner was entitled to a reasonable time, such as a man diligent in business would require, within which to make the necessary preparations for and to effect a sale, and that if the vessel was lost in the meantime the covenant was at an end.

"Immediately."—In Streeter v. Streeter, 43 Ill. 155, which was an action upon a contract to deliver up possession of certain premises "immediately" in consideration of the execution of certain notes, it was held error to instruct the jury that the word "immediately" meant "as soon as could practically be done."

At once and without delay.—In Sharp v. Johnston, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 520, 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 400, it was held that a contract to make three or four models of a machine at once, and without delay, means that the work shall be done as soon as it can reasonably be performed.

When "convenient."—Where a written contract contained a provision that a certain sum should be payable as convenient, it was held that it could not be construed so that it should not be payable at all, but only as an extension of credit. Black v. Bachelder, 120 Mass. 171. Thus where a contract for an insertion of an advertisement in plaintiff's publication provided that the consideration should be "payable as convenient," it was held that the phrase "payable as convenient" did not contemplate that the consideration should not be paid until merchandise sold by defendants on orders attributable to the advertisement should yield profits equal to the amount of the consideration, but was merely intended to provide for a reasonable indulgence on the part of plaintiffs. Black v. Bachelder, 120 Mass. 171. In Lewis v. Tipton, 10 Ohio St. 88, 75 Am. Dec. 498, it was held that where there was a promise to pay when convenient, and a stipulation was added that the note was to bear interest until paid, it was manifest that immediate payment was not contemplated by the parties, and that it was not payable until a reasonable time had elapsed. And in Barnett v. Bullett, 11 Ind. 310, it was held that an agreement to pay "as soon as he can, but is not to be pushed nor sued," may be sued whenever the debtor can reasonably afford to pay without sacrificing his property.

As soon as able.—Where plaintiff agreed to sell defendants certain stock, and defendants agreed to take it, and pay plaintiff a specified amount therefor; such payments to be made "as soon and fast as the purchasers were able, financially, to do so, without sacrificing their interests in, or the property of" such company, it was held that defendants were bound to perform such contract within such time as was reasonable for the disposition of their property. Fisher v. Hopkins, 4 Wyo. 379, 34 Pac. 899, 62 Am. Rep. 38.

"As soon as practicable."—One contracting to build a dam in a certain year, "or as soon thereafter as practicable," is not necessarily required to build the dam, if it is within the range of human means to do so. Reedy v. Smith, 42 Cal. 245.

dated or made is to be excluded.³⁸ Where the performance is to be on a certain day, or on or before a certain day, the party has the whole of that day to do it in.³⁹ So where it is to be within a specified time, the party bound has until the last moment of the last day.⁴⁰ Under a contract to deliver a thousand tons of bark per year for five years, a party has the whole of each year in which to deliver the thousand tons.⁴¹ A contract to complete a work by or before a particular time, as for example by or before the month of November, means that it shall be done before that time.⁴² Where under a contract an act is to be per-

38. Shelton v. Gillett, 79 Mich. 173, 44 N. W. 428, holding that in computing the time on a contract which provided for the conditional payment of a sum of money "at any time within five years," and, if the condition should not happen "within five years from the date," then payment should be made absolutely, the day on which the contract was executed must be excluded.

Georgia.—Perry v. Watts, 67 Ga. 602, holding that under a contract by defendant to put plaintiff in possession of a farm "on or before the 25th day of December," plaintiff could not recover for a breach on defendant's refusal to comply with his demand for possession made December 17.

Virginia.—Groves v. Graves, 1 Wash. 1, holding that where a person on October 1 promised another to pay him certain money on or before the 1st day of December following, and by the same writing the promisee agreed to receive such final settlement at any time before the 1st day of November, the money was payable on the 1st day of November.

United States.—Savary v. Goe, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,388, 3 Wash. 140, holding that if money is to be paid, or any other act to be done, on a certain day, and at a certain place, the legal time of performance is the last convenient hour of the day for transacting business; but, if the parties meet at any part of the day, a tender and refusal at the time of the meeting are sufficient.

England.—Kennedy v. Thomas, [1894] 2 Q. B. 759, 63 L. J. Q. B. 761, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 144, 9 Reports 564, 42 Wkly. Rep. 641.

Compare Genin v. Tompkins, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 265, holding that where, by the terms of a contract for the sale of stocks, the act of delivery and the payment are to be simultaneous, and the purchaser is not to pay on a particular day, but on the delivery of the stock, if the transfer of the stock is made without the cash being received at the same instant, the right to demand payment is not postponed until the next day, on the theory that a party to a contract to pay money on a certain day has the whole day in which to perform.

Where a lease provides that the lessee shall furnish security for the rent, he has the whole of the day on which the lease is to commence to furnish such security, even though he should have declined to furnish any other security upon the refusal of the lessor to accept what he offered at first. *Hard v. L. 593, where the court said: "The general rule, I conceive, is, that wherever, in cases not governed by particular customs of trade, the parties oblige themselves to the performance of duties within a certain number of days, they have until the last minute of the last day, to perform their obligation. The only qualification, that I am aware of, to this rule is, that in acts requiring time in order that they may be completely performed, the party must, at all events, tender to do the act at such a period before the end of the last day, as, if the tender be accepted, will leave him sufficient time to complete his performance before the end of that day. In the case of a mercantile contract, however, the opposite party is not bound to wait for such tender of performance beyond the usual hours of mercantile business, or at any other than the usual place at which the contract ought to be performed."

42. Rankin v. Woodworth, 3 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 48. See Richardson v. Ford, 14 Ill. 332 (holding that a contract to pay a sum of money "between now and the 1st of September" was not fulfilled by a tender of payment on the first day of September); Hounsford v. Fisher, Wright (Ohio) 580 (holding that a covenant to do an act before a certain day is not performed by doing the act on that day). But see Oatman v. Walker, 33 Me. 67, holding that where, by a contract dated November 25, 1848, a person bound himself to pay a certain sum if at the expiration of one year from the date the promisee should perform a certain act, the doing of the act by the promisee on the 26th of November, 1849, formed within a certain time from the date of the contract, and compensation is to be made therefor as soon as performed, it may be performed immediately, and compensation recovered before the specified time expires.⁴³ Where a place is fixed for the performance on a certain day, requiring the attendance of both parties there to complete it, in order to avoid an unnecessary attendance of either party, the law appoints the last convenient time of the day for both to attend for the purpose, and the promisor may protect himself from default by being then present at the place, prepared to pay or perform his contract, even if the promisee is not there; but it is also sufficient for him to tender the payment or performance at the place, if the promisee should happen to be there, at any time upon the day appointed.⁴⁴ If a place is fixed, but the performance may be at any time, it is for the promisor to give notice to the promisee of the time when he intends to pay or perform his contract.⁴⁵ Where a contract is made for the payment of specific articles, such as the payee shall select, at a place designated, but no time is fixed for the payment, such articles are payable on demand.⁴⁶ In contracts for the delivery of goods or the performance of labor, where no time or place is designated for the delivery or performance, a demand by the promisee upon the promisor is necessary to fix default upon the latter; but if both time and place be designated, no such demand is necessary.⁴⁷

b. Where No Time Is Fixed by Contract — (i) IN GENERAL. Where no time for performance is fixed by the contract, the law implies that the performance is to take place within a reasonable time.⁴⁸ This rule applies to a contract for the

was a seasonable performance, and entitled him to recover the money.

Completion of work within a certain time. — Where by a contract between plaintiff and defendant city the former bound himself, among other things, to put the shell roads of the city in good repair within sixty days thereafter, it was held that the obligation of the contractor was to complete the work within sixty days from the date of the contract, and not from the commencement of the work. *Carland v. Kentucky.— Philips v. Morrison, 3 Bibb 105, 106, 6 Am. Dec. 638, where the court said: "Where there is no time fixed for the performance, if the thing to be done be local, the party who has contracted the obligation to perform it, will have during his life to do it in, unless hastened by request; but if it be transitory, he will be bound to perform it in a convenient and reasonable time; and if he fail in the performance, although there may have been no special request, he will be liable for a breach of his contract. This distinction is abundantly established by English authorities, and was recognized by this court in the case of Clay v. Huston, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 461. A thing contracted to be done, may be local in its nature, or may be made so by the stipulation of the parties. But the duty which is covenanted to be performed in this case, is neither in its nature local, (for it might be done anywhere), nor is it made local by the covenant of the parties. It results, therefore, that the covenantor was bound to proceed immediately to the execution of the duty which he had covenanted to perform, and to complete the performance of it in a con-

Parol evidence.—In most jurisdictions where a contract is silent as to the time of performance, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was to be performed within a certain time, and thereby contradict the implication that it is to be performed within a reasonable time. *Liljengren Furniture, etc., Co. v. (II) WHAT IS A REASONABLE TIME. The question as to what is a reasonable time for the performance of a contract fixing no time for performance depends upon the nature of the contract and the particular circumstances. ⁶⁵ In deciding whether an undertaking has been performed within reasonable time, the material difficulties and hazards attending it, and the amount of diligence used, and frus-

Michigan.—Coon v. Spaulding, 47 Mich. 162, 10 N. W. 183 [following Stange v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 342], holding that where a contract for the pressing of hay is silent as to the time of performance, but the pressers are informed that they can do the pressing at any time after three weeks, a delay of more than twice that time is unreasonable, and does not entitle them to a performance, especially where it is late in the fall of the year, and the hay has to be drawn and delivered by the owner at a certain place after being pressed. See also Grant v. Merchants', etc., Bank, 35 Mich. 515, holding that a reasonable time to supply lumber sufficient to fill a contract for a certain number of feet above that contained in a certain boom would be such time as would be required, in the usual and customary manner of rafting, by the boom company, to obtain and make up the requisite quantity.

Mississippi.—Magee v. Catching, 33 Miss. 672, holding that a contract for a repurchase of land, stipulating no time for performance, must be performed within a reasonable time, which means such time as would bar the plaintiff's remedy if the defendant's possession had been from the beginning adverse.

New Hampshire.—Goodall v. Streeter, 16 N. H. 97.

Pennsylvania.—Hoffman v. Bloomsburg, etc., R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 174, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 60, 27 Atl. 564, holding that a delay of three years in the construction of a railroad after an agreement for a right of way was executed was not unreasonable, in view of trated attempts at performance, should be considered.⁶⁶ Some of the cases hold that the question is one of law for the court,⁶⁷ while others hold that it is a question of fact for the jury.⁶⁸ The proper view is that what is a reasonable time within which a contract must be performed is a matter of law for the court, the nature of the work to be done, including the organization of a company, and the raising of money necessary for the enterprise, where time was not declared to be of the essence of the contract.

South Carolina.—Smith v. Spratt Mach. Co., 46 S. C. 511, 24 S. E. 376, holding that where, in a contract for the manufacture of material, no time was specified for its performance, in determining what would be a reasonable time, regard must be had to the capacity of the manufacturer's plant, although the other party was unaware of its capacity; and such question was not to be determined from the time in which manufacturers in general would have performed the contract.

Texas.—Hart v. Bullion, 48 Tex. 278, holding that in the absence of a stipulation as to the time when an act is contracted to be done, the law allows a reasonable time for its performance, and that what is reasonable time depends upon the nature and character of the thing to be done, the circumstances of the case, and the difficulties attending its accomplishment.

Vermont.—Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620, holding that where defendant contracted to put certain machinery in plaintiff's mill, and no time was expressly limited, it would be taken that the parties meant the work to be done within a reasonable time in reference to the nature and extent of the work to be done; and if the defendant abandoned his contract, claiming it was completed, he could not afterward claim that a reasonable time in which to complete the work had not elapsed.

United States.—Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. 560, 22 L. ed. 161 (holding that five years was more than a reasonable time within which to perform a contract to pay money "as soon as the crop can be sold, or the money raised from any other source"); Frame v. The Ella, 48 Fed. 569; Cocker v. Franklin Hemp, etc., Mfg. Co., 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,932, 3 Sumn. 530 (holding that where a written contract does not specify any time of performance, the question of reasonable time is determined by a view of all the circumstances of the case; and parol evidence of the conversations of the parties may be admitted, to show the circumstances under which the contract was made, and what the parties thought was a reasonable time for performing it).

when it depends upon the construction of a contract in writing or upon undisputed extrinsic facts,⁶⁹ and that it is a question of fact for the jury when it depends upon facts extrinsic to the contract, and which are matters in dispute.⁷⁰

5. PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONAL PROMISES — a. In General. A promise may be conditional, that is, the performance may be due, not immediately, but only after the lapse of time or the happening of a future event. In such cases as a rule the condition precedent must be exactly performed or fulfilled before the promise can be enforced.⁷¹ But until a party is put in default he may perform a condition for which the contract fixes no time.⁷² When the performance of an agreement depends on an act to be done by the plaintiff, the doing of such an act is a condition precedent; and the court will not inquire whether the doing of it be beneficial to the defendant.⁷³ So whenever the entire consideration of the demand claimed is stipulated to be performed at or previous to the performance of the demand, the performance of the consideration becomes a condition precedent.⁷⁴

b. Conditional Upon Time. A contract may be conditioned to be executed, or a debt may be made payable, at a future time, and here the specified time must elapse before the performance of the contract or the debt becomes absolutely due.⁷⁵

c. Conditional Upon Future Event. Contracts may also be conditional upon the happening of some event, the happening of which is certain, but the time of happening of which is uncertain, or upon the happening of some event or contingency which is altogether uncertain;⁷⁶ as in the case of a contract to pay money when a certain residuary share of an estate comes to the hands of the payee, so that the amount thereof can be ascertained;⁷⁷ a contract to purchase, "provided titles can be approved and made";⁷⁸ a subscription to a particular purpose, provided a certain further sum is subscribed;⁷⁹ a sale of goods at auction to be paid for in an approved note at six months;⁸⁰ or a sale of goods if the seller has the goods on hand at the time.⁸¹ Where a debt is in fact due, and it is agreed that it shall be paid upon the happening of a future event, and the event does not happen, it is held that the law implies a promise to pay within a reasonable time.⁸²

d. Conditional Upon Specified Fund. A contract or promise to pay may be restricted to a particular fund, so as to make the raising or the sufficiency of the fund a condition precedent to the liability; as in the case of a promise or covenant to pay money, if the capital and funds of a company are sufficient, or out of the calls upon the shares of the company;⁸³ or a promise to pay out of the rents of a certain building;⁸⁴ and like cases.⁸⁵

e. Conditional Upon Request or Demand. A contract may be conditioned upon a request or demand of performance. The making of the request or demand is then necessary to render the contract absolute, and in an action for a breach of the contract it must be alleged and proved.⁸⁶ An action is not sustainable upon a note payable in specific articles on demand, without proof of a special

Illustrations.—Thus where the defendant acknowledged that he owed the plaintiff a certain sum, and promised to pay it as soon as a crop should be sold or the money could be raised from any other source, it was held that the money was due within a reasonable time. The court said: "No time having been specified within which the crop should be sold or the money raised otherwise, the law annexed as an incident that one or the other should be done within reasonable time, and that the sum admitted to be due should be paid accordingly. Payment was not conditional to the extent of depending wholly and finally upon the alternatives mentioned. The stipulations secured to the defendants a reasonable amount of time within which to procure in one mode or the other the means necessary to meet the liability. Upon the occurrence of either of the events named, or the lapse of such time, the debt became due. It could not have been the intention of the parties that if the crop were destroyed, or from any other cause could never be sold, and the defendants could not procure the money from any other source, the debt should never be paid. Such a result would be a mockery of justice." Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 22 L. ed. 161. In Walton v. Maskell, 2 D. & L. 410, 415, 14 L. J. Exch. 54, 13 M. & W. 548, it was said: "A request is quite immaterial, unless the parties to a contract have stipulated that it shall be made; if they have not done so, the law requires no notice or request; but the debtor is bound to find out the creditor and pay him."

"On reasonable request."—A provision in a contract that a payment shall be made by a party "on reasonable request" imports an agreement to pay within a reasonable time after request. Illinois Land, etc., Co. v. Beem, 2 Ill. App. 390.

"If at any time required."—Where each party to a contract stipulates to give the other security for performance, "if at any time required" by him, if security is demanded by either the other must furnish it within a reasonable time after demand. Blackwell v. Fosters, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 88.

On presentment on a certain day.—A contract to pay a note on presentment on a certain day is not a continuing obligation, under which the person promising to pay is bound to pay the note on its being presented after the time agreed upon. Hynson v. Pugh, 38 La. Ann. 68.

demand.⁸⁷ On a promise to deliver goods, where no time is mentioned, a demand is necessary before beginning suit.⁸⁸ Unless the contract so provides the demand need not be in writing.⁸⁹

f. Conditional Upon Notice. A contract may also be conditional upon notice of some matter being given; and notice must be given accordingly, in order to render the promise absolute, and must be alleged and proved in an action brought upon it. A party contracting to do an act upon the happening of some event is not in general entitled to notice of that event as a condition precedent, unless he has expressly stipulated for it; but in some cases it is necessarily implied from the nature of the transaction that notice shall be given, although not expressly stipulated for.⁹⁰ No notice is necessary to be given to a defendant of the happening of a contingency, if by the contract he has provided himself with the means of ascertaining the fact.⁹¹ If there is a mutual departure from the terms of a contract, and afterward one of the parties concludes thenceforth to stand on the letter of the contract, he must notify the other.⁹² Where it is provided that a contract may be terminated by a written notice for thirty days, the notice if given may be recalled within that time.⁹³

g. Conditional Upon Act or Will of Third Person. A promise may be conditional upon the act or will of a third person.⁹⁴ A frequent example of such promises occurs in the case of building contracts where the approval of the architect or some third person is required before payment is due.⁹⁵ And where it is agreed by the parties that quantity, price, or quality is to be left to the opinion and determination of a third person, his judgment or estimate is binding, in the absence of fraud or mistake;⁹⁶ although it is otherwise where it is based on wrong

Statement of the rule.—"Where a party stipulates to do a thing in a certain specific event, which may become known to him, or with which he can make himself acquainted, he is not entitled to any notice, unless he stipulates for it; but when it is to do a thing which lies within the peculiar knowledge of the opposite party, then notice ought to be given him." Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 M. & W. 442, 452, 8 Dowl. P. C. 377, 4 Jur. 509.

The reason of the rule is, "that when a thing is in the knowledge of the plaintiff, but cannot be in the knowledge of the defendant, but the defendant can only guess or speculate about the matter, then notice is necessary." Bramwell, B., in Makin v. Watkinson, L. R. 6 Exch. 25, 30, 40 L. J. Exch. 33, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 592, 19 Wkly. Rep. 286. And see Birdseye v. Davis, 2 McCord (S. C.) 296.

views of the contract,⁹⁷ or where he cannot freely exercise his judgment.⁹⁸ Where a town voted to allow one of two persons having claims against it growing out of the same transaction seven hundred dollars, provided the other person would accept two hundred dollars, it was held, on the other's refusal to accept two hundred dollars, that the first could not maintain an action against the town for the seven hundred dollars.⁹⁹ And where a policy of fire insurance was conditioned that the minister of the parish should give a certificate as to the character of the insured and the bona fide nature of the loss, it was held that the insured could not recover without such certificate, although the minister unreasonably refused to give it.¹

h. Conditional Upon Act or Will of Promisor. A promise which is made conditional upon the will of the promisor is generally of no value, for one who promises to do a thing only if it pleases him to do it, is not bound to perform it at all. For example agreements for service where the remuneration is left entirely to the employer create no binding contract to pay anything.² A covenant by a person to build such a house as he may think fit binds him to nothing; and a grant of land made in consideration of such a covenant has been held to be purely voluntary.³ So where a person agrees to furnish lumber in such quantities as he may "deem fit and advisable," it has been held that he may cease furnishing the lumber whenever he pleases.⁴

i. Performance to Satisfaction of Promisor — (I) IN GENERAL. Contracts are frequently the subject of litigation in which the promisor agrees to pay for work or goods provided he is satisfied with them. The cases of this character may conveniently be put under two heads: (1) Where the fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment of the promisor are involved, and (2) where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility.⁵

(II) CASES OF FANCY, TASTE, OR JUDGMENT. The personal thread which runs through agreements of this class has caused a unanimity of judicial opinion that here at least the promisee is practically debarred from questioning the

So where a contract was made for the sale of a horse at the price of one shilling, but with the condition that if the horse should trot eighteen miles in an hour to the satisfaction of a person appointed as judge of the performance, the buyer should pay the price of two hundred pounds, and the judge refused to attend, without any default in the buyer, it was held that the seller was bound to deliver the horse at the price of one shilling. Brogden v. Marriott, 2 Bing.

N. Cas. 473, 29 E. C. L. 623. So where plaintiff sold fruit on the trees, agreeing that the vendee should gather it without molestation, the vendee found that those in possession would let him gather part, but that he could not get the rest without a fight, it was held that the contract was indivisible, and that he might refuse to take any, and recover damages as for a total breach. Dabovich v. Emeric, 12 Cal. 171. Where a corporation agreed with plaintiff to purchase from him large quantities of coal to be delivered daily, of a quality to be satisfactory to the master of transportation and master of machinery of the corporation, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to require the exercise of an honest, fair, and just judgment before the coal could be rejected, and that it could not be condemned once for all, plaintiff having the right to tender it under the contract each day. *Baltimore, etc., R. ground of decision on the part of the promisor or investigating its propriety. The courts refuse to say that where a man agrees to pay if he is satisfied with a thing of this kind he can be compelled to pay on proof that someone else is satisfied with it. They recognize that in matters of fancy, taste, or judgment there is no absolute standard as to what is good or bad, and leave each man free to act on his ideas or prejudices as the case may be. Hence we find that where the subject-matter of the contract was a suit of clothes,⁶ a bust of the defendant's husband,⁷ a portrait of the defendant's daughter,⁸ a cabinet organ,⁹ a set of artificial teeth,¹⁰ a carriage,¹¹ a steam-heater for a house,¹² a play to be written by an author for an actor,¹³ a literary or scientific article for an encyclopedia,¹⁴ a design for a bank-note,¹⁵ and horses,¹⁶ it has been held that the question was not one for court or jury to decide, but for the promisor alone. And so it has been held of a contract giving a master a right to discharge a servant if he is satisfied that the servant is incompetent,¹⁷ of a contract to employ a person so long as he is satisfactory,¹⁸ and of a contract to pay for services if they are satisfactory.¹⁹ The same conclusion was reached in a case where a son agreed to support his father during his life, but stipulated that if at any time the latter should become dissatisfied with living with him, he would pay his board elsewhere.²⁰

The rule also applies to a contract providing that security for its performance shall be satisfactory.²¹

(III) CASES OF OPERATIVE FITNESS OR MECHANICAL UTILITY—(A) In General. There is no good reason why in cases of operative fitness or mechanical utility the same principle of law should not be applied. Although the thing to be done may not involve the feelings, taste, sensibility, or personal opinion of the promisor, yet he, in making the contract, may not have been willing to leave his freedom of choice exposed to any contention or subject to any contingency. He is resolved to permit no right in any one else to judge for him or to pass on the wisdom or unwisdom, the justice or injustice, of his action. Such is his will. He will not enter into any bargain except upon the condition of reserving the power to do what others might regard as unreasonable. And as there is assuredly no law which prevents a person from making contracts of this kind if he chooses, the courts should not hesitate to enforce them. The agreement is in short not to make or do a thing which the promisor ought to be satisfied with, and therefore ought to pay for, but to make or do a thing which he is satisfied with. Such a contract may be one-sided in being dependent upon the caprice of one of the parties; it may be an unwise contract to make; but if it is entered into voluntarily, the promisee is bound, and can have no right to ask a court to alter its terms in his favor. This view of the matter is the only logical one, and has been taken in a number of cases, as for example where the subject-matter of the agreement was the making of a bookcase,²² the sale of a harvesting machine,²³ a steam fire-engine,²⁴ a cord binder,²⁵ a steamboat,²⁶ an elevator,²⁷ steam fans for exhausting smoke,²⁸ a printing-press,²⁹ a grain-binder,³⁰ a machine for generating gas,³¹ a fanning-mill,³² and an equipment for melting brass.³³ The sole right to determine has also been held to be vested in the promisor where he has agreed to pay such compensation as he should deem or think right;³⁴ where he has agreed that if at any time the character of an employee's work, on the increase of business secured by him, should "fairly justify a change of mind on the part of the conductors of defendant's business" his salary should be increased;³⁵ and in other cases.³⁶ "Satisfactory" in such cases means satisfacright to be dissatisfied with living in his family; for the party by the express terms of his contract has made his own feelings the sole judge of the matter. Contentment and satisfaction with a man's position in a particular family, is a matter which the law will not assume to determine for him. Neither will it do the converse, and say he had no cause to be discontented and dissatisfied and therefore he cannot be regarded as dissatisfied. The agreeableness or disagreeableness of the society and state of things about him in the family are left to his own tastes and feelings to determine."

21. In McGrath v. Brown, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 481, plaintiffs, desiring to rent a store owned by defendant, inquired of him by letter whether he would rent it to them for five years, and defendant replied, saying they could have a lease of the store for five years at a certain rent if the security they offered was satisfactory. Plaintiffs offered a certain person as security, and defendant upon inquiry concluded not to accept him, and so informed them. It was held that no agreement was concluded between the parties whereby defendant was bound to lease the store to plaintiffs.

tory to the promisor if the contract is silent as to the person to whom the work, etc., shall be satisfactory.⁸⁷

(B) Conflicting Decisions. There are some cases which are apparently in conflict with the rule stated in the preceding section, but which may perhaps be distinguished on the ground that there was not merely an executory contract of sale, but an executed contract under which material had been furnished and work done,⁸⁸ on the ground that there were qualifying words showing that it was not the intention to leave the question of satisfaction entirely to the promisor,⁸⁹ on debtor agrees to pay a sum of money whenever in his opinion his circumstances will enable him to do so. It has been held that the agreement imposes no legal obligation which can be enforced by action, as he is the sole judge of his ability. "Every other person," it has been said, "might swear the circumstances of the debtor make him abundantly able to pay, yet, that did not determine his legal liability." Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. St. 352. And there are a number of decisions where the provision in a chattel mortgage that the mortgagee may take possession of the chattels whenever he deems himself "insecure" or "unsafe" is held to give him an absolute discretion which does not depend upon whether or not there exists reasonable grounds for his action. Werner v. Bergman, 28 Kan. 60, 42 Am. Rep. 152; Allen v. Vose, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 57; Barrrett v. Hart, 42 Ohio St. 41, 51 Am. Rep. 801; Cline v. Libby, 46 Wis. 123, 49 N. W. 832, 32 Am. St. Rep. 700. This view is, however, opposed in Illinois. Roy v. Goings, 96 Ill. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 151. See CHATTEL MORTGAGES, 7 Cyc. 12.

The right view of contracts of this kind is taken by the supreme court of appeals of Virginia in Averett v. Lipscombe, 76 Va. 404, 408. Here at an auction sale of real estate it was announced by the auctioneer that any purchaser should have the right to examine the title, and if he was not satisfied with it he would not be required to comply with the terms of the sale. The defendant, to whom the land was knocked down, refused to complete the purchase on the ground that he was not satisfied with the title. Specific performance of the agreement was refused. "It is immaterial," said Burke, J., "that this court now considers that the vendors were and are able to make good title. That is not the question. The contract left it to the purchaser to determine for himself the matter of title. If, on examination, he was not in good faith satisfied with the title, he was not to be bound. The bargain was at end." The court cited Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78, 29 Rev. Rep. 61, 2 Eng. Ch. 78, a very similar case. And see Church v. Shanklin, 95 Cal. 626, 30 Pac. 789, 17 L. R. A. 207, where it is held that a vendee cannot be compelled to accept a title which is in fact perfect, but which his attorney in good faith refuses to approve, where the contract requires the title to be perfected to the "satisfaction" of such attorney.

37. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Chesrown, 33 Minn. 32, 21 N. W. 846; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. St. 291, 2 Atl. 230, 56 Am. Rep. 207. This is surely the only sensible construction of such words. Barry v. Rainey, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 766. As was well put by Mr. Justice Brown in a federal case: "When, in common language, we speak of making a thing satisfactory, we mean it shall be satisfactory to the person to whom we furnish it. It would be nonsense to say it should be satisfactory to the vendor. It would be indefinite to say that it should be satisfactory to a third person, without designating the person. It can only be intended that it shall be satisfactory to the person who is himself interested in its satisfactory operation, and that is the vendee." Campbell Printing-Press Co. v. Thorp, 36 Fed. 414, 418, 1 L. R. A. 645. Otherwise the condition has no meaning at all. If goods ordered for a particular purpose are not reasonably fit for the purpose of which as a question of fact the jury is the judge, then the contract has not been performed on the plaintiff's part and the defendant is not obliged to accept, even had there been no such clause or condition in the contract. Wood Reaping, etc., Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 565, 15 N. W. 906, 40 Am. Rep. 57; Hart v. Hart, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 606.

38. The fact that the contractor would lose the fruit of his labor and the value of his material through no fault of his, if payment were left to the will of the defendant, has induced some courts to give a construction to the contract which would probably not have been given in the case of an executory contract, where the seller would simply have been left with the rejected goods on his hands. Thus in Hawkins v. Graham, 149 Mass. 284, 21 N. E. 312, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422, where the agreement was to furnish and set up in complete and first-class working order a system of heating apparatus, the payment to be made in the event of the system proving satisfactory, and conforming with all the requirements, after such acknowledgment should be made by the owner, "or the work demonstrated," it was held that the construction of the contract was that if the work was demonstrated, it was satisfactory, although the owner had not acknowledged it, and that therefore the satisfactoriness of the system and the risk taken by the plaintiff were to be determined by the mind of a reasonable man, and by the external measure set forth in the contract; not by the private taste or liking of the defendant.

39. In Doll v. Noble, 116 N. Y. 230, 231, 22 N. E. 406, 26 N. Y. St. 629, 15 Am. St. Rep. 398, 5 L. R. A. 554, where the action the ground that the work had been accepted,⁴⁰ or on the ground that the provision was to recover a balance due on a written contract under which the plaintiff agreed to do polishing, staining, and rubbing on the woodwork of two houses owned by the defendant "in the best workmanlike manner under the supervision of William Packard, superintendent, and to the entire satisfaction of William Noble, the party of the first part, owner," it was ruled that the clause as to the owner's satisfaction was qualified by the provision that it was to be done in a workmanlike manner, and that the latter was thereby made the test of a correct and full performance. And see Russell v. Allerton, 108 N. Y. 288, 15 N. E. 391. So also in Clark v. Rice, 46 Mich. 308, 9 N. W. 427, where the agreement was to pay for a patent heater "if on trial for 30 days the machine is satisfactory, or does what is claimed for it," it was properly held that the purchaser was bound to pay for the machine if it did what was claimed it would do, even though it was not satisfactory to him. And in McNeil v. Armstrong, 81 Fed. 943, 27 C. C. A. 16, where a building contract provided that the work was to be done according to certain plans and specifications, materials furnished to be of the best, and to be to the entire satisfaction of the architect and owner, it was ruled that if it appeared that the materials furnished were satisfactory, and the work was done according to the plans and specifications, the contractor was entitled to recover. The court said that as the contract was drawn up by the defendant, the well-settled rule was applicable, that in case of doubt or ambiguity the words are to be taken most strongly against the party employing them, and such construction adopted as is most favorable to the other party. In Mobile Electric Lighting Co. v. Elder, 115 Ala. 138, 153, 21 So. 983, a contract by plaintiffs to sink for defendant an artesian well provided that the well should have a certain flow, and that materials and workmanship should be first-class; that the water should be deep strata water, as water from intermediate strata "is likely to be of such quality as is not adapted to the use" of defendant; that payment should be made after the "satisfactory completion" of the well and compliance with other conditions; and that plaintiffs undertook the work at their own risk, and failing to obtain water in the quantity and on the conditions provided, should receive no pay. The supreme court, before proceeding to the construction of the contract in dispute, announced the general rule of law on the subject: There is, it said in substance, no reason of public policy which prevents parties to a contract for the performance of work from agreeing that the decision of one or the other, or of a third person, as to the sufficiency of the performance shall be conclusive. Having voluntarily assumed the obligations and risks of a contract, their legal rights and liabilities are to be determined solely according to its provisions. This is notably so where the matter is one of taste or fancy, but also where the contract is to furnish a piece of machinery or other article, the suitability of which involves a question of mechanical fitness to do certain work or accomplish a certain purpose. The only limitation is that the party must fairly and honestly test the work and be dissatisfied in good faith. Continuing, the court said: "There are a few cases which seem to hold that 'that which the law will say a contracting party ought in reason to be satisfied with, the law will say he is satisfied with;' and they submit to judicial triers the question, not whether he is satisfied, but whether as a reasonable man he ought to be satisfied. But in these cases it will be found that there is some peculiarity in the subject-matter of the contract, as in Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. Garden, 101 N. Y. 387, 4 N. E. 749, 54 Am. Rep. 709, where the contract was to make certain repairs, which, being made, though not entirely satisfactory, were used and enjoyed by the employer; or the case of Pope Iron, etc., Co. v. Best, 14 Mo. App. 502, 503, where also the fruits of the labor of the one party were retained and enjoyed by the other." Turning at last to the construction of the contract, the court held that under its terms the defendant assumed the risk of any deep strata water being suitable for its use, and could not avoid payment on the ground that it was not. "It is," said the court, "not the well with which, by the terms of the contract, defendant is to be satisfied, but the completion of the well by plaintiffs in substantial compliance with their promises. The dissatisfaction, which can be set up as a defense to the action, must not be caused, in whole or in part, by the quality of the water, nor by any considerations other than such as are connected with the sufficiency of plaintiffs' performance of their contractual obligations." And see Hoyle v. Stellwagen, 28 Ind. App. 681, 63 N. E. 780; Schliess v. Grand Rapids, (Mich. 1902) 90 N. W. 700; Elizabeth v. Fitzgerald, 114 Fed. 547, 52 C. C. A. 321.

40. In Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. Garden, 101 N. Y. 387, 389, 4 N. E. 749, 54 Am. Rep. 709, the plaintiff agreed to alter the defendants' boilers, the price to be paid as soon as the defendants "are satisfied that the boilers as changed are a success, and will not leak under a pressure of one hundred pounds of steam." The work was completed; the defendants made it available and continued to use it without objection or complaint until being sued for the compensation they set up the plea of dissatisfaction. The facts clearly showed a waiver on their part, and a mere allegation of dissatisfaction was held no answer to the action. See also Logan v. Berkshire Apartment Assoc., 18 N. Y. Suppl. 164, 46 N. Y. St. 14, 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 18, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 369, 48 N. Y. St. 36 [affirmed in 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 296, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 776, 52 N. Y. St. 132]. In Keeler v. Clifford, 165

Ill. 544, 549, 46 N. E. 248, a contract for grading provided for the payment of an instalment of the price as each one-fourth part of the work was finished. The contract provided that "all of said grading is to be done to the satisfaction of" the defendant. The plaintiff completed three-fourths of the work, but as the defendant refused to pay he abandoned the contract and sued for the value of what he had done. The supreme court held that he was entitled to recover the price agreed upon for the finished portion of the work, and that an instruction that if the jury should find from the evidence that the work which was performed by the plaintiff, and the grading done by him were not done to the satisfaction of the defendant, then their verdict should be in favor of the defendant, was properly refused. The court gave as the reason for the decision that "where a contract is required to be done to the satisfaction of one of the parties, the meaning necessarily is, that it must be done in a manner satisfactory to the mind of a reasonable man." The ruling was probably correct, as three quarters of the work had been done and three payments had been neglected, so that it was rather late for defendant to set up his dissatisfaction, but the principle asserted by the court to sustain its position is not supported by the weight of authority.

41. In Pope Iron, etc., Co. v. Best, 14 Mo. App. 502, the action was brought to recover damages for the breach of a contract, whereby the defendant agreed to build a furnace which he guaranteed would work "satisfactorily" in melting iron, and which was to be paid for as soon as the first heat was "satisfactorily run off." The defendant filed a counter-claim for the balance due him in erecting the furnace. A verdict for the defendant on the plaintiff's claim and his own counter-claim was affirmed on appeal. The decision is right, although the legal grounds on which it is really based are not clearly stated. The plaintiff by bringing his action for damages treated the words of the contract "guarantee the said furnace to work satisfactorily" as a warranty, as they really were, and not as a mere suspensory condition. In this view the words must have meant that it should work satisfactorily to a reasonable and fair-minded man who was an expert on such matters.

42. Cases really discordant.—In Mullally v. Greenwood, 127 Mo. 138, 146, 29 S. W. 1001, 48 Am. St. Rep. 613, the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff a certain commission if he negotiated a "satisfactory lease" of certain premises. The plaintiff negotiated a lease which the defendant claimed was not satisfactory. The trial court left it to the jury to say whether the lease was a satisfactory lease as a matter of fact; which action was affirmed in the supreme court, Burgess, J., saying: "The court would not have been justified, from the facts and circumstances as disclosed, in holding that the plaintiff intended to submit the result of his labors to the caprice of defendants or any one of them, to be approved or rejected at will, regardless of any just cause or excuse therefor. We are not disposed to construe those words so as to procure a result so disastrous to plaintiff and inconsistent with the ordinary experience of mankind." Yet in the same court, in a subsequent case already referred to (Blaine v. Knapp, 140 Mo. 241, 249, 41 S. W. 757) a different view was taken where the agreement was to pay for services as an advertising solicitor of a newspaper. The result was equally "disastrous to plaintiff," but as the same judge very properly put it, "This was his contract, and by its terms the law must be meted out to him." In Folliard v. Wallace, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 402, an early New York case, the action was one of covenant. Land had been sold and conveyed upon a consideration payable three months after the vendee should be well satisfied that they held the said six hundred acres of land undisputed by any person whatsoever. The plea was that the defendants were not satisfied that the said land can be held undisputed by any person whatsoever and a claim in favor of certain third persons was said to exist. The replication set up that the claim said to be outstanding had been decided under an arbitration some time previous. The plea was held bad, Kent, C. J., saying: "Nor will it do for the defendant to say he was not satisfied with his title, without showing some lawful encumbrance or claim existing against it. A simple allegation of dissatisfaction, without some good reason assigned for it, must be a mere pretext, and cannot be regarded. If the defendant were left at liberty to judge for himself when he was satisfied, it would totally destroy the obligation, and the agreement would be absolutely void. But here was a real obligation contracted, and the true and sound principle is laid down in Pothier that, if A promises to give something to B in case he should judge it reasonable, it is not left to A's choice to give it or not, since he is obliged to do so, in case it be reasonable. The law in this case will determine for the defendant when he ought to be satisfied." In several other New York cases, nearly all of them in intermediate courts, Folliard v. Wallace, supra, is followed. Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Sullivan v. Frazier, 40 N. Y. App. Div. 288, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1008; Burns v. Munger, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 75; Wetterswulgh v. Knickerbocker Bldg. Assoc., 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 381; Brall v. Clausen, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 129, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 341; Fischer v. Conhaim, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 125, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 315; Hummel v. Stern, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 27, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 443, 71 N. Y. St. 494 [affirmed in 21 N. Y. App. Div. 544, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 528]. And see Smith v. Robson, 148 N. Y. 252, 42 N. E. 677. And

(iv) BAD FAITH. In the cases above referred to the promisor must act nonestly and in good faith. His dissatisfaction must be actual and not feigned; real and not merely pretended.⁴³ He must, if a test is necessary to determine fitness, give that test or allow it to be made.⁴⁴

(v) CONDITION A SUSPENSORY ONE. In the case of a sale of goods to be accepted or paid for, if "satisfactory," the condition is a suspensory one, that is, it suspends the obligations of both parties until the purchaser's satisfaction is gained or waived.⁴⁵ Hence the fact that the goods are not satisfactory does not give him a right to reject them and claim damages for breach of contract of the seller, as would be the case if there were a warranty that the goods were fit for the purpose and they were not,⁴⁶ nor to keep them and recover damages in an action for the purchase-price.⁴⁷

If the purchaser is in fact satisfied, but fraudulently and in bad faith declares that he is not, the condition is performed. Silby Mfg. Co. v. Chico, 24 Fed. 893. Illustrations.—If an employer for example agrees to pay for services if they are satisfactory to him, he will certainly be under an obligation to give the employee a trial. So if a man should order a suit of clothes and agree to pay for them if they suited him he would certainly be obliged to try it on. Daggett v. Johnson, 49 Vt. 345. So an article to be manufactured cannot be rejected before it is substantially completed, so that the promisor will be able fairly to determine whether it is or will be satisfactory to him. *Singerly v. 47. In Campbell Printing Press Co. v. Thorp, 36 Fed. 414, 418, 1 L. R. A. 645, Mr. Justice Brown said: "This undoubtedly gave them the power to reject the machines. . . . Had the covenant been that the presses shall work well, we should have no doubt that the defendants might have recouped such damages, and that the referee would have found them capable of estimation. These damages would have been the difference in value between presses which would work reasonably well and those which were actually furnished. But in attempting to apply the same rule in the present case, we encounter a formidable difficulty from the impossibility of fixing the value of machines which shall work to the satisfaction of the defendants. It will not do to say that such value is to be gauged by that of a machine which shall work reasonably well, because such a press might not have been satisfactory to the vendee, or he might have been content with one which would not have worked to the satisfaction of experts in the business." The court overlooked the real state of the case, as shown above, viz., that the condition was merely suspensory, and until it was performed or waived, there was no sale. The difficulty of assessing the damages has nothing to do with the result, the reason preventing the claim for damages being that having elected to retain the machines, they waived the performance of the condition and became liable for the purchase-price. The non-fulfilment of a condition of this kind is in short available only as a defense to the person in whose favor it is made and does not subject the other to any liability. A suspensory condition is to be distinguished from a promissory condition. In the latter case, while it is a condition precedent to the liability of one party, the other is nevertheless under an obligation to perform it, or he will be liable in damages. Hunt v. Livermore, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 395. In Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me. 147, the defendant

(VI) WAIVER OF CONDITION. The condition is waived by retaining the article or by failing within a reasonable time to notify the seller that it is not satisfactory.⁴⁸ But if the seller is so notified, the buyer is not required, in the absence of a special agreement, to return it.⁴⁹

6. DISCHARGE BY PAYMENT OR TENDER. A contract to pay money is discharged of course by a valid payment in accordance with its terms.⁵⁰ A contract may also be discharged by a tender, which is an offer or attempt to perform. A proper offer to do something promised and its refusal by the promisee discharge the promisor from the contract; but an offer to pay something and its refusal by the promisee do not discharge the debt, but prevent the promisee from recovering more than the amount tendered and in an action by the promisee entitle the promisor to recover his costs.⁵¹

D. Discharge by Impossibility of Performance — 1. IN GENERAL. A contract is not invalid, nor is the promisor discharged, merely because it turns out to be difficult, unreasonable, dangerous, or burdensome.⁵² Thus one who sells goods agreed to take and pay for certain machines to be made according to a model to be furnished by him. The plaintiff agreed to have them finished and ready for delivery by a certain day. The defendant never furnished a model, whereupon the plaintiff purchased a model, made the machines, and then sued the defendant for the purchase-price. The plaintiff was held not entitled to recover. But the plaintiff, on the defendant's refusal to supply the models, would have had a right of action for damages, for the defendant had promised, in law, to supply the models. The case may be stated thus: A agrees to pay for a machine to be made by B and agrees to furnish a model by which B is to build it. B is not obliged to make the machine unless A furnishes the model, but if A does not do so he breaks one of his promises, and may be sued for the breach by B. If A does furnish the model B must make the machine or pay damages. The case of the suspensory condition may be stated thus: A agrees to make B a "satisfactory" coat. If A makes the coat B is not obliged to perform his promise (i. e., pay for it) unless it is satisfactory to him. B cannot keep the coat and sue A because it is not satisfactory, nor can B reject it and sue A for not making him a satisfactory coat; nor, it would seem, if A fails to make a coat at all can B sue A; for in such a case there is no mutuality, B not being bound to anything. Nothing can be more contradictory to the idea of contractual obligation, than a liability on the part of one of the promisors to perform or not as he pleases. Hunt v. Livermore, 5 Pick. Arkansas.—Cassady v. Clarke, 7 Ark. 123, holding that inability to perform a covenant, by reason of sickness or otherwise, unless performance is prevented by the act of the covenantee, is no excuse for its non-performance.

Illinois.—Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527 (holding that where the lessee of coal-mines covenants, by the terms of his lease, to work the same during the continuance of his lease in a good and workmanlike manner, he is liable for a breach of his covenant, notwithstanding it may be beyond his power to perform it); Bunn v. Prather, 21 Ill. 217; Kennwood Bridge Co. v. Dunderdale, 50 Ill. New York.—Tobias v. Lissberger, 105 N. Y. 404, 12 N. E. 13, 59 Am. Rep. 509. In this case defendant, of New York, contracted with plaintiffs on February 2 for the prompt shipment of a lot of old iron from Europe. The shipment was made on the next day from a German port, but the river below was frozen over, and remained closed to navigation until April, and defendant refused to accept the iron when tendered to him in June. Similar iron could have been shipped promptly from other ports. It was held that defendant was justified in his refusal to accept. See also Devlin v. New York, 4 Duer 337, where plaintiff contracted "to excavate and build a good, firm, and substantial sewer," specifying particularly the prices to be paid for "all the excavation, whether hard-pan, quicksand, caves, or otherwise," and "for the blasting and removing of rocks," and claimed extra payment above the contract price. It was held that no evidence was admissible to show that extra work had been done, or to show that it was rendered necessary by the discovery on the line of the sewer of a kind of rock not before known in New York, and much more difficult of removal than those usually found, and of a quality which could not possibly have been contemplated in making the contract. And see Sherman v. New York, 1 N. Y. 316; Beebe v. Johnson, 19 Wend. 500, 32 Am. Dec. 518 (holding that a citizen of the United States was liable for a breach of his contract to obtain a patent in England to give the patentee the exclusive right to sell an article in Canada, although under the existing laws of England and Canada such a patent could not be obtained in England, and could be obtained in Canada only bring a case to trial before that judge.⁵⁶ And a failure to perform a contract to dig a well will not be excused by accident making it difficult or dangerous.⁵⁷

2. IMPOSSIBILITY KNOWN TO BOTH PARTIES AT TIME OF CONTRACTING. Where the impossibility is known to both of the parties at the time of making the agreement, there can be no intention of performing it on the one side, and no expectation of its being performed on the other, and therefore one of the essentials of a valid promise, viz., a legal consideration, is wanting.⁵⁸

3. IMPOSSIBILITY AT TIME OF CONTRACTING NOT KNOWN TO EITHER PARTY. Where parties make an agreement, and they are ignorant at the time that performance of the contract is impossible, there is no contract, if it appears, upon the construction of the agreement, that it was intended to be conditional upon the supposed possibility of performance. There is a mistake here which renders the agreement void. But if there was an absolute unconditional contract not showing any intention that the possibility of performance was an implied condition, here the parties are bound, notwithstanding that at the time the performance was impossible.⁵⁹

4. IMPOSSIBILITY AT TIME OF CONTRACTING KNOWN TO ONE PARTY ONLY. Where the impossibility is known to the promisor at the time of making his promise, but not known to the promisee, he must be taken to have intended to make himself absolutely liable.⁶⁰ Thus a covenant to pay a sum of money, "when I collect the money on a bond on which suit is pending," is broken if there is no such bond or suit pending.⁶¹ So where a married man promises to marry a woman who is unaware of his being married, he is liable in damages for breach of his promise.⁶² And where by a charter-party the freighter undertakes to load "with the usual despatch of the port," which he knows he is then incapable of doing by reason of his previous engagements with other vessels that have precedence by the rules of the port, it is held that he is absolutely bound by his contract to load and responsible for the delay.⁶³ So where a subsequent impossibility of performance might have been foreseen by the promisor and he chooses to bind himself absolutely he is not excused.⁶⁴ If the impossibility of performance were known to the promisee, although not known to the promisor, it could not be accepted by the promisee with the understanding or expectation that it would be carried out, and therefore would not be binding.⁶⁵

5. SUBSEQUENT IMPOSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE — a. In General. Where the performance becomes impossible subsequent to the making of the contract, the general rule is that the promisor is not therefore discharged.⁶⁶ As said in an old

64. Bryan v. Spurgin, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 681. In Jennings v. Lyon, 39 Wis. 553, 558, 20 Am. Rep. 57, the plaintiff agreed that he and his wife would work for the defendant for a year for a gross sum, but four months afterward the wife, being about to give birth to a child, left the service and the contract was broken. The court, while admitting that as a general rule sickness furnishes a valid excuse for the failure to perform a personal contract, held that the knowledge of the plaintiff of the anticipated sickness altered the case. "It is said that it was the plaintiff's own fault under such circumstances to undertake and agree that he and his wife would work for a year, because he must have known that it would be impossible for him to perform his contract. . . . He must have known that it would be impossible for her to work at the period of her confinement and for some time thereafter. There seems no reason why he should not be held liable for a breach of his contract, absolute in its terms; 'not, in fact, for not doing what cannot be done, but for undertaking and promising to do it.'"

67. Paradine v. Jane, Aleyn 26. In School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 535, 68 Am. Dec. 371, the court said: "We believe the law is well settled, that if a person promises absolutely, without exception or qualification, that a certain thing shall be done by a given time, or that a certain event shall take place, and that the thing to be done or the event is neither impossible nor unlawful at the time, of the promise, he is bound by his promise, unless the performance, before that time, becomes unlawful. Any seeming departure from this principle of law, (and there are some instances that at first view appear to be of that character,) will be found we think, to grow out of the mode of construing the contract or affixing a condition, raised by implication from the nature of the subject, or from the situation of the parties, rather than from a denial of the principle itself. Such, for instance, as a promise to marry, where it must be presumed that the parties agree to intermarry if they shall be alive; or a promise to deliver a certain horse at a future time, and before the day arrives, the horse dies; in which case, the parties are held to have contracted in view of that contingency. In these and like cases, the court will hold that the parties did not understand that the thing was to be done, unless the life of the persons, or of the horse, was continued, so that there would be an object and an interest in the execution of the contract. These and a few other exceptions of a similar character, are to be found in the books, but they are not so much exceptions after all as cases where the intention of the parties is presumed or inferred, though not expressed, from their peculiar situation, or from the subject-matter itself. It is said, however, that there is one real exception to the rule, viz., where the act of God intervenes to defeat the performance of the contract; and that is the exception on which the defendant relies in this case. The defendant insists, that where the thing contracted to be done, becomes impossible by the act of God, the contract is discharged. This is altogether a mistake. The cases show no such exception, though there is some semblance of it in a single case which we will mention. The act of God will excuse the not doing of a thing where the law had created the duty, but never where it is created by the positive and absolute contract of the party. The reason of this distinction is obvious. The law never creates or imposes upon any one a duty to perform what God forbids, or what he renders impossible of performance, but it allows people to enter into contracts as they please, provided they do not violate the law. It is further said, that the books declare, that where the condition of a bond becomes impossible by the act of God, or is prohibited by the law, the condition becomes void, and the bond is absolute, or if it be a subsequent condition for the divesting of title, that the condition becomes void, and the title remains good. Whether even this is true, without some qualification, we are not quite confident, nor will we stop to consider; but if so, still, the doctrine of that class of cases does not reach the present one, as the same books abundantly declare. In Platt Covenants, p. 582, it is said that the rule laid down in Paradine v. Jane, Aleyn 27, has often been recognized in courts, as a sound one, viz.: where a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract; therefore if a lessee covenants to repair, the circumstance of the premises being consumed by lightning, or thrown down by an inevitable flood of water, or an irresistible tornado, will not effect his discharge. But where the law creates a duty or charge, and the party is disabled to perform it without any default in him, and hath no remedy over, there the law will excuse him, as in the case of waste where fied contract of a sale of goods generally does not contain an implied condition relieving the seller from performance if his machinery breaks down without his fault and disables him from manufacturing them.⁶⁸ The principle has also been applied where a ship owner agreed to proceed to the port of lading by a certain date, and it was rendered impossible by contrary winds and bad weather, which were not expressly excepted events in the charter-party;⁶⁹ where a person agreed and covenanted to pay rent for a house for a certain term, and before the end of the term the house was destroyed by fire;⁷⁰ where a person covenanted to build a bridge, and keep it in repair for a certain time, and the bridge was broken down by an extraordinary flood;⁷¹ where a bond was conditioned for the building of a bridge on a certain site, and to maintain it for seven years, and its maintenance on the site was found to be impossible;⁷² where an insurance company undertook, having the option to do so, to reinstate insured premises which had been damaged by fire, and the public authorities subsequently took down the premises as dangerous, although on account of defects not caused by the fire;⁷³ where a person contracted to take another into a firm of which he was a member, but could not do so because of inability to obtain the consent of the other partners;⁷⁴ where a person agreed to build a house for another on his land, and the house, before it was finished, was burned down;⁷⁵ where a person agreed to deliver a specified quantity of corn "as early next fall as the same will be dry enough to house, unavoidable accidents only excepted," and the crop failed on account of a drought;⁷⁶ where a person contracted to deliver corn within twenty days, and performance was rendered impossible by the freezing on the eleventh day of a river on which it is being transported;⁷⁷ and in many other cases.⁷⁸

b. Impossibility Created by Law. To the general rule that a party to a con-

the house is destroyed by a tempest. In some cases where the act of God renders performance absolutely impossible, the covenants shall be discharged quia impotentia excusat legem; as if a lessee covenants to leave a wood in as good plight as the wood was at the time of the lease, and afterward the trees are blown down by tempest; or if one covenants to serve another for seven years, and he dies before the expiration of the seven years, the covenant is discharged, because the act of God defeats the possibility of performance. I should rather say, because it is implied that the thing shall exist or life be prolonged, or else the contract of course cannot be broken."

78. Other illustrations.—Thus in Jones v. St. John's College, L. R. 6 Q. B. 115, 40 L. J. Q. B. 80, where a builder contracted to do certain specific work within a fixed time, including such alterations as might be ordered according to the contract, unless an extension of time were allowed for them, under penalties for delay, it was held that he was bound to complete within the time, or to pay the penalties; and it was held no excuse that alterations duly ordered without allowing an extension of time rendered performance impossible; and that no condition could be implied at variance with the contract for such a contingency. And in Stonam v. Waldo, 17 Mo. 489, where plaintiff bound himself to winter a certain number of cattle for defendant, and defendant obligated himself to pay a stipulated sum for every head delivered in the spring "in good, thrifty order and condition," it was held that plaintiff could not recover for the keeping of any cattle that died, or were not delivered in good, thrifty order and condition, although their death or bad condition might not have resulted from any want of care on his part. So in Bartlett v. Bisbey, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 405, 66 S. W. 70, where the sole limitation on the absolute character of a building contract was that if completion was delayed by damages caused by fire, lightning, earthquake, cyclone, etc., the time fixed for completion should be extended, it was held that where an unprecedented storm destroyed the building before completion, the loss would fall on the contractors, although the payments were to be tract is not discharged by subsequent impossibility of performance there is an exception where the performance becomes impossible by law, either by reason of (1) a change in the law, or (2) by some action by or under the authority of the government. In such cases the promisor is discharged.⁷⁹ No contract can be carried into effect which was originally made contrary to the provisions of law, or which, being made consistently with the rules of law at the time, has become illegal in virtue of some subsequent law.⁸⁰ This principle applies for example where performance of a charter-party for the loading of a cargo at a foreign port is prevented by a declaration of war with that country rendering it impossible to provide or ship the cargo without an illegal act of trading with the enemy;⁸¹ where a lessor covenants that neither he nor his assigns will permit any building upon a piece of land adjoining the demised premises, and performance of the covenant is prevented by a railroad company subsequently taking the land under compulsory powers given by statute and building a railroad station upon it;⁸² where a person promises to pay another a certain sum, provided the latter shall perform military duty for the former for six months, and before the expiration of the six months peace is proclaimed;⁸³ where, after a lease of a wooden building containing a covenant that it shall be rebuilt if burned down, a law is passed prohibiting the erection of wooden buildings in that place;⁸⁴ and in other like cases.⁸⁵ In like manner any prohibitory action taken by the public authorities made as the work progressed. And in Middlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co., 64 N. J. L. 240, 45 Atl. 692, 81 Am. St. Rep. 467, 49 L. R. A. 572, where a water company unconditionally contracted to supply to a consumer water with pressure sufficient for fire purposes, it was held liable for damages sustained by the consumer from fire in consequence of a failure in the water pressure, although the failure was due to a break in the pipes without the water company's fault.

85. Thus in O'Neil v. Armstrong, [1895] 2 Q. B. 70, where an Englishman was engaged by the captain of a war-ship owned by the Japanese government to act as fireman on a voyage from Tyne to Yokohama, and in the course of the voyage the Japanese government declared war with China, and the Englishman was informed that a performance of the contract would bring him under the penalties of the Foreign Enlistment Act, it was held that he was entitled to leave the ship and sue for the wages agreed upon, since the act of the Japanese government had made his performance of the contract legally impossible. But in Tweedie Trading Co. v. James P. McDonald Co., 114 Fed. 985, where plaintiff had entered into a contract with defendant in the United States by which the former agreed to make four trips with his steamship from Barbadoes to Colon to transport laborers for the latter, who contracted to pay a stated sum for each trip, and the contract when made was legal and valid where made, and also at the places of performance; but after two trips had been made a regulation of the colonial government of the Barbadoes was promulgated forbidding the future embarkation of laborers, by reason of which defendant was unable to furnish any more for transportation, it was held that such fact, which did not affect the legality of the contract where made, did not constitute a defense to an action to recover the hire of the ship for the remaining voyages at the contract price.

will discharge a promise,⁸⁶ as where a servant agrees with his master that he will give two weeks' notice before leaving his service, and the servant is arrested for crime;⁸⁷ where a general agent of a life-insurance company is engaged for five years at a stipulated salary, but before the expiration of the five years the company is enjoined from doing business and a receiver is appointed, the proceedings being instituted by the superintendent of the insurance department and prosecuted by the attorney-general;⁸⁸ and like cases.⁸⁹ A contract made in contemplation of the passage of legislative acts which were essential to the object of the contract, and the passage of which was confidently expected by both parties, cannot be enforced where the legislature refuses to pass those acts, and adopts other measures entirely defeating the object of the parties in making the contract.⁹⁰ The exception does not apply, however, where the impossibility created by the law is only temporary,⁹¹ where the change merely makes performance more burdensome,⁹² or where the law in question is that of a foreign country and not a domestic law.⁹³

c. Existence or Capacity of Specific Person or Thing. Where from the nature of the contract it is evident that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the person or thing to which it relates, the subsequent perishing of the person or thing will excuse the performance.⁹⁴ Thus where the contract relates to the use or possession or any dealing with specific things in which the performance necessarily depends on the existence of the particular thing, the condition is implied by the law that the impossibility arising from the perishing or destruction of the thing, without default in the party, shall excuse the performance, because, from the nature of the contract, it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the subject of the contract.⁹⁵ So contracts to perform personal acts are considered as made on the

Thus where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a certain price per bushel for hauling all coal sold by defendant to a third person, and the latter's business passed into the hands of a receiver, who purchased coal of defendant under order of court, and employed defendant to haul it, it was held that plaintiff could not maintain an action against defendant for breach of contract. *Atkinson v. L. 826, where it was said: "There is a class of contracts in which a person binds himself to do something which requires to be performed by him in person; and such promises, e. g., promises to marry, or promises to serve for a certain time, are never in practice qualified by an express exception of the death of the party; and therefore in such cases the contract is in terms broken if the promisor dies before fulfilment. Yet it was very early determined that, if the performance is personal, the executors are not liable: . . . In those cases the only ground on which the parties or their executors, can be excused from the consequences of the breach of the contract is, that from the nature of the contract there is an implied condition of the continued existence of the life of the contractor."

where an artist agrees to perform at a concert on a certain day, and when the day arrives, he is sick and unable to perform;⁹⁷ where a person agrees to pay another a certain sum for tuition during a certain term, and during all the term he is too ill to attend;⁹⁸ and like cases.⁹⁹ But the rule that the death of a person discharges his contract to render personal services does not apply where the services are of such a character that they may be as well performed by his personal representative.¹

6. IMPOSSIBILITY IN CASE OF ALTERNATIVE PROMISES. If a person contracts to do one of two or more things in the alternative, and at the time of making the contract one of them is possible and the other impossible, it seems to be a general rule that he must perform that which is possible.² Where both alternatives are possible at the time of making the contract, and one of them subsequently becomes impossible, the question whether the other remains binding depends upon the construction of the contract as to the intention of the parties under the circumstances.³

E. Discharge by Operation of Law — 1. IN GENERAL. There are certain rules of law which, operating upon certain sets of circumstances, will bring about the discharge of a contract, as in the case of (1) merger; (2) alteration of a written instrument; and (3) discharge in bankruptcy or insolvency.⁴

2. MERGER. The acceptance of a higher security in the place of a lower merges or extinguishes the lower. The merger in such a case does not depend on the intention of the parties at all, but the mere acceptance of the higher security ipso facto extinguishes the lower as a matter of law.⁵ Thus if a contract under

Wachtel, from whom the company took its name, and by whose name it was known, was the leader and chief attraction, and his connection with the company was the inducement that led the plaintiffs to make the agreement. Wachtel became unable to sing in consequence of illness, and the defendants did not consequently furnish the troupe. In an action for breach of agreement, it was held that Wachtel's appearance was the principal thing contracted for, and was of the essence of the contract; that plaintiff would not have been bound to accept the services of the company without him; and that his sickness and inability to sing constituted a good excuse for non-performance of the agreement.

Rep. 156, it was said: "It is impossible to lay down any universal proposition either way, but that the principle to be applied in each case is, that it must depend on the intention of the parties to the bond or covenant or agreement, such intention to be collected from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, and the terms of the instrument. And this, at least, I think will hardly admit of contradiction that if the Court is satisfied, that the clear intention of the parties was, that one of them should do a certain thing, but he is allowed at his option to do it in one or other of two modes, and one of those modes becomes impossible by the act of God, he is still bound to perform it in the other mode." But in New Hampshire it has been laid down that the obligor is excused from the performance of a disjunctive condition, if one of the alternative things becomes impossible of performance by the act of God or the fault of the other party. Other courts have held the contrary. Jacquinet v. Boutron, 19 La. Ann. 30; Drake v. White, 117 Mass. 10; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 333; *State v. seal is accepted in the place of a simple contract, whether oral or in writing, the simple contract is discharged.⁶ In order to effect a merger the two securities must be different in their legal operation, the one of a higher efficacy than the other. A second security taken in addition to one similar in character will not affect its validity unless there be a discharge by substituted agreement.⁷ It is also necessary that the subject-matter of the two securities shall be identical, and the parties the same.⁸ Even security of a higher nature will not extinguish the lower, if the higher security is expressly received as collateral, or if it merely recognizes the debt and fixes the mode of ascertaining its amount.⁹ It is sometimes said that an oral contract when reduced to writing is merged in the written contract, but this is an inaccurate use of the term "merger." It merely means that where a simple contract is reduced to writing it cannot be contradicted or added to by evidence of a prior or contemporaneous oral agreement.¹⁰ The term

"merger" is also sometimes applied to the substitution of one simple contract for another. Here, however, there is no discharge by operation of law, but the substitution depends upon the intention of the parties.¹¹

3. ALTERATION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT. If a deed or simple contract in writing is altered by addition or erasure, it is discharged, if the alteration is made in a material part, so as to change the legal effect of the instrument, by a party to the contract, or by a stranger with his consent, and if it is made intentionally and without the consent of the other party.¹²

4. DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY. Bankruptcy effects a statutory release from debts and liabilities provable in the bankruptcy proceedings when the bankrupt has obtained from the court an order of discharge.¹³

F. Discharge by Breach — 1. IN GENERAL. The breach of a contract by one of the parties gives to the other a right of action for the injury suffered by him from such breach,¹⁴ but it does not in all cases discharge him from performance on his part. The contract may be broken wholly or in part, and if in part the breach may or may not be sufficiently important to operate as a discharge;¹⁵ or if it is of such importance the injured party may choose not to regard it as a discharge, preferring to continue to carry out the contract, reserving to himself the right to sue for such damages as he may have sustained by the breach.¹⁶ It is often very difficult to determine whether or not a breach of one of the terms of a contract discharges the party injured.

2. MODES OF DISCHARGE BY BREACH. A contract may be discharged by breach in three ways, namely: (1) By one party renouncing his liabilities under it; (2) by his making it impossible that he can perform his promise; or (3) by his totally or partially failing to perform his promise. Breach by renunciation and breach by acts rendering performance impossible may take place while the contract is still wholly executory; that is, before either party is entitled to demand a performance by the other of his promise.¹⁷ Breach by failure to perform can only take place at or during the time for performance.¹⁸

3. RENUNCIATION OF LIABILITY — a. Before Performance Is Due — (1) IN GENERAL. The parties to an executory contract have a right to something more than that it shall be performed when the time arrives; they have a right to the maintenance of the contractual relation up to that time, as well as to the performance of the contract when due, and by the weight of authority, if one of the parties

renounces it before that time, the other is entitled to sue at once for the breach.¹⁹ In the leading English case the court based the doctrine on the ground that where there is a contract to do an act on a future day, there is a relation constituted between the parties in the meantime by the contract, and they impliedly promise that in the meantime neither will do anything to the prejudice of the other inconsistent with that relation.²⁰ In a later case it was said: "The promisee has an inchoate right to the performance of the bargain, which becomes complete when the time for performance has arrived. In the meantime he has a right to have the contract kept open as a subsisting and effective contract. Its unimpaired and unimpeached efficacy may be essential to his interests."²¹ The leading cases illustrating the principle are where a person engaged another to act as his courier, the employment to commence three months from that time, but two months before the service was due notified him that he would not require his services,²² and where a person promised to marry a woman upon his father's death, but during his father's lifetime renounced the agreement.²³ In both cases it was held that the other might sue at once. In Massachusetts this rule is not recognized. It is there held that a renunciation before the time for performance has arrived does not amount to a breach; that, to render a person liable "for breach of an executory personal contract, the other party must show a refusal or neglect to perform, at a time when and under conditions such that he is or might be entitled to require performance."²⁴

(II) LIMITATIONS TO RULE—(A) Renunciation Must Be Entire. In order that the rule may apply, the renunciation must cover the entire performance to which the contract binds the promisor.²⁵ Thus where a landlord covenanted to repair the premises at a certain period of the tenancy, and before that period arrived he repudiated the covenant and the tenant at once claimed damages for the breach, it was held that the contract was the whole lease and that the anticipatory breach of a particular covenant in it did not entitle the tenant to sue.²⁶

(b) Must Be Distinct and Unequivocal. The renunciation must also be distinct and unequivocal. A mere expression of intention not to perform is not enough.²⁷ But no precise form of words is necessary. The obligation of the contract being created, a denial of its existence is equivalent to a repudiation or renunciation of liability under it.²⁸

(c) Contract Must Be Bilateral. The contract must not be a unilateral one. A man for example may say to the holder of his note, "I am not going to pay it when it is due," but until payment is refused when it falls due, no legal right of the holder has been violated by the maker.²⁹

(d) Renunciation May Be Rejected. If the promisee elects not to accept the renunciation, and continues to insist on the performance of the promise, as he may do, the contract remains in existence for the benefit and at the risk of both parties, and if anything occur to discharge it from other causes, the promisor may take advantage of such discharge.³⁰ A contractor who has unadvisedly refused to perform his contract may, while the situation of things is unchanged, retract the refusal and go on with the contract, and is not cut off from so doing by the service upon him of a notice to the effect that the contractor will hold such refusal to be a default, and will sue to dissolve the contract.³¹

(e) Renouncing Party Cannot Force Acceptance. The renouncing party cannot force the other, nor is the other bound, to sue for a breach of the contract before the day fixed for performance arrives, and have the damages assessed as of the time of the renunciation. The party keeping the contract, in other words, need not mitigate the damages by treating as final the premature repudiation.³²

5 E. & B. 714, 85 E. C. L. 714, defendant agreed with plaintiff by charter-party that plaintiff's ship should sail to Odessa, and there take a cargo from defendant's agent, which was to be loaded within a certain number of days. The vessel reached Odessa and her master demanded a cargo, but defendant's agent refused to supply one. Although the days within which plaintiff was entitled to load the cargo had not expired, his agent, the master of the ship, might have treated this refusal as a breach of contract and sailed away. Plaintiff would then have had a right to sue upon the contract. But the master of the ship continued to demand a cargo, and before the running days were out, and therefore before a breach by non-performance had occurred, a war broke out between England and Russia, and the performance of the contract became legally impossible. Afterward plaintiff sued for breach of the charter-party. [It was held that as there had been no actual failure of performance before the war broke out, as the running days had not then expired, and as plaintiff's agent had not accepted the renunciation as a breach, defendant was entitled to the discharge of the contract which took place upon the declaration of war.]

It is, however, to be observed that there is a decision to the contrary effect in equity.³³

(F) Other Party Cannot Proceed and Complete Contract. But after notice of such repudiation the other party cannot go on and complete an executory contract, and then sue for the full contract price or for any increased damages caused by his continuing to perform.³⁴ This principle has been applied in a number of cases to contracts of employment, the rule being that an employer may order the discontinuance of work which he has contracted with or employed another to perform, subject to proper compensation in damages to the employee; and that the latter cannot then go on with the work and recover the contract price.³⁵ But bushels of barley. On the 16th, the day after the sale, defendants notified plaintiffs that they did not consider themselves bound by the contract, and that they would not carry it out. It was held that plaintiffs had a right, notwithstanding such notice, to wait until the day of delivery under the contract arrived, and then resell in the market and recover from defendants the difference between the contract price of the barley and its market price at the day it was to have been delivered; and that there was no duty upon plaintiff to sell the barley on the day of or a reasonable time after the notice, although by a sale at such time the damages would have been greatly reduced, barley having gone down in price in the meantime. 33. In Truax v. Estes, 92 Fed. 529, it was held that a court of equity, in a suit brought to reform a contract for the purchase of cattle, which were not to be delivered for several months after the date of the contract, and to recover damages for its breach, would not enforce the strict rule of law which permits a party to disregard notice that a contract will not be performed, and to wait until the time for performance and recover damages as of that date, where plaintiff was notified by defendant within a week from the making of the contract and before he had suffered any damage that it would be impossible to furnish the cattle at the prices named, of which fact plaintiff was aware when the contract was made, but defendant was not.

It was held that after they received this notice they had no right to purchase on plaintiffs' account any more potatoes. "While a contract is executory," said the court, "a party has the power to stop the performance on the other side, by an explicit direction to that effect, by subjecting himself to such damages as will compensate the other party for being stopped in the performance on his part at that point or stage in the execution of the contract. The party thus forbidden cannot afterwards go on and thereby increase the damages, and then recover such increased damages of the other party."

Dec. 670, defendant employed plaintiff to clean and repair certain pictures for an agreed price, but before the work was completed countermanded the order. Plaintiff, however, went on and finished the work and sued for the price agreed upon, claiming that defendant could not countermand the order after the work was begun. He recovered judgment which was reversed on appeal, the court saying: "The plaintiff was allowed to recover as though there had been no countermand of the order; and in this the court erred. The defendant, by requiring the plaintiff to stop work upon the paintings, violated his contract, and thereby incurred a liability to pay such damages as the plaintiff should sustain. Such damages would include a recompense for the labor done and materi-

this rule has been held not to apply where the damages are not an adequate remedy for the breach, that is, where the contract is a proper one for specific performance.³⁶ And in some jurisdictions an absolute promise to pay a certain sum of money on the performance of a condition, such as a promise to pay a subscription to some projected undertaking, cannot be withdrawn by the promisor so as to force the promisee to cease performance.³⁷

b. Renunciation of Liability in Course of Performance. The rules stated in the above sections apply also when the renunciation is made in the course of performance, for renunciation of a contract by one of the parties in the course of performance discharges the other party from a continued performance of his promise, and entitles him to sue at once for the breach, or on a quantum meruit.³⁸

4. IMPOSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE CREATED BY PARTY. Where one of the parties to a contract, either before the time for performance or in the course of performance, makes performance or further performance by him impossible, the other party is discharged and may sue at once for the breach, as in the case of renunciation of liability.³⁹ Illustrations of this rule are where one agrees to sell and als used, and such further sum in damages as might, upon legal principles, be assessed for the breach of the contract; but the plaintiff had no right, by obstinately persisting in the work, to make the penalty upon the defendant greater than it would otherwise have been. To hold that one who employs another to do a piece of work is bound to suffer it to be done at all events, would sometimes lead to great injustice. A man may hire another to labor for a year, and within the year his situation may be such as to render the work entirely useless to him. The party employed cannot persist in working, though he is entitled to the damages consequent upon his disappointment. So if one hires another to build a house, and subsequent events put it out of his power to pay for it, it is commendable in him to stop the work, and pay for what has been done and the damages sustained by the contractor. He may be under a necessity to change his residence; but upon the rule contended for, he would be obliged to have a house which he did not need and could not use. In all such cases the just claims of the party employed are satisfied when he is fully recompensed for his part performance and indemnified for his loss in respect to the part left unexecuted."

36. In Marsh v. Blackman, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 329, the plaintiff had agreed in writing with defendants to support and maintain their father during his natural life for a specified sum per week, but after performance had commenced they notified him not to continue performing his agreement, as they would make no further payments. Plaintiff nevertheless continued to furnish the maintenance, and in an action to recover the weekly payments after the notice, it was held that the renunciation by defendant was no defense. And in Watson v. Smith, 7 Oreg. 448, an agreement to support was held a proper one of which to decree specific performance.

37. In Buchel v. Lott, (Tex. 1890) 15 S. W. 413, the defendant with others agreed a subscription list intended as a bonus to a company to construct a certain line of railroad within a certain time. It was held that the defendant could not withdraw his subscription, the court saying: "He became bound upon said contract the moment he signed it, for the amount subscribed by him, subject only to the condition that the railway should be constructed according to the terms of the contract." See also Davis v. Bronson, 3 N. D. 300, 50 N. W. 836, 33 Am. St. Rep. 783, 16 L. R. A. 655. This view of the case would not obtain, however, in those jurisdictions where a subscription is held to be without consideration and revocable until the party for whose benefit it is made has done something, as for example made contracts or incurred obligations, on the faith of such subscription. A covenant to convey property or to do any other act is broken by the covenantor, if before the time for performance he destroys the property to be conveyed or puts it out of his power to do the act which is the subject of the covenant. Hopkins v. Young, 11 Mass. 302.

Contract to convey land.—A special contract that one party shall remain with the other and carry on his farm until the decease of the latter, and shall then receive the farm in compensation of his services, is broken by a sale of the farm or a part of it by the owner, although for the purpose of paying an antecedent debt. Canada v. Canada, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 15.

Under a contract for the sale of a business, the defendants, who purchased, agreed to pay plaintiff a certain sum out of the first moneys collected from the accounts transferred; but before the same was paid defendants sold the accounts to a third person. It was held that defendants having disabled themselves from performing the agreement became at once liable under the contract, although the time for performance had not expired. Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315, 33 N. W. 862.

Where a lessor covenanted that the lessee should have as much firewood as she should desire from a certain tract of land, and then cut most of the wood thereon and converted it to his own use, it was held that such conduct was a breach of his covenant. Lovering v. Lovering, 13 N. H. 513.

5. DISCHARGE BY FAILURE TO PERFORM — a. In General. As we have just seen, where one of the parties to a contract declares that he will not perform his part, or so acts as to make it impossible for him to do so, he thereby releases the other from the contract and its obligations. One of two parties should not be required to tender performance when the other has by act or word indicated that he will not or cannot accept it, or will not or cannot do that in return for which the performance was promised. Nor will the courts hold him any longer bound.⁴⁹ But one of the parties may claim that although he has broken his promise wholly or

It was held that the attorney might recover the entire fee in an action against the client.

47. For other illustrations see Murphy v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 483 (holding that where a person agreed to sell to another at a stipulated price per ton all the ice on a pond, and in violation of the contract permitted another party to remove a portion of it, the purchaser was justified in refusing to take what remained); Kerr v. Little, 42 N. J. Eq. 528, 9 Atl. 110 (holding that where a lime-burner contracted with the receiver of a railroad to remove the ashes for a year from an ash-pit, for the cinders and coals to be found there, and before the expiration of the year the assistant general superintendent terminated the contract on the ground of the jealousy of other lime-burners, the receiver must respond in damages); Crist v. Armour, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 378 (holding that where, upon a contract for the whole produce of a dairy for the year, the seller delivered a part, and then informed the purchaser that he had sold the product for the rest of the year to another, and had delivered part thereof, the seller had disabled himself to perform his contract, and that the buyer therefore might recover damages without any offer of performance on his part); Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Rail Co. v. Hinckley, 17 Fed. 584 (where plaintiff agreed to make steel rails for defendant, who was to give directions as to the drilling, which he failed to do, finally declaring the contract off, and it appeared that the directions were necessary, and defendant might have been justified in refusing to accept the rails had they not been drilled as he wished, and it was held that defendant was liable for breach of contract).

48. Where a lessee had promised to assign to another, at any time within seven years from the date of the promise, all his interest in the lease, but before the expiration of the seven years assigned his whole interest to another person, it was held that he could be sued at once for breach of contract, without waiting until the end of the seven years. "The plaintiff," it was said, "has a right to say to the defendant: 'You have placed yourself in a situation in which you cannot perform what you have promised: you promised to be ready during the period of seven years; and, during that period, I may at any time tender you the money and call for an assignment, and expect that you should keep yourself ready; but if I now were to tender you the money, you would not be ready.' That is a breach of the contract." Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371, 378, 10 Jur. 246, 15 L. J. Q. B. 146, 55 E. C. L. 371. See also supra, IX, F, 3.

in part, the contract is not thereby brought to an end, nor the other party discharged from his liabilities. We have then to ascertain whether the promise of the party injured was given conditionally on the performance by the other of that in which he has made default. If it was, he is discharged from his promise; if it was not, he must perform his promise, and bring an action for the damage occasioned by the default of the other. Herein lies the distinction between dependent or conditional and independent promises.⁵⁰

b. When Promises Are Dependent and When Independent — (i) IN GENERAL.

In contracts containing executory considerations or mutual promises, that is to say, in which a promise on the one side is given in consideration of a promise on the other, the mere promise, and not the performance of it, constitutes the consideration, strictly so called; and the obligation of the one promise may be quite independent of the performance of the other. But if the obligation of the one promise is expressly or impliedly conditional upon the due performance of the other, then the performance of the promise constituting the executory consideration is a condition precedent to the liability to perform the other promise.⁵¹ No precise rule, it is said, can be laid down for the solution of the question whether a contract is entire or separable; it must be solved by considering both the language and the subject-matter of the contract.⁵² But it may be said generally that where a person makes a promise to another in consideration of a promise by the latter to him, and has not in express terms or upon a reasonable construction of the contract made the performance of his promise to depend upon performance by the other party, he is not discharged by the latter's breach of his promise.⁵³

(ii) INDEPENDENT PROMISES. Courts are disinclined to construe the stipulations in a contract to do certain things within a given time in consideration of the payment of money by the other party as conditions precedent, unless compelled to do so by the express language of the contract.⁵⁴ If there is no connection in the matter of the promises, and the performance on the one side is quite independent of the performance on the other, the promises are in general independent and not conditional.⁵⁵ Where by the terms of the contract the time to perform the covenant on the one side is to arrive, or may arrive, before the time for the performance of the covenant on the other side, the former is not dependent on the latter.⁵⁶ So where one party contracts to do work, and another to pay a stipulated price for the same, and the labor is capable of a just division and apportionment, these stipulations will be considered independent, and a full performance not as a condition precedent to any right of action, unless it is expressly so stipulated or is strongly implied.⁵⁷ Promises are independent, where on the one hand an article of merchandise is sold and agreed to be delivered on demand, and on the other payment is deferred until five months after the date of the contract.⁵⁸

(III) DEPENDENT AND CONDITIONAL PROMISES. The courts at the present day incline strongly against the construction of promises as independent, and in the absence of clear language to the contrary promises which form the consideration for each other will be held to be concurrent or dependent and not independent,⁵⁹ so that a failure of one party to perform will discharge the other, and so

Other illustration.—In an old English case plaintiff brought an action of debt for five hundred pounds against defendant upon an indenture of covenants between them that plaintiff should raise five hundred soldiers and bring them to a certain port, and that defendant should find shipping and victuals for them to transport them to Galicia; the action being brought for not providing the shipping and victuals at the time appointed. Defendant pleaded that plaintiff had not raised the soldiers at that time; and to this plea plaintiff demurred. Roll, C. J., held "that there was no condition precedent; but that they are distinct and mutual covenants, and that there may be several actions brought for them; and it is not necessary to give notice of the number of men raised, for the number is known to be 500, and the time for the shipping to be ready, is also known by the Covenants; and you have your remedy against him if he raise not the men, as he hath against you for not providing the shipping." Ware v. Chappell, Style 186, 187.

by each party at the same time, neither party can maintain an action against the other without performance or tender of performance on his part.⁶¹ So where a party sues on a special contract to recover compensation due on its performance, he must show performance on his part or a legal excuse.⁶² In contracts for the sale of land, the conveyance of the estate and the payment of the purchase-money are in general concurrent acts and the promises dependent, whether a particular day be appointed for completion or not; and readiness and willingness to perform on either side is a condition precedent to liability to perform on the other.⁶³ Under such contracts an actual conveyance of the land is a condition precedent to the claim for the whole amount of the stipulated purchase-money; so that if the purchaser refuses to perform and take a conveyance, the vendor, although he may claim damages for not performing, cannot claim the purchase-money so long as he retains the property in the land.⁶⁴ In contracts for the sale of goods, the delivery of the goods and payment of the price are presumptively intended to be concurrent acts; and readiness and willingness on both sides, at the proper time for completion, to perform their respective parts of the contract are mutual conditions precedent.⁶⁵

c. Part Performance of Conditions Precedent. A part performance or a defective performance of a condition precedent is generally not sufficient.⁶⁶ But after one party has performed the contract in a substantial part, and the other party has accepted and had the benefit of the part performance, the latter may thereby be precluded from relying upon the performance of the residue as a condition precedent to his liability. In such case he must perform the contract on his part, and must rely upon his claim for damages in respect of the defective performance.⁶⁷ And where one who has agreed to perform certain work per-

d. Performance of Conditions Precedent Waived or Discharged — (1) IN GENERAL. The performance of a condition precedent is discharged or excused, and the conditional promise made an absolute one, where the promisor himself prevents the complete performance by refusing to accept it when offered, or otherwise waives the performance.⁶⁹ Either party may waive any part of a contract, either expressly or by acts or declarations indicating a relinquishment of any provision or part of a provision, and without the performance of which, unless relinquished or waived, a recovery could not be had.⁷⁰ So although there may have been repeated violations of a contract by either party, yet, if either party elects to consider it unbroken and proceeds under it, the other cannot be considered as having been in default.⁷¹ Thus the following have been declared to constitute a waiver in each instance, viz.: A request to go on with the work, together with partial payment, after the workman's failure to complete a building within the time stipulated in the contract;⁷² payments made to the contractor and acceptance of the work by the owner, although the contract stipulated for payment in instalments as the work progressed, provided that in each case a certificate should be obtained, signed by a certain architect;⁷³ where a person contracted with another for two hundred pork-barrels of the ordinary size and quality, and afterward received of him that number of barrels, but not of the size and quality contracted for;⁷⁴ where a contract required a person to deliver ties to a railroad company, subject to the inspection and acceptance of its chief engineer, but the company directed another of its officers to make such inspection;⁷⁵ where a person made a subscription upon certain conditions toward the erection of a church, but during its erection frequently told those in charge of it to go on and finish it, and he would pay his subscription;⁷⁶ and where, in a written contract for putting up furnaces, the plaintiff agreed to put in a cold-air register face, which he omitted to do, but the furnace was used for three months, and no complaint was made of the omission.⁷⁷

In a leading English case it appeared that defendant had chartered plaintiff's vessel for a certain voyage and promised to pay a certain sum in full for her use on condition of her taking a cargo of not less than one thousand tons. Defendant had the use of the vessel as agreed upon, but it appeared that she was not capable of holding so large a cargo as had been made a condition of the contract.

To an action brought for non-payment of the freight, defendant pleaded a breach of this condition. The term in the contract which has been described was held to have amounted, in its inception, to a condition, and it was said that defendant, while the contract was still executory, might have rescinded, and refused to put any goods on board; but as the contract had been executed, and defendant had received a substantial part of the consideration, he could not rescind the contract, but must be left to his cross-action for damages. *Pust v. Other illustrations of waiver of performance of conditions precedent are where a party purchased and had shipped to him certain barrels of apples, and upon receiving them and finding a portion worthless, he did

(II) ACTS NOT CONSTITUTING A WAIVER. To constitute a waiver of the performance of a condition precedent, the acts relied upon must as a rule be inconsistent with an intention to insist upon performance.⁷⁸ Payment or part payment for work done is not of itself, and without regard to the circumstances under which it was made, conclusive evidence of a waiver of claims for defects in the work.⁷⁹ To constitute a waiver, the acts or circumstances relied on to constitute it must have been performed or have transpired after the party against whom the waiver is urged knew, or should have known, the facts constituting the breach.⁸⁰ The receiving of articles contracted for and putting them to use will not estop a party from claiming damages if they prove defective.⁸¹ A person not knowing anything about machinery was held not to have accepted water-wheels contracted to be well built by looking at and giving his note for them immediately after they were finished.⁸²

e. Alternative Promises and Election. A promise may be alternative, that is, to perform one or the other of two or more acts, either at the election of the promisor or of the promisee. If the promisor have the election, he can be charged with a breach only when he refuses to perform both. As a rule the person who is to perform the contract has a right to elect which one of the alternative promises he will perform;⁸⁴ but the election may be expressly given to the promisee.⁸⁵ If the promisee have the election, he must generally give notice of his election to the promisor before he can charge him.⁸⁶ If the promisor has the right to do one of two things by a given day, his right of election is lost if not return or offer to return them, or notify the vendor that he would not receive them, and that they were subject to the vendor's order, but paid the vendor for those he considered good (Weaver v. Wisner, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 638); where a party to a contract for the construction of a steam-engine to be delivered on or before a specified time consented to receive it after that time (Moore v. Detroit Locomotive Works, 14 Mich. 266); where a party entered into possession of a completed house, not built according to contract (Taylor v. Williams, 6 Wis. 363); and where the owner of a steamboat was present when a boiler containing forty-eight instead of forty-four flues, as contracted for, was being made and put into the boat (Waters v. Harvey, 3 Houst. (Del.) 441).

78. In the following cases it was held that there was no waiver, viz.: Where a contract bound a person to pay another for each wagon-load as delivered, but several wagon-loads were delivered without requiring payment for each (Gardner v. Clark, 21 N. Y. 399); where defendant agreed with plaintiff to deliver on or before a fixed time, and at a certain place, twelve thousand feet of clapboards, and sent to the place a smaller quantity, part according to contract and part not, but plaintiff neglected, within a reasonable time after he was informed that the clapboards were at the place, to notify defendant that he would not accept them (Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 405. And see Ketchum v. Wells, 19 Wis. 25); where a person contracted to deliver to another one hundred fish-stands of a certain description, and upon his tendering them, the latter received fifty, but refused to receive the other fifty, because they were not made according to the contract (Freeman v. Skinner, 31 N. C. 32); and where a contract that an actor should appear at least seven times a week and be paid one hundred dollars for each appearance was violated by the manager's failure to provide employment for three weeks, but the actor subsequently appeared under the contract and received pay pursuant thereto (Coghlan v. Stetson, 19 Fed. 727).

that day passes without his electing.⁸⁷ A promise to pay a certain amount of money on a given day, with a stipulation following that it may be discharged in some other commodity, becomes an absolute promise to pay money, if that commodity is not paid on the day.⁸⁸ If a person receives special articles of another and promises to return them within a certain time or pay a fixed price it is the duty of the promisor to ascertain from the promisee the place where he will receive the articles.⁸⁹ An election once made is final and irrevocable.⁹⁰

f. Divisible Promises — (1) IN GENERAL. Where promises are divisible, that is, where the contract contains a number of promises to do a number of similar acts, a breach of one of them does not discharge the other party.⁹¹ Illustrations of divisible promises are to be found in contracts to receive and pay for goods by instalments. Where the instalments are numerous, extending over a considerable period of time, a default either of delivery or payment would not appear to discharge the contract, although it must necessarily give rise to an action for damages.⁹² Where one contract relates to separate matters, a breach as to one matter does not excuse the other party from performance as to the other matter.⁹³ If the promise is entire or indivisible, and is not independent as heretofore explained, its entire performance is as a rule a condition concurrent or precedent

Rennie*, 5 H. & N. 19.

In a leading case the plaintiff had promised to take his ship to a certain port, and there load a complete cargo of hemp and iron, and to deliver the same on being paid freight at specified rates. He came away with an incomplete cargo, and the defendant refused to pay any freight, on the ground that the completeness of the cargo was a condition precedent to any payment being due. Lord Ellenborough said that whether it was so or not depended, "not on any formal arrangement of words, but on the reason and sense of the thing, as it is to be collected from the whole contract," and with regard to the promise in question he held that "where the freight is made payable upon an indivisible condition, such as the arrival of the ship with her cargo at her destined port of discharge, such arrival must be a condition precedent, because it is incapable of being apportioned; but here the delivery of the cargo is in its nature divisible, and therefore I think it is not a condition precedent; but the plaintiff is entitled to recover freight in proportion to the extent of such delivery, leaving the defendant to his remedy in damages for the short delivery." Ritchie v. Atkinson, 10 East 295, 10 Rev. Rep. 307.

"The rule is, that defaults by one party in making particular payments or deliveries will not release the other party from his duty to make the other deliveries or payments stipulated in the contract, unless the conduct of the party in default be such as to evince an intention to abandon the contract or a design no longer to be bound by its terms. This rule leaves the party complaining of a breach to recover damages for his injury on the normal principle of compensation, without allowing him the abnormal advantage that might inure to him from an option to rescind the bargain." Blackburn v. Reilly, 47 N. J. L. 290, 308, 1 Atl. 27, 54 Am. Rep. 159.

to the liability of the other party to perform.⁹⁴ In construing contracts to determine whether they were divisible or not, the courts have not agreed.⁹⁵ The question is one of construction.⁹⁶

(II) REPUDIATION OF CONTRACT. The courts are agreed that if a default in one item of a continuous contract of a divisible nature is accompanied with an announcement of intention not to perform the contract upon the agreed terms, or, what amounts to the same thing, if the failure to fully perform is deliberate and intentional, and not the result of inadvertence or inability to perform, the rule we have been discussing does not apply. The other party under these circumstances may treat the contract as being at an end.⁹⁷

96. Wooten v. Walters, 110 N. C. 251, 256, 14 S. E. 734, 736, where it was said: "The contract may be entire or severable, according to the circumstances of each particular case, and the criterion is to be found in the question whether the whole quantity—all of the things as a whole—is of the essence of the contract. If it appear that the purpose was to take the whole or none, then the contract would be entire; otherwise, it would be severable. It is sometimes difficult to determine whether the contract is entire or severable in such cases, and there is great diversity of decision on the subject, 'but on the whole, the weight of opinion and the more reasonable rule would seem to be that where there is a purchase of different articles at different prices, at the same time, the contract would be severable as to each article, unless the taking of the whole was rendered essential either by the nature of the subject-matter or by the act of the parties.' This rule makes the interpretation of the contract depend on the intention of the parties as manifested by their acts, and the circumstances of each particular case." This was said in reference to contracts of sale, but the reason applies to other contracts as well. See Broumel v. Rayner, 68 Md. 47, 11 Atl. 833. In a leading English case the defendant had agreed with plaintiffs to supply them with a certain quantity of coal, to be delivered in equal monthly instalments for twelve months. Plaintiffs had agreed to send wagons to receive the coal, but during the first month did not send wagons enough to receive the one twelfth of the whole amount. Defendant sought to rescind the contract, but it was held that he was not entitled to do so, since plaintiffs were willing to continue the contract as to the remaining instalments, and it did not appear to have been the intention of the parties to determine the contract upon the failure of one of them to fulfil one of the series of terms. Simpson v. Crippin, L. R. 8 Q. B. 14, 42 L. J. Q. B. 28, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 546, 21 Wkly. Rep. 141. The earlier case of Hoare v. Rennie, 5 H. & N. 19, is directly opposed to the case just referred to. The defendants had bought of plaintiffs a large quantity of iron, to be shipped in the months of June, July, August, and September in about equal portions each month, and plaintiffs shipped only a small portion in June, not being nearly the portion stipulated for in that month. It was held that defendant was not bound to accept the smaller quantity, nor any subsequent tender, as plaintiffs had substantially failed to perform their part of the contract, which formed a condition precedent to the liability of the defendant.

In the United States some of the courts have followed Simpson v. Crippin, supra, while others have followed Hoare v. Rennie, supra. See the American cases supra, notes 91, 94.

England.—Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882, 1 L. J. K. B. 30, 22 E. C. L. 370.

If non-payment of one instalment of goods be accompanied by such circumstances as to give the seller reasonable grounds for thinking that the buyer will not be able to pay for the rest, he may take advantage of this one omission to repudiate the contract. Stephenson v. Cady, 117 Mass. 6; Bloomer v. Bernstein, L. R. 9 C. P. 588, 43 L. J. C. P.

(III) EXPRESS PROVISION FOR DISCHARGE. The general rule applicable to contracts of this sort may be contravened by express stipulation. It is always permissible for the parties to agree that the entire performance of a consideration, in its nature divisible, shall be a condition precedent to the right to a fulfilment by the other party of his promise. In such a case nothing can be obtained, either upon the contract or upon a quantum meruit, for what has been performed. All must have been performed.⁹⁸

g. Subsidiary Promises. Where there are several terms in a contract, a breach committed by one of the parties may be a breach of a term which the parties have not, upon a reasonable construction of the contract, regarded as vital to its existence. Such a term is said to be subsidiary, and a breach thereof does not discharge the other party. He is bound to continue his performance of the contract, but may bring an action to recover such damages as he has sustained by the default.⁹⁹ A frequent illustration of a subsidiary promise is found in the warranty of quality on the sale of goods.¹ The prevailing rule is that where a promise is to be performed in the course of the performance of the contract, and after some of the consideration of which it forms a part has been given, it will

Illustration.—This point is illustrated by a case in which the master of a ship gave a sailor a note promising to pay him thirty guineas, which was more than the ordinary wages, “provided he proceeds, continues, and does his duty as second mate in the said ship from hence to the port of Liverpool.” The sailor died after having performed the agreement for about seven weeks, but about three weeks before the ship reached Liverpool. The court held that the sailor’s representatives could not recover upon the express contract, for its terms were unfulfilled; nor could they recover upon a quantum meruit for such services as he had rendered because the terms of the express contract excluded the arising of any such implied contract as would form the basis of a claim upon a quantum meruit. “It may fairly be considered,” it was said, “that the parties themselves understood that if the whole duty were performed, the mate was to receive the whole sum, and that he was not to receive anything unless he did continue on board during the whole voyage.” *Cutter v. In a leading case on this point, the plaintiff, a professional singer, had entered into a contract with defendant, director of an opera, for his services as a singer for a considerable time, and upon a number of terms, one of which was that plaintiff should be in London without fail at least six days before the commencement of his engagement for the purpose of rehearsals. Plaintiff broke this term by arriving only two days before the commencement of the engagement, and defendant treated this breach as a discharge of the contract. The court held that, in the absence of any express declaration that the term was vital to the contract, it must “look to the whole contract, and, . . . see whether the particular stipulation goes to the root of the matter, so that a failure to perform it would render the performance of the rest of the contract by the plaintiff a thing different in substance from what the defendant has stipulated for; or whether it merely partially affects it and may be compensated for in damages,” and the court held that the term did not go to the root of the matter, so as to constitute a condition precedent. Bettini v. Gye, 1 Q. B. D. 183, 45 L. J. Q. B. 209, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 246, 24 Wkly. Rep. 551. And see MacAndrew v. Chapple, L. R. 1 C. P. 643, 12 Jur. N. S. 567, 35 L. J. C. P. 281, 14 L. T. Rep. N. be regarded as subsidiary, and its breach will not effect a discharge unless there be words expressing that it is a condition precedent, or unless the performance of the thing promised be plainly essential to the contract.² In some jurisdictions there are decisions to the contrary.³

X. JOINT AND SEVERAL CONTRACTS.

A. The Different Kinds of Promises—1. IN GENERAL. There are three kinds of promises or covenants,⁴ viz., those that are several, those that are joint, and those that are joint and several. The first and simplest form is the covenant of one with another; making a several covenant on each side; or two or more may covenant together with one, making a joint covenant on the one side and a several on the other; or two or more may together covenant with two or more, making a joint covenant on each side; or two or more may wish to bind themselves together as a company or a partnership, and also separately as individuals for the performance of the same thing, which is a joint and several covenant.⁵

2. PROMISES ON ONE SIDE ONLY. All contracts do not contain mutual promises. The covenant may be upon one side only; as where A and B for a consideration promise with C to pay an annuity to D. There the covenant is on one side and only one side, that is, the covenantee can bring suit; for it is presumed that one will bring suit upon a covenant made by another, and not upon a covenant made by himself. In the above case the promise is made upon one side only, and therefore only he to whom the covenant was made can bring suit, for he himself, as the other party, has made no covenant.⁶

3. PROMISES ON BOTH SIDES. Mutual promises may be made on both sides at the same time relative to the same subject-matter;⁷ but the promises may be dif-

Wisconsin.—Bast v. Byrne, 51 Wis. 531, 8 N. W. 494, 37 Am. Rep. 841.

England.—Graves v. Legg, 2 C. L. R. 1266, 9 Exch. 709, 716, 23 L. J. Exch. 228, where it was said: "Where a person has received part of the consideration for which he entered into the agreement, it would be unjust, that, because he had not the whole, he should therefore be permitted to enjoy that part without either payment or doing anything for it. Therefore the law obliges him to perform the agreement on his part, leaving him to his remedy to recover any damage he may have sustained in not having received the whole consideration."

3. In New York for instance it is held that a contract for the sale of goods, to be delivered at specified times, is entire; that the vendee has a right to insist upon its performance as an entirety, unless he waives it; and, where the vendor refuses or fails to perform, the vendee is not bound either to pay for or to return what he has received as a part performance; and the same rule has been applied in the case of building contracts. Catlin v. Tobias, 26 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 183; Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 442; Champlin v. Rowley, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 187. And see Clark v. Baker, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 452; Haslack v. Mayers, 26 N. J. L. 284; Larkin v. Buck, 11 Ohio St. 561. See, generally, SALES.

4. The term "covenant" is a general one, bracing all contracts, as well those that are not under seal as those that are. 2 Bacon Abr. 550.

5. A joint and several obligation "is one which binds a plurality of persons. All are bound to fulfil the same obligation, and each is bound to fulfil the whole of it; and it is the option of the creditor to enforce the whole obligation against any one of those taken bound." Leake Contr. 377 [quoting the Lord President in Dundee Police Com. v. Stratton, as quoted in House of Lords in 1887]. See also Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 347; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (U. ferent in kind and are always different in substance. For instance, A, B, and C may jointly covenant to lease Blackacre to X, Y, and Z for a term of years, and X, Y, and Z may at the same time in the same instrument jointly and severally covenant to pay rent, repair, etc. There the covenants are different in kind, one being joint, the other joint and several; and different in substance, the one being to lease, the other to pay rent, etc. Each side is a covenantor and each a covenantee, but upon distinct covenants. The covenants on either side may be several, joint, or joint and several.⁸ The same form of covenant may be upon one side as upon the other; or there may be a different form of covenant on each side, as above shown. But to each of the three forms of covenants the liability attached is different.⁹ Since a covenantor may be upon the one side or the other of the contract, it becomes important to notice upon which covenant suit is brought. A covenantor is liable as to that which he himself covenants, according to that form in which he has chosen to bind himself. Different rules of law govern covenantors from those governing covenantees.¹⁰

B. Distinction Between Rights and Obligations. A right may belong to two or more individuals severally, but not to two or more jointly and severally; but it may belong to two or more jointly. An obligation may be imposed upon two or more persons severally or jointly, or jointly and severally at the same time.¹¹

C. Several Contracts — 1. PROMISORS. Two or more persons may bind themselves severally for the same matter, so that the creditor is simply entitled to claim the performance against each of them separately.¹² When a several obligation is entered into by two or more in one instrument, it is the same as though each had executed separate instruments,¹³ although they may all be for the same subject-matter; and consequently each obligation furnishes a several cause of action.¹⁴ The effect of several obligations is that, although they concern the same subject-matter, each obligor is liable only for his several promise, and cannot be held for the others.¹⁵ For example, in the case of a subscription paper, where each subscriber promises to pay the sum set opposite his name, it is unreasonable to suppose that any of them intended to become jointly liable for any or all of the other subscriptions.¹⁶ A suit brought against one of the obligors on his promise is no bar to a subsequent suit against another, and suit may be brought against each obligor at the option of the obligee.¹⁷

2. PROMISEES. One person may bind himself to each of several persons for the same debt or matter, so that each of the persons is separately entitled as creditor to claim the whole debt or performance.¹⁸

3. SURVIVORSHIP. The doctrine of survivorship does not apply to several contracts.¹⁹ If an obligor is deceased, his heirs or executors are liable on his several contract.²⁰

4. JOINT ACTION WILL NOT LIE. Where parties are bound severally only, their liability is separate and distinct, and in the absence of a statute, they cannot be sued jointly; and where the promises are several in respect of the promisees, they must sue separately and cannot sue jointly.²¹ This rule, however, is in some jurisdictions changed by statute.²²

D. Joint Contracts — 1. PROMISORS — a. In General. Where two or more make a joint promise, each is liable to the promisee for the whole debt or liability; neither is bound by himself, but both of them are bound jointly to the full extent of the promise.²³

b. Survivorship. Upon the death of one of several joint contractors, the legal liability under the contract devolves at common law on the surviving joint contractors or contractor; and the representative of the deceased cannot be sued at law, either alone or jointly with the survivors. Consequently, the whole legal liability ultimately devolves upon the last surviving contractor, and after his death upon his representatives.²⁴ By statute, however, in a number of states, in case of the death of one or more joint obligors or promisors, the joint debt or contract survives against the heirs or administrators as well as against the survivors.²⁵

Ohio.—Burgoyne v. Ohio L. Ins., etc., Co.,

The rule in this respect is the same in equity as at law, unless there are special circumstances which show that the liability should be treated as a several liability.²⁶ It is sometimes said that joint contracts will be treated in equity as joint and several ones.²⁷ But such is not the fact. A joint contract will be treated in equity as a joint and several one only where there is some special and equitable reason for so treating it.²⁸ Thus where money is loaned to two, who give a joint obligation for its repayment, equity will enforce the obligation against the representatives of the deceased obligor on the ground that "the lending to both creates a moral obligation in both to pay, and that the reasonable presumption is the parties intended their contract to be joint and several, but through fraud, ignorance, mistake or want of skill failed to accomplish their object."²⁹ But where no such equity exists, as in the case of the joint obligation of principal and surety, equity follows the law and the estate of the deceased surety is not held liable.³⁰

c. Effect of Release. In the absence of a statute, a release of one of several joint promisors will discharge all, although a mere covenant not to sue one joint promisor will not have such effect.³¹ But a release of one joint debtor by operation of law, as by a discharge in bankruptcy or insolvency, or a discharge by the exercise of a right to avoid the contract, as because of infancy, or a discharge by operation of the statute of limitations, does not affect the liability of the others.³²

d. Effect of Judgment. So also in the absence of a statute a judgment against one of several joint promisors is a bar to an action against them jointly.³³

e. Suit Must Be Against All. All the joint promisors must be joined in the suit, if living and within the jurisdiction of the court,³⁴ unless the rule is changed, as it is in some jurisdictions, by statute.³⁵ Where one of the joint debtors is dead,

35. By statute in some states the action may be brought against all or any of the or without the jurisdiction of the court, or has been discharged from the debt by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings, or where he has exercised a right, because of infancy or otherwise, to avoid the contract, or the debt is barred as against him by the statute of limitations, the other debtor or debtors may be sued without joining him.³⁶ If all are not joined, the defendants are not bound to answer, but if the defect in parties appears on the face of the pleadings, they may demur; or if it does not so appear they may plead in abatement.³⁷ A plea to the merits, or that he or they have not promised, is not allowed for non-joinder. Thus if the declaration sets out a promise by the defendant to plaintiff, and the contract sued on shows a joint promise by defendant and another to plaintiff, defendant cannot say that he has not promised.³⁸ Therefore by pleading to the merits the defendants will waive the right to have their coobligors joined in the action, and the judgment will be binding on those against whom it is given.³⁹

2. PROMISEES — a. In General. Where a promise is made to several jointly, they are entitled jointly and not separately, and must as a rule all join in a suit on the promise.⁴⁰ If one of them is not joined as a plaintiff, the defendant may plead in abatement, but failure to do so, unlike the case of non-joinder of joint debtors, will not constitute a waiver of the defect.⁴¹ If the defect appears upon the face of the record, it may be objected to by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment or on writ of error.⁴² If it does not so appear, there is still a variance between the contract as pleaded and proved which will be fatal.⁴³ If the declaration sets out a promise by defendant to plaintiff and the evidence shows a promise by defendant to plaintiff and another jointly, there is a fatal variance, for plaintiff has no separate right on the contract and therefore cannot sue alone.⁴⁴

b. Survivorship. Where one of several joint creditors or promisees dies, the legal right under the contract devolves upon the survivors, and they only can sue on the contract. The representative of the deceased creditor cannot be joined, nor can he sue alone.⁴⁵

c. Payment or Release. A payment of the debt to one of several joint promisees or a release given by one without the others joining will bind the others.⁴⁶ If the interest of obligees be taken as joint as to some, it must be joint as to all, for it cannot be joint as to some and several as to the remainder.⁴⁷ themselves jointly as one party, and also severally as separate parties, at the same time; in which case, besides the one joint contract, there are also as many several contracts as there are separate persons, the debt or matter of the contract being one and the same in all the contracts thus made. A joint and several contract is a contract with each promisor and a joint contract with all; therefore in a joint and several contract there is one more contract than there are promisors.⁴⁸ A joint and several covenant may be executed in two ways: (1) The obligors may covenant together in one instrument, binding themselves by such words as "We (our heirs, etc.) jointly covenant and agree," etc., and each may also bind himself at the same time severally in a separate instrument for the performance of the same thing; or (2) they may all be bound at the same time jointly and severally for the performance of the same thing, by uniting in one instrument the joint obligation of all and the several obligation of each.⁴⁹

b. Union of Joint and Several Liabilities. As a joint and several contract is not one obligation, but a combination in one instrument of one joint obligation and as many distinct several obligations as there are parties, it follows that the liabilities must be a combination of those attaching to joint contracts and of those attaching to several contracts; so that if action be brought against them all jointly they are all liable as upon a joint contract;⁵⁰ and if against them all separately, they are liable as upon a several contract.⁵¹ The same rules govern as in joint or as in several contracts, with the following additional provisions.

c. Liable Altogether or Singly. The obligors are liable either jointly or severally and covenantees are not privileged or do not have the option to sue some covenantors jointly and others severally; they must be sued either jointly or severally.⁵² That is to say, joint and several covenantors are liable altogether on

If he sues two only of the three he still proceeds upon it as a joint bond, for he can sue only one or each of them on a several bond. There is no difference between suing two only of three joint obligors and one only of two joint obligors.

the joint obligation, or each severally upon the separate obligations. For example, if five be bound jointly and severally the covenantees cannot sue three only upon the joint obligation and the other two upon their several obligations. If any be sued jointly all must be sued jointly, or if one be sued severally all are liable severally until satisfaction is secured.⁵³

d. Both Remedies Available Until Satisfaction. It is settled in England that the promisee may bring a joint action against all and a several action against each promisor until satisfaction is obtained.⁵⁴ This doctrine is followed in some of the United States,⁵⁵ and was followed by Mr. Justice Story in a case decided by him in 1836.⁵⁶ The supreme court of the United States, however, has held to the contrary.⁵⁷

No. 14,907, 2 Sumn. 310) was brought at law in May, 1846, on a joint judgment against a deceased obligor, and it was held that plaintiff could not recover. The second action (U. S. v. Cushman, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,908, 2 Sumn. 426) was brought in equity, in October, 1846, for the amount of the joint judgment against the deceased obligor, but the action was based on the original contract which was joint and several; and it was held that plaintiff could recover. And see Trafton v. U. S., 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,135, 3 Story 646. In U. S. v. Cushman, supra (the second action), Mr. Justice Story said: "When a party enters into a joint and several obligation, he in effect agrees, that he will be liable to a joint action, and to a several action for the debt; and if so, then a joint judgment can be no bar to a several suit, if that judgment remains unsatisfied. The defect of the opposing argument is, that it supposes, that the obligee has an election only of the one remedy, or of the other; and that by electing a joint suit, he waives his right to maintain a several suit. That I take not to be a sound legal interpretation of the contract. The remedies are concurrent. And I know of no principle of law, which would have prevented the plaintiffs from bringing a joint suit and a several suit on the bond at the same time, and proceeding therein pari passu. It is true, they could have but one satisfaction. But we all know, that upon the same contract the plaintiff may often maintain different suits at the same time, though he can have but one satisfaction. A joint judgment is not per se a satisfaction of a joint and several contract."

57. In U. S. v. Price, 9 How. (U. S.) 83, 93, 13 L. ed. 56, Mr. Justice Grier delivered the decision of the court which is based on the following grounds: "The law on this subject is too well settled to admit of a doubt, or require the citation of authorities, that, if two or more are bound jointly and severally, the obligee may elect to sue them jointly or severally. But having once made his election and obtained a joint judgment, his bond is merged in the judgment, quia transit in rem judicatam. It is essential to the idea of election that a party cannot have both. One judgment against all or each of the obligors is a satisfaction and extinguishment of the bond. It no longer exists as a security, being superseded, merged, and extinguished in the judgment, which is a security of a higher nature. The creditor has no longer a remedy, either at law or in equity, on his bond, but only on his judgment. The obligor is no longer bound by the bond; but by the judgment, it has become the evidence of his indebtedness, and the measure of his liability." The two grounds upon which Justice Grier's decision is based are: (1) That the obligee "may elect to sue them jointly or severally," but having elected one he is barred from the use of the other remedy; (2) that one judgment in a joint and several contract merges all the liabilities in the judgment—transit in rem judicatam. As to the first ground. It is not denied that the obligee has only the right to sue jointly or severally and not both on the basis of interest, but this question does not concern the rights of obligees but the liability of obligors. And it is established beyond question that obligors are bound according to the intention clearly expressed. The court has either attempted to apply to obligors the rule governing obligees, which is against the overwhelming weight of authority, or else has mistaken its application; either of which is fatal to the decision as based on this ground. The second ground, that is, the merger of the contract in the judgment, is answered by two or three leading decisions which have established the law in England. In Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East 251, 258, 7 Rev. Rep. 449, decided by Lord Ellenborough in 1803, one of three joint obligors gave a bill of exchange for a debt secured by a covenant. A judgment was recovered on the bill, but that judgment was held no bar to a subsequent suit on the covenant as the bill was not taken in satisfaction of the debt. Lord Ellenborough said: "I have always understood the principle of transit in rem judicatam to relate only to the particular cause of action in which the judgment is recovered, operating as a change of

2. PROMISEES. Promisees cannot be both joint and several; that is, persons must be entitled under a contract jointly only or severally only.⁵⁸ It is not possible by any words of joinder or severance to give the covenantees the election to sue separately and together, that is, both jointly and severally.⁵⁹

remedy from its being of a higher nature than before. But a judgment recovered in any form of action is still but a security for the original cause of action, until it be made productive in satisfaction to the party; and therefore till then it cannot operate to change any other collateral concurrent remedy which the party may have." In the case of In re Davison, 13 Q. B. D. 50, 53, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 635, defendants had executed a joint bond, but by reason of fraud in misappropriation of funds it became in fact joint and several. A judgment had been rendered against all covenantors jointly and the same question was presented as is presented here and the same objections made; but the court, by Mr. Justice Cave, said: "Does the fact that they have obtained a joint judgment only necessarily preclude them from proving against the separate estate of one of the bankrupts? If so precluded, it can only be either because the separate cause of action is merged in the joint judgment, or because by suing on the joint cause of action they have elected to rely on that only, and have thus waived the separate cause of action. First, Is the separate cause of action merged in the joint judgment? Take the illustration of a joint and several note against A., B., and C., which is usually comprised in one document. The result is the same as if three separate notes were given as well as the joint note. If A. is sued to judgment on his separate note, is the joint note of A., B., and C., merged in the judgment? On principle why should it be? The object of taking a joint and several note is to have the separate liability of each promisor as well as the joint liability of all, and why should the fact that the separate liability of one promisor has merged in a separate judgment against him prove a bar to an action on the joint note? Is there any authority? King v. Hoare, (2 D. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. 29, 13 M. & W. 494) is the leading case, and there it was held that a judgment without satisfaction recovered against one of two joint debtors was a bar to an action against the other, but it was pointed out both at the bar and in the judgment that the law is otherwise when the obligation is joint and several. This very point was decided as long ago as Drake v. Mitchell (supra)." Mr. Justice Cave then quotes from that case and continues: "No authorities to the contrary can be found, and it seems clear both on principle and authority that a joint judgment is not a bar to a separate cause of action. Neither is the separate cause of action gone by reason of the doctrine of election or waiver. This doctrine applies only where the person having the cause of action is put to elect between two inconsistent remedies, as in the case of the right to sue either the agent or the principal when disclosed: Curtis v. Williamson (L. R. 10 Q. B. 57, 44 L. J. Q. B. 27, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 678, 23 Wkly. Rep. 236) or the old or new partners in a firm where the old partners are liable only by estoppel, as in Scarf v. Jardine (7 App. Cas. 345, 51 L. J. Q. B. 612, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 258, 30 Wkly. Rep. 893) or in the case of the right to sue for a tort or to waive the tort and sue for the proceeds in the hands of the wrongdoer. In these cases the plaintiff may elect which remedy he will have, but when he has elected one remedy he has thereby waived his right to the other. In this case on the contrary it is admitted that if the respondents could have proved a fraudulent misappropriation (which they did) by the partners they might have had both a joint and separate judgment, and consequently there was no election and no waiver." And see Prosser v. Evans, [1895] 1 Q. B. 108. And the English doctrine is supported by Mr. Justice Field in the United States supreme court in Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 231, 18 L. ed. 783, where he in effect controverts the opinion of Mr. Justice Grier in U. S. v. Price, supra, and distinguishes between joint and joint and several contracts in the following words: "When the contract is joint, and not joint and several, the entire cause of action is merged in the judgment."

Liable to one suit only at one time.—It would seem that covenantees may not at the same time bring a joint action against all and a several action against each obligor. No case has decided directly upon this point, although Mr. Justice Story in U. S. v. Cushman, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,908, 2 Sumn. 426, advanced the opinion that such actions could be brought pari passu. The better opinion is no doubt against this view, not because Mr. Justice Story's opinion conflicts with the theory of a joint and several obligation or contract, for, since each obligation is a joint and several contract and furnishes its own liability and a separate cause of action, such actions could legally be brought, but it would be rather against the spirit of equity to allow such a union of suits in their nature vexatious and harassing.

the promises are several or joint, or joint and several, depends upon a construction of the language used, and the intention of the parties as manifested by the language used must be followed by the court.⁶⁰ If the contract made by several persons purports simply to bind themselves, or to covenant, without more, the obligation or covenant is taken to be joint only, and not several; if the contract purports that they bind themselves or covenant severally, the liability is separate; if they purport to bind themselves jointly and severally, or to bind themselves and each of them, or to covenant for themselves and each of them, using both joint and several words, the liability is both joint and several.⁶¹

2. PRESUMPTION THAT PROMISES ARE JOINT. Promises of several persons are presumed to be joint and not several, unless a contrary intention is shown in the instrument,⁶² or there is some statutory provision to the contrary.⁶³ In case the parties use but one instrument for a joint and for several obligations, it is obvious that the wording should be very clear to show the intention of the parties to be bound other than merely jointly, or merely severally, that is to say, both jointly and severally. Hence the rule given by the authorities that to create a several liability, or joint and several liability, there must be express words of severance.⁶⁴

3. PROMISOR'S LIABILITY GOVERNED BY INTENT. As the promisors or covenantors may bind themselves severally, jointly, or jointly and severally, or in any manner or in any words, the only question is to determine the intention. If by any means the courts can construe that from the words of the instrument it will be done; if that cannot be done, then all the circumstances of the case and the interests of the parties will be looked at, to discover their intention.⁶⁵ In the case of subscriptions by a number of persons to promote some common enterprise, the promises, although joint in form, are held to be several. Each subscriber is held to promise severally to pay the amount of his subscription, and an action against all the subscribers jointly will not lie. It clearly appears from the character of such a contract that each subscriber only intends to bind himself for his own subscription, and this intention must prevail, notwithstanding the joint form of the promise.⁶⁶

4. PROMISEE'S RIGHTS GOVERNED BY INTEREST—a. In General. On the other hand the courts have held from very early times, and the weight of authority and reason continues to be, that the rights of covenantees or promisees is to be determined by their interests in the contract.⁶⁷ What the nature of that interest is to be and how it shall be determined has been the subject of some controversy. The early courts decided what interests should govern from the facts of each case, without laying down any general rule.

b. Baron Parke's Rule of Interest. The following rule established by Baron Parke in 1843 is now generally recognized as the correct one: "The rule is, that a covenant will be construed to be joint or several according to the interest of the parties appearing upon the face of the deed, if the words are capable of that construction; not that it will be construed to be several by reasons of several interests, if it be expressly joint."⁶⁸ In other words that interest shown upon the face of the deed shall govern where possible. From this general rule the following deductions may be made.

c. Legal Interest. First, the names of parties appearing in the instrument as covenantees create in them a legal interest according to which, if no higher interest appear in some of them, all must be made parties plaintiff.⁶⁹ For instance, if a covenant be made with two jointly for the benefit of a third, both covenantees should sue jointly, for the words of the covenant correspond with the legal interest, since no higher interest appears. So also if a covenant be made with two for the payment of a sum to one of them.⁷⁰ But if a covenant be made with two jointly to pay a separate distinct sum to each separately, a higher interest appears and each must sue severally, notwithstanding words that otherwise would give them a joint right of action.⁷¹

69. Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East 497, 6 Rev. Rep. 334.

Unless a several interest appears on the face of the deed, several parties must sue

d. Higher Interest. This leads to the second deduction from the general rule; namely, that where from the face of the covenant a higher interest appears than that granted by the technical words of joinder or severalty, that interest must govern to protect the substantial rights of parties thereto. And that interest may be legally related to the subject-matter of the contract or beneficially related to the fruits thereof.⁷² According to this rule the circumstances of each case are to govern, and it is not inconceivable that a covenant may be so framed as to give a joint right in two or more to sue and also a distinct several right in one, based upon interest. For instance, where one of two tenants in common is dead, a covenant for rent may be made by two lessees for payment to one lessor severally and to the three heirs of the other lessors jointly. These are in reality, however, distinct, although like covenants united in one instrument;⁷³ that is to say, a joint covenant to one and a joint covenant to three.

5. SINGULAR AND PLURAL NUMBER. A promise by two or more in the singular number is prima facie several, while a promise in the plural is prima facie joint.⁷⁴ But as in all other cases, if the whole instrument shows a contrary intention, that intention will govern.⁷⁵ Thus the words "we promise to pay" import a joint obligation.⁷⁶

6. SEVERAL PROMISES. The following have been held to be several obligations: An agreement entered into by a number of persons to "pay the sum annexed to their names" in order to make up an aggregate sum, to be paid to another person in consideration of services to be rendered;⁷⁷ an agreement with a storekeeper

Where an agreement was in the following form: "I hereby agree to pay James B. Lee one hundred and twenty-five dollars and to Ira Case one hundred and ten dollars, by the first day of April, A. D. 1862; provided Wm. M. Power execute," etc., it was held that the rights of action of Lee and Case were several and distinct. Rorabacher v. Lee, 16 Mich. 169. Where a contract between four persons provided that one was to represent the interests of the others in the coal trade at a certain place, selling their coal only, taking from them in equal quantities, agreeing to labor to improve the market, and to give the others the advantage of any improvement, except his fair proportion, and to keep his books open to them, they agreeing to aid his trade, it was held that the contract was several, not joint. If the terms of a covenant by creditors to indemnify the debtor against demands by them or persons claiming under them are general, it will be construed a several covenant by each creditor, and not a joint one by all. where parties enter into a contract under seal in their individual characters, they are jointly personally responsible, although they in fact contract as a committee in anticipation of an incorporation.⁸⁸ The fact that one of two builders contracting to build a house is to receive a certain fixed sum, and the other another, does not render the contract several, so as to prevent their maintaining a joint action thereon.⁸⁹

8. JOINT AND SEVERAL PROMISES. An agreement to pay money, signed by two, but in the body of it providing for the payment by one of them only, is a joint and several obligation.⁹⁰ So where the obligatory part of a bond was in these words: "We are holden and bound unto M. C. in the sum of $500, for the payment of which, we bind ourselves, and each of us," this was held a joint and several bond, on which an action could be brought against one of the obligors separately.⁹¹

XI. CONFLICT OF LAWS.

A. In General — 1. INTRODUCTION. The subject of conflict of laws rests entirely upon the comity of nations. The law of one state has, proprio vigore, no force or authority beyond the jurisdiction of its own courts.⁹² Whatever effect

89. Fauble v. Davis, 48 Iowa 462.

A mortgage executed by one of a partnership in his own name, but for the firm, and upon property held by him in trust for the firm, by which he agrees to assume the payment of certain notes of another person, they being for the purchase of the real estate, and the partnership having an interest in the real estate, is the joint contract only of all the partners, and not the several contract of each. Crosby v. Jeroloman, 37 Ind. 264.

Other illustrations of joint contracts are: An agreement to indemnify one from loss by becoming bail, commencing, "We agree," etc., and signed by a number of names, with a certain sum of money marked opposite to each, the entire amount being inadequate to meet the damages claimed (McCullis v. Thurston, 27 Vt. 596); an instrument signed by several persons, proposing that if a railroad company will extend its road to a certain point, "we will undertake" to buy a certain amount of stock (New Haven, etc., Co. v. Hayden, 119 Mass. 361); an order by a committee of a political party of a public dinner of a caterer, the committee being jointly liable for the price (Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 67, 40 Am. Dec. 540); an agreement by three persons hiring of a livery a horse, carriage, and driver (O'Brien v. Bound, 2 Speers (S. C.) 495, 42 Am. Dec. 384). Where a number of persons associated for the purpose of instituting a bank, and at a meeting of the associates, at which all were not present, an agent was appointed to attend the legislature and procure a charter, and he accordingly undertook the service and endeavored to procure the charter, but did not succeed, it was held that they were jointly liable to the agent for his services and expenses, as well those who were not present at the meeting as those who were.

Sproat v. Porter, 9 Mass. 300. Where a written contract is made in form between two, and signed by the parties named, and at the same time a third person adds, "I agree to be security for the promisor in the above contract," with his signature, the latter is holden as a joint promisor. Norris v. Spencer, 18 Me. 324. Where two persons are responsible on a sealed instrument to pay for the erection of a building, and both superintend the work, one acting in the other's absence, and always with a joint view to the same object, a parol promise by each, at different times to waive the written contract, and pay the reasonable value, makes the promise joint. Monroe v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 20 Am. Dec. 475. An agreement to sell property to three persons, one of them to make a cash payment, and the others to make a conveyance of real estate, is a joint obligation on their part, and the seller is not liable to perform until all three have performed. *Brewster v. is given to it by the courts of foreign countries or other states is the result of that international comity which is the product of modern civilization. It is left to each state or nation to say how far it will recognize this comity, and to what extent it will be permitted to control its own laws.⁹³ And because the effect of a foreign law depends so largely upon state comity, there is, as would naturally be expected, considerable conflict in the authorities where the laws conflict.⁹⁴ The law of the domicile of the party does not necessarily govern his contract or determine his rights or obligations. The question is where was it made or where was it to be performed as the case may be.⁹⁵

2. ACTION ON CONTRACTS TRANSITORY. The rights and liabilities upon an executory contract are generally transitory and enforceable in the courts of any country obtaining jurisdiction of the promisor's person.⁹⁶ The effect to be given to such contract may be different, however, in one country from the effect which would be given it in another. The important question then arises, Which law is to govern in a particular case?

3. INTENTION OF PARTIES THE TEST. The first general principle is that a contract is to be governed by the law with a view to which it was made, in other words the law which is to decide upon the nature, interpretation, and validity of an engagement is that which the parties have either expressly or presumptively incorporated with their contract as constituting their obligation.⁹⁷

4. CONTRACT EXPRESSLY PRESCRIBING LAW TO GOVERN. Where the parties have expressly provided that the contract shall be governed by the law of a particular country this intention will as a rule be carried out by the courts.⁹⁸ Thus where

"That the laws of any state cannot, by any inherent authority, be entitled to respect extraterritorially, or beyond the jurisdiction of the State which enacts them, is the necessary result of the independence of distinct sovereignties. But the courtesy, comity, or mutual convenience of nations, amongst which commerce has introduced so great an intercourse, has sanctioned the admission and operation of foreign laws relative to contracts; so that it is now a principle generally received, that contracts are to be construed and interpreted according to the laws of the State in which they are made, unless from their tenor it is perceived that they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other State. And nothing can be more just than this principle. For, when a merchant of France, Holland, or England, enters into a contract in his own country, he must be presumed to be conversant of the laws of the place where he is and to expect that his contract is to be judged of and carried into effect according to those laws; and the merchant with whom he deals, if a foreigner, must be supposed to submit himself to the same laws, unless he has taken care to stipulate for a performance in some other country, or has, in some other way, excepted his particular contract from the laws of the country where he is." *Blanchard v. The term "proper law of a contract" means the law or laws by which the parties to a contract intended, or may fairly be presumed to have intended, the contract to be governed, or in other words the law or laws to which the parties intended, or may fairly be presumed to have intended, to submit themselves, or more accurately, although in more cumbersome language, the law of the country or the laws of the countries by the law or the laws whereof the parties to a contract intended or may fairly be presumed to have intended the contract to be governed. *Dacey Conf. two persons make a contract in England, but by its very terms it is provided that it shall be governed by the laws of Scotland, the law of Scotland then becomes the proper law of the contract, and the law by which it is to be interpreted and its legality decided.⁹⁹ "Parties may substitute the laws of another place or country than that where the contract is entered into, both in relation to the legality and extent of the original obligation, and in relation to the respective rights of the parties, for a breach or violation of its terms."¹ This is part of the jus gentium, and is enforced ex comitate, when the enforcement of the contract is sought in the courts of a country governed by a different rule than the local or adopted law of that contract.²

5. CONTRACT IMPLIEDLY PRESCRIBING LAW TO GOVERN. The contract may impliedly prescribe the law. Where the intention is not expressed, it is to be inferred from the terms and nature of the contract and the general circumstances of the case, and such inferred intention determines the proper law of the contract.³ Thus where a Scotchman marries a Scotchwoman in England, and the marriage settlement is executed in England, yet if it is in the Scotch form, the law of Scotland will be presumed to have been meant as the proper law of the contract.⁴

6. LAW DECLARED BY STATUTE. Comity is overruled by positive law.⁵ Where a statute intended to have an extraterritorial operation makes a contract either valid or invalid, its validity or invalidity must be determined by such statute, independently of the law of any foreign country whatever.⁶ In this country it is held that a penal statute will not be given an extraterritorial operation where it does not expressly so provide.⁷

Illustrations.—Thus where a citizen of Chicago made a contract with the agents of a line of British steamers to carry cattle from Baltimore to Liverpool, and it was stipulated that any questions arising should be determined by the law of England, it was held that a federal court sitting in Maryland would recognize this stipulation, and would apply the English rule of law to the solution of the questions in controversy under the contract. The Oranmore, 24 Fed. 922. So where an English underwriter executed in England a policy of insurance which provided that it should be construed and enforced in accordance with French law, it was held that it would be so construed in an English court. *Greer v. Statement of rule.—"Sometimes," says Dicey, "though not often, an Act of Parliament lays down a positive rule as to the validity or invalidity of a contract wherever made. Whenever an Act of Parliament thus validates or invalidates a contract, a British Court must obey the enactment, without considering the effect of any foreign law which might otherwise be applicable to the case." The illustrations given by Dicey are of a marriage made in France but void there because not following the formalities required by French law; but made valid by the English Foreign Marriage Act; a marriage of a member of the British royal family to a foreigner in a foreign country which would be good there but contrary to an English statute, no matter where celebrated; and a loan by a British subject in a foreign country of money to carry on the slave trade void wherever made by the English slave trade act. 2. PLACE OF PERFORMANCE. When the contract is made in one country and is to be performed either wholly or partly in another, the proper law of the contract, especially as to the mode of performance, may be presumed to be the law of the country where performance is to take place, the lex loci solutionis.¹² When the contract is silent on the subject, the place of the making of the contract is presumed to be the place of performance.¹³ In the absence of evidence to the defendants' accommodation; the money being paid in New York, it was held in an action in New York to recover the amount paid on such bills, that the law of New York, and not of Missouri, governed the contract, notwithstanding the defendants resided in Missouri, and the bills were drawn there. *Suydam v. contrary, the place of performance, the laws of which govern the validity of a contract, is presumed to be the place of the common domicile of the parties.¹⁴

3. WHERE CONTRACT IS MADE. A contract is as a rule considered as entered into at the place where the acceptance is made.¹⁵ Where an offer is made in one state, and accepted by letter or telegraph in another, the contract is completed in the latter state by sending the letter or telegram.¹⁶ So where negotiations for a contract are carried on between parties living in different states, partly by the interchange of letters, and partly by oral communications through an agent, the contract is regarded as made in the state or place where it first takes effect, so as to become a binding obligation upon both parties.¹⁷ A contract by a traveling agent which requires ratification by his principal is considered as made at the place where the ratification is given.¹⁸ So under a statute giving a lien on vessels for certain debts contracted in the state, the place where the services are in fact rendered, although rendered under and in pursuance of a contract made at another place, is the place where the debt is deemed to have been contracted.¹⁹ In the case of a deed, the contract is made where the deed is delivered, and not where it is prepared and signed.²⁰

4. FACT OF AGREEMENT. The question whether in fact an agreement has been entered into is to be determined by the law of the place where the parties were at the time the alleged agreement was entered into, and not by the law of the

And where an insolvent debtor, residing and doing business and having his property in Minnesota, made in that state an agreement with a creditor residing in another state, to prefer him, by sending to him at his residence goods to be applied on his claim, and the debtor sent the place where it is attempted to enforce the agreement.²¹ Such a question does not relate to the remedy; nor is it a question of procedure or evidence relating to the remedy. The rule, as well said in one case, "that matters pertaining to the remedy are governed by the forum always assumes that there is a contract upon which a remedy is sought. It cannot be properly appealed to, to determine the question of contract or no contract."²²

5. CAPACITY OF PARTIES. The capacity of the parties to make a contract is as a general rule to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is entered into;²³ as for example the enforceability of a bond made by a married woman,²⁴ of the contract of a person under guardianship,²⁵ the age at which a person may contract.²⁶

"The capacity, state, and condition of persons according to the law of their domicile will generally be regarded as to acts done, rights acquired, and contracts made in the place of their domicile, touching property situated therein. If these acts, rights, and contracts have validity there, they will be held equally valid everywhere. If invalid there they will be invalid everywhere. As to acts done and rights acquired and contracts made in other countries touching property therein, the law of the country where the acts are done, the rights are acquired, or the contracts are made, will generally govern in respect to the capacity, state, and condition of persons. Hence we may deduce as a corollary that, in regard to questions of minority or majority, . . . and other personal qualities and disabilities, the law of the domicile of birth, or the law of any other acquired and fixed domicile, is not generally to govern, but the lex loci contractus aut actus, the law of the place where the contract is made or the act done." *Story Confl. and the execution and acknowledgment.²⁸ If the place of the contract requires a written notice, a verbal notice will not avail, although such a notice would be good in the state where suit is brought.²⁹

7. DEFENSES. A defense or discharge which is good by the law of the place where the contract is made or to be performed is of equal validity wherever the question may be litigated.³⁰ It is a well-settled principle that if a party be justified as to a transaction in the country where it took place he is justified everywhere.³¹ Thus if the defense of infancy is valid by the lex loci contractus, it is good wherever the contract may be sued on.³² And so it is of the defense of tender or payment.³³

8. SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM. At common law a set-off to an action allowed by the local law is a part of the remedy, and may therefore be admissible by the lex fori, although not admissible by the law of the country where the contract was entered into.³⁴ But where the defense inheres in the transaction itself, and does not arise out of something wholly distinct and independent it may be set up wherever the contract is put in suit, and its effect must be determined by the lex loci contractus and not by the lex fori.³⁵

9. VALIDITY OF CONTRACT — a. General Rule. The validity of the contract, that is, the question whether the contract is a legal or an illegal one, is judged by the law on the subject in the state or country in which the contract is entered into, the general rule being that a contract good where made is good everywhere, and a contract invalid where made is invalid everywhere.³⁶ This has been deter-

Thus where A, B, and C agreed to purchase lottery tickets and share in the proceeds of the winnings, the agreement being made in Missouri where lotteries were illegal, but the tickets being issued and the drawing to take place in Louisiana, where they were legal, it was held that the agreement was governed by the law of Missouri and was void. *Roselle v. 43. Any rate of interest which is authorized by the law of the place where a contract is made, or of the place where it is to be performed or paid, will be recognized and enforced in the courts of other governments, whose laws would otherwise make such rates of interest usurious. *McAllister v. 44. Thus where a building association loaned money in Virginia to a citizen of that state on land located there, but the bond was made payable in New York, it was held to be governed by the law of New York. *National Mut. Where a life-insurance policy was issued by a New York company to a citizen of Missouri, on an application made in Missouri and accepted in New York, where the policy was drawn and signed, but the policy was delivered in Missouri, the premiums being payable in New York as well as the loss, it was held that the policy was governed by the Missouri statute relating to policies delivered in that state. Wall v. Co., 22 Fed. 109. See INSURANCE. And see as to the law of place of performance supra, XI, B, 2.

be determined by the law of the place of making.⁴⁵ So it has been held that where a contract is declared void by the law of the state or country where it is made, it cannot be enforced as a valid contract in any other, although by its terms it was to have been performed there.⁴⁶ A contract good according to the law either of the place of contract or of performance will be presumed to have been made in view of the law of that place where it would be good.⁴⁷ And where the court can see, either from the contract itself or from evidence abundant, that the parties intended that the law of the place where it was executed should govern it, instead of that of the place of performance, as if the contract would be legal in the former place and illegal in the latter, the intention of the parties will prevail.⁴⁸

b. Exceptions to Rule—(i) IN GENERAL. The general doctrine that a contract valid where made is valid also in the courts of any other country or state where it is sought to be enforced, even though had it been made in the latter country or state it would be illegal and hence unenforceable, is subject to several exceptions: (1) Where the contract in question is contrary to good morals; (2) where the state of the forum or its citizens would be injured through the enforcement by its courts of contracts of the kind in question; (3) where the contract violates the positive legislation of the state of the forum, that is, is contrary to its constitution or statutes; and (4) where the contract violates the public policy of the state of the forum.⁴⁹

(ii) AGREEMENTS CONTRARY TO GOOD MORALS. The courts of a country or state are not bound to, and will not, enforce contracts which offend public morals, no matter where they are made.⁵⁰ In many countries, it was said in an old case, a contract may be maintained by a courtesan for the price of her prostitution; and one may suppose an action to be brought here upon such a contract which arose in such a country; but that would never be allowed in this country.⁵¹ So marriages entered into in a foreign country, although legal there, would not be

Thus where the law of the place of performance differs from that of the place of execution of a contract for the sale of lands, it is material that the subject-matter of the contract is in the former place, since that fact is evidence that the place of performance was not chosen to evade the laws of the place of execution. Berrien v. Wright, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 208.

49. These exceptions are grounded on the principle that the rule of comity is not a right of any state or country, but is permitted and accepted by all civilized communities from mutual interest and convenience, from a sense of the inconvenience which would otherwise result, and from moral necessity to do justice in order that justice may be done in return. It belongs exclusively to each nation to form its own judgment of what it prescribes to it—what is proper or improper for it to do; and it will examine and determine what it can do for another without neglecting the duty which it owes to itself.

(iii) AGREEMENTS INJURIOUS TO THE STATE OR ITS CITIZENS. Where the state or its citizens would be injured if the agreement were enforced in its courts, they will refuse to do so.⁵³ Illustrating this principle are cases in which the courts of a state have refused to enforce contracts by foreign corporations, authorized by their charters, but prohibited by the laws of the state to similar domestic corporations.⁵⁴

(iv) AGREEMENTS CONTRARY TO CONSTITUTION OR LEGISLATION OF STATE. Where the contract violates the positive legislation of the state, that is, where it is contrary to its constitution or statutes, it will not be enforced.⁵⁵ The cases

54. See CORPORATIONS. In an Illinois case it was admitted that a Missouri building association had loaned money in Illinois at a usurious rate, unless it fell within the statute of Illinois providing that no interest, premiums, or fines accruing to a building association should be deemed usurious, and that the shares of stock in such associations should be one hundred dollars each, payable in periodical instalments not to exceed two dollars per share. The Missouri association was organized under an act authorizing the issuance of full paid-up interest-bearing stock, of the par value of one thousand dollars per share, to be matured when the dividends and sum invested equaled the face value. It was held by the supreme court of Illinois that, as this was not authorized by the local statute, the rule of comity did not apply, and the contract would be held usurious, since the building association provided for by the latter statute was not within the spirit and meaning, but was opposed to the idea of such an association as was protected by the local statute. Said the court: "Under these statutes, and under the general rule of comity existing between States, we will allow to foreign corporations a standing in our courts to enforce the valid contracts they may have made with our citizens, and all valid liens against property situated in this State. But that rule of comity does not require that we should allow foreign corporations to enforce contracts here if such enforcement would be in conflict with our laws, and, being thus in conflict, the enforcement whereof would work against our own citizens and give to the citizens of another State an advantage which the resident has not." *Rhodes v. Lotteries.—In a New Jersey case certain persons had obtained lottery franchises from the states of Missouri, Virginia, Kentucky, and Louisiana, and had entered into a partnership agreement for the conduct of the lotteries and the divisions of the profits. One of them filed a bill in a New Jersey court for the dissolution of the partnership and the sale and distribution of the assets. The bill was dismissed, the court saying that "assuming that all the contracts and transactions involved in it occurred in states where they were tolerated by law, my opinion is that this court will not undertake to enforce and administer them." The public policy of the state toward lotteries was shown by the statute of New Jersey, which made the selling of lottery tickets a misdemeanor, declared lotteries public nuisances, and otherwise penalized the carrying on of such enterprises within its borders. Watson v. Murray, 23 N. J. Eq. 257. See LOTTERIES.

Agreement to make will.—By a statute of Massachusetts an agreement to make a will "is not binding" unless in writing. A woman of Massachusetts, being in Maine, orally promised the plaintiff that if she would leave Maine and take care of her during her life she would leave her all her property at her death. The plaintiff accepted the proposal, went with her to Massachusetts, performed her part of the agreement, and at her death sued her executor on the promise. It was shown that the oral contract was good in Maine, but the court of Massachusetts refused to enforce it. "The statute," says Holmes, J., "evidently embodies a fundamental policy. The ground, of course, is the prevention of fraud and perjury, which are deemed likely to be practiced without this safeguard. . . . If the policy of Massachusetts makes void an oral contract of this sort made within the State, the same policy forbids that Massachusetts' testators should be sued here upon such contracts without written evidence, wherever they are made." Emery v. Burbank, 163 Mass. 326, 328, 39 N. E. 1026, 47 Am. St. Rep. 456, 28 L. R. A. 57.

Corporate bonds and mortgages.—A contract was made in New York for the issue of bonds and the creation of a mortgage by a corporation. It was good in New York, but was in contravention of the provision in the Pennsylvania constitution against the fictitious issue of corporate stock. The supreme court of Pennsylvania refused to enforce it because it was repugnant to the public policy of the state. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co.'s Appeal, (Pa. 1886) 4 Atl. 385. English chancellor in these words: "It appears to me, however, plain, on general principles, that this Court will not enforce a contract against the public policy of this country, wherever it may be made. It seems to me almost absurd to suppose that the Courts of this country should enforce a contract which they consider to be against public policy simply because it happens to have been made somewhere else."⁵⁸ This rule has been applied to contracts of marriage between persons within the prohibited degrees,⁵⁹ or between whites and blacks;⁶⁰ to

Contracts of married women.—Mr. Justice Gray, in Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, admits that in a state where the common law prevailed in full force, as to married women—the common law which deemed the feme sole incapable of binding herself by any contract whatever—such an incapacity would be so fixed by the public policy of the state that it would not yield to the law of another state in which she might undertake to make a contract. But if the state had enlarged her capacity to contract, although not to the extent of other states, this relaxation in itself would show such a change in the public policy on that subject as to make it likely that a contract of any kind made by her in another state and valid according to those laws would be recognized by it. The same principle was recognized in a recent case in New Jersey (Thompson v. Taylor, 66 N. J. L. 253, 49 Atl. 544, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 54 L. R. A. 585), where it was laid down that the statute of New Jersey that regulates the right of married women to make contracts of suretyship is not a declaration of a public policy that closes the courts of that state to rights of action arising in other jurisdictions, where the law is different. See also Bowles v. Field, 83 Fed. 886; infra, note 69; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Intoxicating liquors.—Although in some states a contract for the sale of intoxicating liquor, if prohibited by their laws, will not be enjoined, although made in a state where such sales are legal (see Davis v. Brownson, 6 Iowa 410; Webster v. Munger, 8 Gray (Mass.) 584), yet the contrary has been held even in a state which prohibits such sales on the ground that the views of the citizens on the subject of prohibition are not fixed or uniform, differing in neighboring localities in the same state. Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Usury.—So it is almost universally held that there is no such fixed policy as to the rate of interest on money as to make an agreement made in another state to pay a higher rate than is allowed where the action is brought unenforceable.

Sunday laws.—In Swann v. Swann, 21 Fed. 299, a contract made on Sunday in Tennessee was enforced in Arkansas, although such contracts were illegal there, the court saying that where a large class of citizens may, by the very terms of the Arkansas statute, make contracts and do work on Sunday, no fixed and great public policy on the subject was shown. See also Richardson v. Rowland, 40 Conn. 565; Said v. Stromberg, 55 Mo. App. 438. And see SUNDAY.

Lotteries.—In Com. v. Bassford, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 526, the state of Kentucky sued in New York on an agreement to sell lottery tickets. The action was allowed on the ground that although lotteries were illegal in New York, yet the policy of raising money for public lotteries in New York existed until ten years before that time. See also Thatcher v. Morris, 11 N. Y. 437; and, generally, LOTTERIES.

Slavery.—Prior to the abolition of slavery in this country the courts of the free states and of England recognized such contracts when made in slave states, because slavery was still recognized by the law of nations. 59. A widower and the sister of his deceased wife, both domiciled in England, while on a temporary visit to Denmark, were married. The marriage was valid according to the law of Denmark, but was invalid by the law of England, which prohibited the marriage of a man with the sister of a deceased wife. The house of lords held that it would not be recognized by the English court, such marriage being contrary to the public policy of England. Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193, 7 Jur. N. S. 422, 4 L. colored people are prohibited, although in most of the Northern states and in all parts of Europe such marriages are perfectly legal. Nevertheless such marriages will not be recognized in these states; and such persons, indicted for living together in adultery in one of these states, cannot plead that they were legally married in another state or country. State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 683; State v. Bell, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 9, 32 Am. Rep. 549; Newman v. Kimbrough, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 59 S. W. 1061; Kinney v. Com., 30 Gratt. (Va.) 858, 32 Am. 61. A husband and wife living in France made a contract in that country which provided for two things which by the law of England were illegal, viz., the collusive conduct of a divorce suit, and the abandonment by the husband of the custody of his children. The English courts refused to enforce any part of it, holding that if a court of one country is called upon to enforce a contract entered into in another it is not enough that the contract should be valid according to the laws of the latter, for if any part of the contract is inconsistent with the law and the policy of the former, the contract will not be enforced, even as to another part of it which may not be open to this objection, and may be the only part remaining to be performed. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731, 3 Jur. N. S. 454, 26 L. J. Ch. 417, 5 Wkly. Rep. 387, 57 Eng. Ch. 565.

62. An agreement was made in France, between an English attorney and a French subject, that the attorney should recover a debt for the client in England and keep half of it for his fee. Such a contract was lawful by the law of France, which knows nothing of the English law of champerty. It was held that the contract being opposed to the policy of the English law could not be enforced in the English courts. Grell v. Levy, 16 C. B. N. S. 73, 10 Jur. N. S. 210, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 721, 12 Wkly. Rep. 378, 111 E. C. L. 73.

The agreement was perfectly valid in France, where the common-law doctrine regarding such contracts as against public policy is unknown. It was held that the agreement, although good where made, would not be enforced by an English court. In Union Locomotive, etc., Co. v. Erie R. Co., 37 N. J. L. 23, a contract between a railroad company in New Jersey and certain individuals gave the latter the exclusive right of transporting certain kinds of freight over the railroad. The contract had been made in New York, and had been sustained by the courts of that state. But action was brought for the breach of some of its provisions in New Jersey. It was held that the contract was void because against the public policy of New Jersey; and would not be enforced, although valid where made.

64. In Varnum v. Camp, 13 N. J. L. 326, 25 Am. Dec. 476, a debtor had made in New York an assignment for the benefit of creditors, with preferences to a certain creditor. Such an assignment was valid by the law of New York. By statute in New Jersey assignments were declared fraudulent and void whenever by their terms a preference to any creditor or creditors was created. When the validity of the assignment came before the New Jersey court, it was held illegal and void, because contrary to the statute of that state, which declared the public policy of the state as to preferences by debtors. See also Stricker v. Tinkham, 35 Ga. 176, 89 Am. Dec. 280; Thurston v. Rosenfield, 42 Mo. 474, 97 Am. Dec. 351; Moore v. Bonnell, 31 N. J. L. 90. In Dearing v. McKinnon Dash, etc., Co., 165 N. Y. 78, 87, 58 N. E. 773, 8 Am. St. Rep. 708, decided by the court of appeals in New York in 1900, it was laid down that the true rule that transfers of property valid under the lex domicilii will be enforced by the courts of a foreign state does not apply where the domiciliary law conflicts with the policy of such state. And therefore a chattel mortgage given in another state, although valid there, which would be void as to creditors if made in New York, does not pass title as to property in New York as against a resident who has attached the property and will not be enforced. "Judicial comity," said Vann, J., "does not require us to enforce any clause of the instrument, which, even if valid under the lex domicilii, conflicts with the policy of our state relating to property within its borders, or impairs the rights or remedies of domestic creditors. . . . A transfer in another state, although valid there, which would be void as to creditors if made here, does not confer title to personal property situated here that is good as against a resident of this state armed with legal process to collect a debt. . . . To this extent, in nearly all jurisdictions, the rule of comity yields to the policy of the state with reference to the collection of debts due to its own citizens, out of property within its boundaries and protected by its laws."

65. In Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539, the plaintiff, an officer of the Turkish government, had made a contract with the defendant, a manufacturer of fire-arms, under which he was to receive a commission on such as he could induce that government to purchase. In a suit on the contract, it was held by the supreme court of the United States, that, even were the contract made in Turkey and valid there, the Turkish government being willing that its officers should receive bribes for official action, yet, contracts of this kind being against the public policy of this country, they would not be enforced in our courts.

66. The rule in the federal courts and in most of the states—a rule founded on public policy—is that a contract between carrier and customer that the carrier shall not be liable for the goods in his charge when they are negligently lost, destroyed, or damaged is void. In England such contracts are valid. In a number of cases in the federal courts stipulations of the kind contained in bills of lading made in England have been held no protection in our tribunals, on the ground that contracts against the public policy of this country cannot be upheld or enforced in our courts, wheresoever made. The New England, 110 Fed. 415; The Kensington, 94 Fed. 885, 36 C. Gardiner*, 51 Nebr. 70, 70 N. W. 508, the supreme court of Nebraska held that a limitation of the liability of a common carrier, contained in a shipping contract, would not be recognized or enforced in that state, although valid in the state where made (Illinois), as such attempted restriction of liability is illegal, and contrary to the public policy of Nebraska. In Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 S. Ct. 469, 32 L. ed. 788, a contract had been made in New York for the carrying of goods by water to England; and it exempted the carrier from liability for any negligent loss or damage to the goods. Such a stipulation was valid in New York. But the suit being brought in the federal court, the New York law was not permitted to interfere with the federal law on this subject—a judge-made law.

67. In Gooch v. Faucett, 122 N. C. 270, 29 S. E. 362, 39 L. R. A. 835, a promissory note was given in Virginia to pay a bet on a horse-race run in that state, where the note was valid. It was held not enforceable in North Carolina where betting on horse-races was contrary to public policy. In Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 630, 40 N. E. 839, 28 L. R. A. 568, plaintiff sued in Illinois on promissory notes made in St. Louis, Missouri, payable to the order of the D. P. Grier Grain Company, and indorsed by the payee plaintiff. The defense was that the notes were given in settlement of an option deal, and were void by the statute of Illinois. The reply was that they were made in Missouri whose statutes do not make notes of this character void if in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, and that the plaintiff was such. Plaintiff introduced the Missouri statute, and the case of Crawford v. Spencer, 92 Mo. 494, holding that under the law of Missouri the bona fide holder of such a note could recover. It was held under the statutes of Illinois notes based on gambling contracts of this kind were absolutely void, even in the hands of an innocent holder, and it made no matter that they were good by the law of Missouri where they were made and indorsed. "The enforcement of such foreign law," said the court, "would contravene the criminal code of this state; and would be in opposition to its public policy, and to the express prohibition of its statutory enactments, and would be prejudicial to the interests of its people." In Flagg v. Baldwin, 38 N. J. Eq. 219, 48 Am. Rep. 308, a contract was made in New York whose object was the speculating in stocks upon margins. Suit was brought in New Jersey. The contract was against the statute of New Jersey as to gaming contracts, but was good in New York. It was held that the contract would not be enforced in New Jersey. Violett v. Mangold, (Miss. 1900) 27 So. 875; Lemonius v. Mayer, 71 Miss. 514, 14 So. 33. See also Minzesheimer v. Doolittle, (N. J. 1900) 45 Atl. 611. In Bartlett v. Collins, 109 Wis. 477, 85 N. W. 703, 83 Am. St. Rep. 928, the action was brought in Wisconsin by brokers to recover for moneys advanced and services performed in the purchase of grain for defendant on the Chicago board of trade. Both parties, as in the Missouri case, were residents of Wisconsin, and the service was in violation of the Wisconsin statute as to gaming. It was insisted by plaintiffs that the grain having been purchased in Chicago, the contract was an Illinois contract, and was not in violation of any law of Illinois. It was held that even if this were so it would not be enforced in Wisconsin.

Conflicting and anomalous decisions.—In Edwards Brokerage Co. v. Stevenson, 160 Mo. 516, 61 S. W. 617, defendant, in St. Louis, authorized plaintiff, a brokerage company, to purchase stocks for him on margin. Plaintiff purchased them in New York, but the market failing they were afterward sold out and plaintiff sued for money advanced and commissions. The transaction was illegal under the provisions of the Missouri statute concerning option sales. In a suit brought in Missouri, it was held that as it was legal in New York the agreement would be enforced. The real question in the case, viz., whether such a contract would be enforced in a state to whose public policy, as shown in the laws against option dealing, it was plainly contrary, was not discussed by the court at all. The attention of the judge who delivered the opinion was entirely engrossed with the question as to where the contract was made, and he decided it to be a New York contract when compounding crime;⁶⁸ and to the contracts of married women⁶⁹ and other contracts.⁷⁰

C. Agreements Relating to Realty. The lex rei sitæ—the law of the place in which the property is—controls the title to and the alienation and transfer of land, and the effect and construction which is to be accorded to agreements intending to convey or otherwise deal with it;⁷¹ as for example mortgages of real it was clearly a Missouri contract. The court entirely misapprehended the nature of the action, treating it as though it were an action by a third person against the principal on a contract made by the agent. But it was nothing of the kind; it was a suit on the contract of agency for services rendered and money expended for the principal's benefit and at his request. A simple illustration will demonstrate the error of the court. A and B are both residents in St. Louis. A enters into a contract with B in St. Louis authorizing him to purchase one hundred horses for him of a certain description. The contract provides for the payment by A of a certain commission to B and his expenses. Nothing is said about where the horses are to be bought. B starts out to look for the horses and purchases twenty in Missouri, twenty in Illinois, twenty in Louisiana, twenty in California, and twenty in Canada. B subsequently sues A on the contract for his commission and expenses. According to the Missouri doctrine the right to recover his commission and expenses on twenty horses would have to be determined by the law of Missouri and on the other eighty by the laws respectively of Illinois, Louisiana, California, and Canada. If the suit were by the seller of the horses in another state against A, the principal, then the law of the state where the sale was made would doubtless be relevant. But to apply this rule to an action on the contract of agency is to lose sight of the difference between the contractual relation which exists when A engaged B to represent him in a negotiation with C and the contractual relation which exists when B in the execution of his authority enters into an agreement with C on behalf of A.

68. Where a person brought a suit in Wisconsin for legal services rendered defendant and the proof was that the object of the service was the compounding of a crime, the defendant and others, being at the time under indictment in the federal courts for violation of the United States revenue laws, it was held that the agreement under which the service was rendered was void for illegality, such contracts being contrary to public policy of the state. On rehearing it was brought to the attention of the court that the federal statutes expressly authorize such compromises with the government, with the consent of the secretary of the treasury and the attorney-general. The supreme court admitted that the statute might be binding upon the federal judges in actions in their courts, but refused to give it any recognition in the state court, saying: "We could no more enforce contracts compounding or tending to compound crime coming from the federal jurisdiction, than contracts of polygamy from the jurisdiction of Utah or of Turkey." Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344, 364.

69. Where a contract for the purchase of goods was made in Maryland by a married woman and was valid there, but in North Carolina the common-law liability of married women to make contracts still existed, it was held that it would not be enforced in North Carolina, because contrary to the policy of the state as to the power of married women. *Armstrong v. estate,⁷² or assignment of real estate for the benefit of creditors.⁷³ Where in the performance of a contract conveyances and transfers of property situated in several states are to be made, such conveyances and transfers must be made in accordance with the law of the place where the particular property is situated.⁷⁴

D. Agreements Relating to Personalty—1. IN GENERAL. The legal situs of personalty follows the domicile of the owner,⁷⁵ and the character of property as real or personal is to be determined by the laws of the state into which it is removed.⁷⁶ As to a contract in relation to personal property situated at the date

See DEEDS; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

In an action for a breach of covenant of warranty, where the grantor resided in Vermont, the grantee in New Hampshire, and the land was situated in Minnesota, it was held that the construction and force of the contract, including the rule as to damages, must be governed by the law of Minnesota; and where the referee failed to find what the law of Minnesota was, the supreme court of Vermont would not presume that it was the same as that of Vermont, but would commit the case to the court below to determine the damages according to the rule in Minnesota. Tillotson v. Prichard, 60 Vt. 94, 14 Atl. 302, 6 Am. St. Rep. 95. See Bethell v. Bethell, 54 Ind. 428, 23 Am. Rep. 650.

If the mortgage is valid where it is made, and is executed and recorded according to the laws of the state or country of its execution, it will be enforced in the courts of another state or country as a matter of comity, although it is not executed or recorded according to the requirements of the laws of the latter state. And this is because of the general principle of law that the law of the place of contract governs as to the nature, validity, construction, and effect thereof.

The lex situs governs when a mortgage is executed in a state other than that in which the property is situated. Although it be executed according to the requirements of the law of the domicile of the owner in another state, the mortgage will be invalid as against attaching creditors in the state where the property is located, unless the mortgage conforms to the laws of the latter state. The mortgage to be valid must be executed, acknowledged, and recorded according to the laws of the place where the property is at the time.

According to the weight of authority, an assignment of real estate for the benefit of creditors, which is invalid by the laws of the place where the land is situated, will not convey it, even though the assignment be valid under the law of the place of its execution, for conveyances of land are governed by the lex rei sitæ. *Gardner v. thereof in a foreign jurisdiction, the lex loci contractus governs.⁷⁷ Thus it was held that a contract made in Michigan for the purchase of a piano, construed by the courts of that state to be a mere bailment giving the buyer no right to mortgage it, would be so construed by the courts of Illinois upon his removal to that state and attempt to mortgage it.⁷⁸

Illustrations.—In Hale v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co., 15 Conn. 539, 39 Am. Dec. 398, a steamboat was in the business of transporting goods from New York to Providence. The plaintiff owned carriages which he wished to have transported to Boston. The carriers received them in New York, to convey them to Providence or Boston, and they were lost in the sound, near Huntington, Long Island. It was held that the contract was governed by the laws of New York. In Toledo First Nat. Bank v. Shaw, 61 N. Y. 283, where a bill of lading was executed in Ohio, of merchandise there shipped to be transported to a place in New York, the bill being delivered in pursuance of a contract made in and by residents of Ohio to one there making advances upon the faith thereof, and to secure drafts drawn for such advances upon parties in New York, it was held an Ohio contract, to be construed by and under the laws and commercial usages of that state. See Talbott v. Merchant's Despatch Transp. Co., 41 Iowa 247, 20 Am. Rep. 589, where a contract under which a common carrier sought to limit his liability was made in Missouri for the carriage of goods from Missouri to Texas, and such a contract was valid under the Missouri law, but not under the Texas law, it was held that the law of Missouri prevailed. Ryan v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589.

Conflict of laws as to validity of contracts limiting liability see CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 410.

Place of performance.—In some cases it is laid down that so far as a contract of carriage is to be performed in a state other than that in which the contract was made, it is to be governed by the law of that state. Rixford v. Smith, 52 N. H. 355, 13 Am. Rep. 42; Brown v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 83 Pa. St. 316.

Place of loss.—In others it is said that rights of the parties are to be governed by the laws of the state in which the loss happens. Gray v. Jackson, 51 N. H. 9, 12 Am. Rep. 1; Barter v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9, 6 Am. Rep. 434.

Illustrations.—Where an agent sold goods to a person in Connecticut, subject to the approval of his principal, who resided in New York, and the principal approved the contract, and the goods were delivered in Connecticut, where payment was expected to be made to the agent, it was held that the contract was governed by the laws of the latter state. Lewis v. McCabe, 49 Conn. 141, 44 Am. Rep. 217. So where the agent of a Pennsylvania firm went to Rhode Island, and there effected a sale of whisky by sample to a citizen of Rhode Island, to whom the whisky in a certain place and the goods delivered to a carrier for shipment, the contract is governed by the law of the place of shipment,⁸¹ and it makes no difference that they are not to be paid for until they arrive in a state to which they are shipped,⁸² unless the title is not to pass until they are received and paid for.⁸³ Where goods are ordered from one state to be sent from another state to the purchaser "C. O. D." there is a difference of opinion as to where the sale is made. Some courts hold that it is made in the state of the seller when the goods are delivered to the carrier;⁸⁴ and others that there is no sale until the goods arrive at their destination, and the price is collected by the carrier, and the property actually delivered to the purchaser.⁸⁵ If a vendor has no lien or privilege on goods at the place where he sells them, he acquires none by their removal elsewhere.⁸⁶ The sale of a vessel then at sea, valid by the law where the sale was made, and where the vendor and vendee reside, is valid, although the law of the forum controlling transfers was not complied with.⁸⁷

4. ASSIGNMENT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. Voluntary assignments of personal property, if valid under the laws of the state where the assignor resides, will be valid everywhere, and will pass the assignor's personal property, wherever situated, unless limited or restrained by some law of the state where the property is found,⁸⁸ or unless injurious to the citizens of the latter state.⁸⁹

was sent and delivered, it was held, in a suit in Massachusetts on an acceptance given by the buyer, that the illegality of the transaction was determinable by the Rhode Island law. *Weil v. And where a citizen of New Jersey went to Pennsylvania, and there bought a safe on conditional sale, it being agreed that the title should remain in the seller until it was paid for, and the purchaser took the safe to New Jersey, and there sold it to a purchaser in good faith; and under the Pennsylvania law, the latter could not hold the safe against the original owner, while under the New Jersey law he could, it was held that the original owner could not maintain trover in New Jersey against him. *Marvin Safe Co. v. E. Performance in Several States. According to better opinion an entire contract to be performed partly in the state where made and partly in another state is governed by the law of the place of making,⁹⁰ although there is a decision to the effect that each portion is to be governed by the laws of the country in which that portion is performed.⁹¹

F. Presumptions and Proof. If the contract is void by the lex fori, it devolves on the party seeking to sustain it to show that it is valid by the law of the place of making;⁹² but in the absence of proof on the subject, the court will generally presume that the common law is in force in such state.⁹³ When, however, the common law has never been in force in the place where the contract was made, and the foreign law is not proved, the court will follow the law of the forum.⁹⁴ On the other hand if the contract is legal by the lex fori, it will be presumed legal by the lex loci contractus.⁹⁵

G. Law of Forum Governs Remedies. The remedy upon a contract both in substance and form is regulated by the lex fori, and not by the lex loci contractus.⁹⁶ And this is so even where the contract is to be performed at the place where it was made.⁹⁷ The lex fori governs in determining the mode of trial, including the form of pleading, the quality and degree of evidence, and the mode of redress.⁹⁸ And it determines whether a suit is to be brought in the name of the assignor of the contract to the use of the assignee, or whether it shall be brought in the name of the assignee.⁹⁹

XII. ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A. Nature and Form of Remedy—1. WHERE SPECIAL CONTRACT IS OPEN AND SUBSISTING. It may be stated as a general rule that where there is a special agreement between the parties, open and subsisting at the time the cause of action arises, a general indebitatus assumpsit cannot be maintained.¹ For where there is an express contract, the plaintiff cannot abandon it and recover on an implied contract, until he proves the contract or gives secondary evidence of its contents, and also shows an excuse for his departure from it.² Until a contract has been rescinded, the injured party's remedy is an action for the breach, not an action to recover back the money paid.³ Where damages are claimed for the breach of a special contract, the declaration must count upon the contract.⁴

2. CONTRACT FULLY PERFORMED. It is incontrovertibly settled that indebitatus assumpsit will lie to recover the stipulated price due on a special contract which has been fully performed on the plaintiff's part, and it is not necessary in such case to declare on the special contract, although the plaintiff may use the written agreement as evidence of the compensation due;⁵ for where there is a special

The question whether a contract may be proved by parol or whether written evidence must be adduced, and the question whether parol evidence may be received to show the actual agreement of the parties to a blank indorsement of a negotiable instrument, must be determined by the law of the state where the action is brought, and not by that of the state where the contract was made. *Downer v. agreement and the plaintiff has performed on his part, the law raises a duty on the part of the defendant to pay the price agreed upon, and the plaintiff may count either on the implied assumpsit or on the express agreement. A new cause of action, upon such performance, arises from this legal duty in like manner as if the act done had been done upon a general request, without an express agreement, and the plaintiff is not bound to declare specially on the agreement.⁶ The same is true where the contract has been fully performed in respect to any one distinct subject included in it.⁷ The only effect in such a case of proof of an express contract fixing the price is that the stipulated price becomes the quantum meruit in the case. It is not a question of variance, but only of the mode of proof of the allegations of the pleading.⁸ Where the consideration of a simple contract for the payment of money has been executed it may be declared on in debt or assumpsit, according to the subject-matter.⁹ But where the consideration has not been executed, the remedy is by special action on the case.¹⁰

3. CONTRACT SUBSTANTIALLY PERFORMED. A party who has performed only a part of his side of a contract is not in all cases without remedy, for, although he can have no remedy on the contract as originally made, the circumstances may be such that the law will imply a new contract and give him a remedy on a quantum meruit.¹¹ Where a contractor fails to complete his contract in time and the work is taken out of his hands, he or his assignee may recover at contract rates for what has been done, less any damages the defendant may have sustained by reason of the contractor's failure to make complete performance.¹² In such case the contract furnishes the true measure of recovery on the part of the plaintiff. He can never recover more than the amount stipulated, but he may recover less, for the defendant is entitled to set off whatever damage he may have sustained by reason of the plaintiff's failure fully to perform the contract.¹³ The fact that work was defectively done is no defense to an action to recover the contract price, except by way of recoupment of damages sustained by the defendant by reason of the defects; and to get the benefit of this defense he must allege and prove his damages according to the rules by which such damages are measured.¹⁴ A party who has substantially performed his contract may recover on a quantum meruit for what he has done, although he has failed to perform the contract in certain particulars.¹⁵

Where a breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff can be compensated in damages, an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, who has received a partial benefit from the contract for non-performance, may be supported without averring performance by the plaintiff. Romel v. Alexander, 17 Ind. App. 257, 46 N. E. 595. If the cost of completing the contract, together with the damages for non-completion within the time specified, exceeds the amount of the contractor's claim, there can be no recovery. *Winamac v. There is perhaps no more vexatious question in the adjustment of the rights of parties to contracts than the determining what if any compensation may be recovered by a party to a special contract who has performed services or furnished materials not in strict compliance with the terms of the contract, but which have been accepted and utilized by the other party. By the strict rules of the common law full performance was required as a condition precedent to the right of recovery, but the rigor of this rule has been relaxed in many jurisdictions, and the tendency is to administer equitable relief rather than to hold the parties to the very letter of their agreement. Accordingly when, under a special contract, the plaintiff has proceeded not in strict accordance with the stipulations of the agreement, yet if what he has done has been accepted and used by the defendant, it is held that the defendant is answerable for the benefit he has received on an implied promise to pay for the same, although no action can be maintained against him on the special contract.

Where there has been no intentional departure from the contract or failure of performance, but the party has acted in good faith, endeavoring to fulfil it according to its terms, in case of failure of full performance he may recover what his services are actually worth, less the damage caused by such failure. Veazie v. Bangor, 51 Me. 509; Knowlton v. Plantation No. 4, 14 Me. 20; Norris v. Windsor School Dist. No. 1, 12 Me. 293, 28 Am. Dec. 182; Snow v. Ware, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 42; Wadleigh v. Sutton, 6 N. H. 15, 23 Am. Dec. 704. Where a plaintiff declares on a special agreement and also on the common counts, he may at the trial waive the special agreement and proceed on the common counts. And where the evidence is sufficient to support the general count, supposing he had not declared on the special agreement, he is entitled to recover on such general count without any attempt to prove the special agreement. And it seems that the defendant may in such case give the special agreement in evidence in order to lessen the quantum of damages, but if it is offered merely to defeat the action by showing a failure of performance on the part of the plaintiff, it is immaterial and may be rejected. Linningdale v. Livingston, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 36. Where a large amount of work was done in the grading of a street under a written contract, variant from that arising out of the proposal and specifications, which alone was authorized by the municipality, it was held that the work was not done under any contract, but was done at large, and that there was no ground for a quantum meruit, as there was nothing from which a request could be implied in law. Bonesteel v. New York, 22 N. Y. 162.

4. FULL PERFORMANCE PREVENTED BY DEFENDANT, OR BY THE ACT OF GOD.

According to the great weight of authority if a special agreement has been performed in part by the plaintiff and its further performance has been prevented by the act of the defendant, the plaintiff may at his option either sue for the breach and recover damages or abandon the contract altogether and recover upon a general indebitatus assumpsit.¹⁶ And where a written contract under seal has been performed in part and its full performance has been prevented by the defendant, the plaintiff may maintain an action of covenant upon the writing, a complete performance on his part being excused by the act of the other party.¹⁷

It was held that an affidavit of defense setting up a claim for the penalty for delay in completion of the building, alleging that the architect had allowed only a certain amount of extra work, that the plaintiff failed to finish the building according to the contract, and did especially fail to finish it to the satisfaction of the architect as required by the contract, was sufficient. *Murphy v. In Pennsylvania it has been held that if a contract has not been fully performed by the plaintiff, and he is excused from an entire performance by the act of the defendant, the action to recover compensation must be on the special agreement, with an averment of the plaintiff's readiness to perform as an excuse for the want of actual performance. *Eckel v. A party may also maintain assumpsit where the further performance of the contract has been abandoned by consent of both parties,¹⁸ or where the full performance of an entire contract has been prevented by the act of God.¹⁹ Where there is no provision to the contrary, the sickness or death of one who has been employed for a fixed time is a sufficient excuse for non-performance by him, and he, in case of sickness, or his personal representatives in case of his death, may recover pro tanto or upon a quantum meruit for the services actually performed.²⁰ The recovery in such a case, however, cannot exceed the contract price, or the rate of it for the part of the services performed,²¹ and the amount of recovery is liable to a reduction to the extent of such damages as the employer has suffered by reason of the non-performance of the contract.²²

5. PARTIAL PERFORMANCE MUST BE BENEFICIAL TO DEFENDANT. In order that an action may be maintained for a partial performance of a contract the defendant must have received the benefit of the partial performance.²³ The implication of a promise in all such cases is derived from the fact that the performance has been beneficial to him.²⁴ If there is a liability to pay for a partial performance where

But where the contract has not been repudiated by defendant, although he may have disregarded it, in preventing the plaintiff from fully performing it according to its terms and stipulations, the remedy by action of assumpsit upon the implied contract is merged in the remedy allowed upon the covenant, and as the written agreement is still obligatory upon the parties, the plaintiff's only remedy is an action of covenant upon the writing. *Rankin v. Decision to the contrary.—In an English case it was held that a special contract was not annulled by death, but there were circumstances connected with the transaction which gave color to that construction. The contract was to perform a voyage for a compensation, to be paid upon arrival, largely in excess of the ordinary wages for such services. The sailor died before the voyage was finished, and it was held that his administrator could not recover anything. The court of king's bench seemed to have felt the harshness of the rule they were bound by even in that case, and caused inquiry to be made if some custom of the maritime law might not be found to mitigate the severity of the contract. But at the end of the term no such usage having been found they rendered judgment for the defendant. Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320, 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 1212.

Dec. 189 (where it was held that the compensation of the agent or servant employed under a special contract, a complete performance of which has been prevented by his sickness and death, is not confined to a quantum meruit, but is to be measured by the contract).

Where a contract is wrongfully terminated by one party after part performance by the other, the right of the party performing to recover the value of the labor performed or the materials furnished irrespective of the contract price depends upon whether, having regard to the contract, the party wrongfully terminating it would thereby enrich himself at the expense of the other. *Wellston Coal Co. v. it has not been beneficial to defendant, it is not on the ground of any promise which the law would imply, but is founded solely on the special contract between the parties.²⁵ It has been held, however, that where the plaintiff has been prevented from fully performing the contract by the voluntary act of the defendant, he is entitled to recover the reasonable value of what he has done, whether it is of value to the defendant or not.²⁶

6. CONTRACT FOR ACT OTHER THAN PAYMENT OF MONEY. A simple contract requiring the performance of some act other than the payment of money must as a general rule be declared on by a special action on the case.²⁷ Where one is to be paid in something else than money, he cannot abandon his contract and sue on a quantum meruit, and thereby convert into cash payment what according to the agreement was payable in something else.²⁸

7. CONTRACT MODIFIED BY SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT. Where a contract is varied by subsequent agreement so as to require more time and greater expenditure on the part of the plaintiff to complete the performance of it, he is not obliged to sue on the original contract, but may recover on the common counts.²⁹

B. What Law Governs — 1. IN GENERAL. Although the execution, validity, and interpretation of contracts are generally governed by the laws of the country or state where they are made,³⁰ the forms of remedies and the course of judicial proceedings are governed exclusively by the laws of the place where they are sought to be enforced.³¹ And the remedy upon a contract, both in substance and form, is statute has run its course in the jurisdiction where the contract was made, and its effect there is to extinguish the obligation, this goes to the right and not merely to the remedy, and no action can thereafter be maintained on the contract in another jurisdiction.³⁷

b. Exemption Laws. Exemption laws are considered as statutes affecting the remedy only, and have no extraterritorial force. Questions of exemption therefore are to be determined solely by the laws of the forum.³⁸ Thus it is well settled that the exemption laws of another state or territory cannot be pleaded or relied on as a defense by either the garnishee or judgment debtor.³⁹

c. Discharge in Bankruptcy or Insolvency. In an action on a contract the defendant cannot set up as a defense a discharge under the bankruptcy or insolvency laws of another state or country, unless the debt was created within the jurisdiction of the court granting the discharge, or unless the creditor voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of such court.⁴⁰ A discharge under the federal bankruptcy law, however, is available in any state.⁴¹

d. Protection From Civil Arrest. The lex fori, and not the lex loci contractus, applies in regard to the defendant's protection from arrest on civil process, inasmuch as such arrest is of the remedy and not of the right.⁴²

e. Whether an Instrument Is a Specialty. The remedy on a contract under seal, and the question whether a contract is under seal, is determined by the lex fori.⁴³ If an instrument has a scrawl instead of a seal, it must be treated as a simple contract and sued on as such in a jurisdiction where a scrawl is not regarded as sufficient to create a specialty, whatever may be the lex loci contractus.⁴⁴

f. Whether Remedy Is at Law or in Equity. If, where a contract is sought to be enforced, the remedy is in equity, a suit in equity must be brought, although the remedy may be at law in the jurisdiction where the contract was made.⁴⁵ But, although the contract must be enforced, if at all, according to the local form of proceeding, it should be enforced in such a manner as to give effect to the same according to the law which gave it validity.⁴⁶

g. Parties. So also the question as to who are the proper parties to the action is to be determined by the lex fori.⁴⁷

h. Admissibility of Evidence. And questions as to the admissibility and effect of evidence relate to the remedy and are to be determined by the lex fori.⁴⁸

C. Defenses — 1. IN GENERAL. Nothing need be said in this connection in regard to such defenses as fraud, misrepresentation not amounting to fraud, mistake, duress, undue influence, illegality, incapacity to contract, want of consideration, or failure of consideration, for these have already been fully treated.⁴⁹ An agreement between the defendant and a third party to which the plaintiff has not given his assent cannot be made a matter of defense.⁵⁰ Although the defendant might have claimed that the plaintiff forfeited his contract, yet if the defense was not placed upon that ground the rights of the parties must be determined by the terms of the contract.⁵¹ If he who is to be benefited by another's performance of his contract is himself the occasion of its not being carried into execution, the contract is thereby dissolved and the defense is complete.⁵² The mere assignment of one excuse for not performing a contract is no evidence of a waiver of any other defense, unless the excuse assigned is inconsistent with the subsequent defense.⁵³ Where a verbal contract is the consideration for a written one, a breach thereof may be shown in defense to an action on the written contract as a failure of consideration,⁵⁴ and such evidence is not open to the objection that it varies the terms of the written contract.⁵⁵ A previous attempted repudiation of the contract on the part of the plaintiff which has been successfully resisted by the defendant is no defense when the plaintiff seeks to enforce performance. The defense in the former suit amounts to a constant tender of performance and a waiver of any demand of performance if any were necessary.⁵⁶ If a contract is legal the motive of a party who enters into it is not the subject of judicial inquiry and can be no defense to an action on the contract.⁵⁷ The fact that there is an illegal and champertous agreement between the plaintiff and his attorney is no defense. Such defense can arise only when the champertous agreement itself is sought to be enforced.⁵⁸ A debtor who is primarily liable cannot object that another who is jointly liable with him has not been sued at an earlier day upon a separate security given by the latter.⁵⁹ The plaintiff's breach of contract with a third person is no defense, although such contract was a part of the arrangement under which the defendant incurred the debt.⁶⁰ Nor will the plaintiff's surrender and cancellation of a contract with a third person on the best terms possible relieve the defendant from the payment of such damages as are the direct and natural result of his own breach of contract.⁶¹ Where the defendant's breach of contract is complete and the damages have accrued, the fact that the plaintiff afterward puts it out of his power to tender performance is no defense.⁶²

2. EQUITABLE DEFENSES. In a large and increasing number of jurisdictions, equitable defenses may under statutes be set up in actions at law, although they must be tried in the manner prescribed for the trial of actions at law, unless the defendant seeks affirmative equitable relief.⁶³ And under the head of equitable defenses are included all matters which before would have authorized an application to the court of chancery for relief against a legal liability, but which at law could not have been pleaded in bar.⁶⁴ At common law the rule is settled by a long line of cases that equitable defenses cannot be set up in an action at law on a contract.⁶⁵

3. AGREEMENT NOT TO SUE — a. In General. According to many of the earlier cases, an agreement to extend the time of payment of a debt or not to sue for a certain time cannot be pleaded in bar of an action brought before the expiration of the time stipulated;⁶⁶ and upon this principle it has been held that an agreement made pendente lite that the suit shall abide the event of another action cannot be set up as a bar to the suit if the plaintiff afterward chooses to proceed.⁶⁷ The rule does not apply to a covenant never to sue. Such a covenant amounts to a release and may be pleaded in bar of a subsequent action.⁶⁸ Even in the case of an agreement not to sue for a limited time the tendency of modern decisions is to maintain that the new agreement operates directly on the original contract, and Taking advantage of one's pecuniary distress to obtain from him an undue sacrifice may be sufficient for an equitable defense when he is sued at law on the contract. Burford v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 82 Ky. 286.

Statutory provision.—Iowa Code (1873), § 2740, providing that in an action at law defendant may set forth in his answer as many causes of defense, "whether legal or equitable," as he may have, in an action at law on a contract whereby plaintiff transferred to defendant his interest in a partnership, defendant may answer that the contract was procured by fraud and entered into through mistake as to the liabilities of the firm; no affirmative relief being asked. Carey v. Scrimshire, 1 Show. 46, 2 Salk. 573. In Ayliff v. Scrimshire, supra, the obligee covenanted with the obligor not to put his bond in suit for ninety-nine years, and it was held that the covenant could not be pleaded in bar to an action on the bond.

The reason for the rule is that if the defendant be allowed to plead such covenant in bar and succeed on his plea, the plaintiff will be precluded from bringing a second action after the time limited has expired. *Walling v. is intended by the parties to be a mere modification of the rights and obligations incident to that contract, and not a distinct and independent undertaking upon which a separate action must be brought; and that it is therefore a good defense to an action brought on the original contract before the time limited has expired.⁶⁹

b. Action For the Breach. In the case of an agreement or covenant not to sue for a limited time the defendant's remedy, according to the earlier cases above referred to, is upon the covenant or agreement, by a direct action to recover damages for the breach thereof.⁷⁰ And it has been held that such breach cannot be set up by way of counter-claim.⁷¹

c. Plea in Abatement. If there is a binding agreement for an extension of the time of payment, and the plaintiff proceeds prematurely, the defendant may plead the agreement in abatement of the action.⁷²

d. Agreement Not to Sue One of Several Joint Contractors. A covenant or agreement not to sue one of several joint obligors or promisors will operate as a discharge of the obligation or debt as to him;⁷³ but it will not operate as a discharge or release of the other obligors or promisors, and it cannot be pleaded as a bar to an action against them to recover on the original contract.⁷⁴

bound.⁷⁵ One debtor who is primarily liable cannot urge that another, who is jointly liable with him, has not been sued at an earlier day upon a separate security given by him.⁷⁶ But in an action to recover damages for breach of the defendant's agreement to do certain acts necessary to fix the liability of a third party upon a contract between him and the plaintiff, the defendant may avail himself of any defense which such third party could have set up, since, if such defense is established, the plaintiff could not have recovered of the third party, even if the defendant had done his duty.⁷⁷ Where a party, not himself bound by a contract because of non-compliance with statutory provisions, seeks to enforce it against one who is bound, or does not rely on the statute, the defendant cannot set up in defense the voidability of the obligation as to the plaintiff.⁷⁸ An agreement among creditors not to sue their debtor without the concurrence of a majority of the creditors does not inure to the benefit of the debtor, and he cannot plead it in bar of an action against him by one of the creditors.⁷⁹ A contractor who agrees with another contractor to go on and complete the work stands in the original contractor's shoes, and can recover nothing except what the latter would have been entitled to recover.⁸⁰ But if he makes a contract with the owner to go on and complete the work according to the original specifications, his action to recover the contract price for doing the same is not subject or defenses which might have been set up against the original contractor.⁸¹ To enable a party to use a set-off, it must exist in his own favor and not in the favor of a third person.⁸²

5. INCONSISTENT DEFENSES. If a defendant sets up inconsistent defenses he may properly be compelled to elect upon which he will stand,⁸³ unless, as in some jurisdictions, a statute allows inconsistent defenses to be pleaded.⁸⁴ The test of inconsistent defenses is whether the proof of one will necessarily disprove the other.⁸⁵

D. Time to Sue — 1. WHEN TIME FOR PERFORMANCE ARRIVES. Parties have the right to make their contracts as stringent as they please, and to make time of the very essence of the contract; and if one party without the consent of the other allows the specified time to pass, no matter from what cause, without performing the condition, the stipulated consequences must follow.⁸⁶ A contract to pay money upon the happening of a given event matures on the instant the event happens,⁸⁷ but no cause of action accrues until the happening of the event.⁸⁸

2. ACTION PREMATURELY BROUGHT. As a rule an action on a contract commenced before the time of performance arrives is premature and the defendant may plead in abatement.⁸⁹

3. WHEN DEFENDANT HAS PUT IT OUT OF HIS POWER TO PERFORM. But where a party bound to the future performance of a contract puts it out of his power to perform it, the other party may treat this as a breach and sue him at once, for there is an immediate right of action for a breach of the contract by anticipation.⁹⁰

4. WHEN DEFENDANT DECLARES HIS INTENTION NOT TO PERFORM. And the cases go a step further. Although strictly and technically speaking there can be no breach of contract until the time for performance has arrived, yet if, before that time arrives, the promisor expressly renounces the contract and declares his intention not to perform it, the promisee may, in most jurisdictions, treat this as a breach, and may at once bring an action for damages. That is, positive notice of an intended breach of a contract to be performed in futuro may be treated as an actual breach.⁹¹ There is, however, another course open to the promisee. He may if he pleases treat the notice of intended breach as inoperative and await the time when the contract is to be performed, and then hold the other party responsible for all the consequences of non-performance. But in that case he keeps the contract alive for the benefit of the other party as well as himself, and he remains subject to all his own obligations and liabilities under the contract, and enables the other party not only to complete the contract, notwithstanding his previous repudiation of it, but also to take advantage of any intervening circumstance which would justify him in declining to complete it.⁹²

Contrary rule.—The rule in regard to the effect of notice of intended breach is not uniform. In Massachusetts it is held that in order to charge one in damages for breach of an executory personal contract the other party must show a refusal or neglect to perform at a time when and under such circumstances that he is or may be entitled to require performance. Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384; Carpenter v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 280; Hapgood v. Shaw, 105 Mass. 276; Pomroy v. Gold, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 500; Frazier v. Cushman, 12 Mass. 277. In Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384, Wells, J., said that this was undoubtedly the interpretation of the common law in all the earlier decisions, and cited Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371, 10 Jur. 246, 15 L. J. Q. B. 146, 55 E. C. L. 371; Ripley v. McClure, 4 Exch. 345, 18 L. J. Exch. 419; Phillpotts v. Evans, 5 M. & W. 475, 9 L. J. Exch. 33. But when a part only of the goods has been delivered under an entire contract of sale, and one party refuses to complete it by delivering or accepting the remainder, the other party may then elect to treat such refusal as a repudiation or rescission of the unfulfilled part of the contract. Mansfield v. Trigg, 113 Mass. 350. If the seller refuse to deliver, the purchaser may recover back any excess of purchase-money that has been paid by him beyond the price of what has been delivered. Mansfield v. Trigg, 113 Mass. 350; Hill v. Rewee, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 268. If the breach of contract on the part of the seller is only in the quality of the goods, the other party cannot convert that into a rescission, but must, if he intends to rescind at all, rescind in toto. Barrie v. Earle, 143 Mass. 1, 8 N. E. 639, 58 Am. Rep. 126; A. K. Young, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Wakefield, 121 Mass. 91; Mansfield v. Trigg, 113 Mass. 350; Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205; Clark v. Baker, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 452. This distinction, and the principle upon which it rests, is applicable to a defendant resisting payment as well as to a plaintiff seeking to recover back what he has overpaid. Mansfield v. Trigg, 113 Mass. 350.

to pay money or do a particular thing on the happening of a contingency, its happening is essential to give rise to an action on the contract.⁹⁴

3. CONDITION TO BE PERFORMED BY STRANGER TO CONTRACT — a. In General. If a party undertake that a condition shall be performed by a stranger and the latter refuses, this is no excuse unless such refusal be procured by the other party.⁹⁵ That an obligation to pay money may be dependent upon the action of a third person over whom neither party has any control, and that payment cannot be exacted unless the specified act is performed, is familiar law.⁹⁶ According to the strict rules of the common law, if there be a condition precedent to do an impossible thing, the obligation being single, however impossible the thing may be, it must be complied with, or the right which was to attach on its being performed does not vest.⁹⁷ If a contract provides for partial payments upon estimates, an allegation that the estimate was duly made is essential in an action to recover any stipulated partial payment.⁹⁸

b. Certificates of Engineers and Architects. So if the contract is to be performed to the satisfaction of a third person, as where the certificate of an engineer or architect is required, or the price to be paid is dependent upon his decision as to the quantity, quality, or price of materials, or the quality of workmanship, it must be alleged that the person designated has performed the stipulated condition, since until this is done or its performance excused the plaintiff has no right of action.⁹⁹ And if the plaintiff fails to allege performance of the condition in declaring on the contract, he must be nonsuited on the ground of variance, the contract alleged being absolute, while that proved is conditional. So if the contract is truly stated, but the averment of a performance of the condition is omitted, the pleading will be held bad on demurrer or in arrest of judgment as showing no cause of action, or the plaintiff will be nonsuited because his evidence shows no right of action.¹ And a certificate given after the commencement of the action comes too late to save the plaintiff's case.²

c. Bad Faith of Arbitrator. Bad faith and collusion on the part of the arbitrator will absolve the contractor from further effort to procure a certificate, and if he alleges and proves these, he may recover on the special contract without the certificate, provided he also proves performance in other respects in accordance with the terms of the agreement,³ or if the work has been fully performed, he may sue on the common counts and make any proof showing his right to recover,⁴ for a party is not precluded from recovery merely because the arbitrator agreed on by the parties in their contract refuses to act when duly requested.⁵

d. Obstruction by Defendant. If the party sued has by his own act or neglect prevented the performance of a condition precedent, he cannot take advantage of his own wrongful act, and the averment and proof of this fact will have the same effect as to the right of action as an award or decision according to the terms of the agreement; and for this purpose the acts of the defendant's agents and of persons for whose conduct he is responsible will have the same effect as his own.⁶ But no evidence of the defendant's wrongful interference to prevent the performance of the condition will be admissible, unless the proper averments are found in the plaintiff's pleadings.⁷ If the defendant, before the action is brought, refuses to pay, not on the ground of the non-production of the certificate of the arbitrator, but for other reasons, the plaintiff need not allege or prove anything in regard to arbitration.⁸

F. Parties—1. GENERAL RULE AS TO WHO MAY SUE OR BE SUED—a. At Common Law. There is no principle better settled at common law than that an action upon a contract, either express or implied, must be brought in the name of the party in whom the legal interest in such contract is vested.⁹

b. By Statute. But it is now provided by statute in many jurisdictions that actions shall be brought in the names of the real parties in interest.¹⁰ The real party in interest is the person legally entitled to the proceeds of the claim in litigation.¹¹

c. Stranger to Contract Cannot Be Sued Thereon. As a rule no one can incur liabilities under a contract to which he was not a party; and this proposition is a part of a wider rule to the effect that liability ex contractu or quasi ex contractu cannot be imposed upon a person otherwise than by his act or consent.¹²

2. ACTIONS UPON JOINT CONTRACTS—a. Parties Plaintiff—(i) GENERAL RULE AT COMMON LAW. It is a well-settled principle of the common law that where a contract is joint and not several, all the joint obligees who are alive must be joined as plaintiffs, and that the defendant can object to a non-joinder of plaintiffs, not only by demurrer, but in arrest of judgment and under the plea of the general issue.¹⁵ The non-joinder of a co-promisee as a plaintiff has also been held ground for a nonsuit.¹⁶ The general rule holds, even though the amount due equitably belongs to one only of the joint obligees.¹⁷ In an action of debt on a bond to joint obligees, the demand is for the penalty. The condition of the bond is no part of the obligation, and if by the condition the money to be recovered be not for the joint benefit of all, the suggestion of that fact cannot alter the obligation, but will show only that although all the parties to it should join in the suit and show a legal title to recover, the judgment will be for the use of the party named in the condition and equitably entitled to the money.¹⁸ It is sufficient if all parties to the original contract with the defendant be joined as plaintiffs. Those who subsequently become interested without the defendant's privity are neither necessary nor proper parties.¹⁹ The rule in short may be reduced to this: In actions ex contractu there must not be too many or too few parties plaintiff, and if there be either, the misjoinder or non-joinder will be fatal to a recovery.²⁰

(II) RIGHT TO MAKE RECALCITRANT OBLIGEE A DEFENDANT. Unless all living obligees agree to join, there can be no action on the contract; and this rule cannot be affected at common law, or the obligor deprived of the benefit of it, by bringing an action in the name of one joint obligee and making the other a defendant.²¹ This hardship, however, has been very generally removed by statutes authorizing an aggrieved party to make any proper party plaintiff a defendant if he refuses to join in the capacity of a plaintiff, at the same time alleging in his pleadings the reason for doing so.²²

(III) CONTRACT JOINT IN FORM BUT SEVERAL IN INTEREST. Where a party makes a contract for the joint benefit of himself and another, the action may be maintained either in the name of the person with whom the contract was actually made or in the names of the parties really interested.²³ But where the interest is several the action must be several.²⁴ The rule is well settled by the decisions that although a man covenant with two or more jointly, yet if the interest and cause of action of the covenantees be several, the covenant shall be taken to be several, and each of the covenantees may bring an action for his particular damage, notwithstanding the words of the covenant be joint.²⁵ And where the plaintiffs sue jointly, proof of a liability from the defendant to one plaintiff alone will not support the cause of action disclosed in the declaration.²⁶ In other words where parties sue jointly, they must show a joint interest in the subject-matter of the action.²⁷ And although a contract be in form, or by its terms, joint, yet if it be to pay a definite sum or to perform a distinct duty to each of the covenantees, the distinct interest of each in the separate subject-matter will give him a several right of action for the recovery of his own particular damages.²⁸

(iv) DEATH OF A JOINT OBLIGEE. Where there is a joint interest in a contract and one of the parties interested dies before an action is brought, the action must be brought in the name of the survivor, and the declaration must set out the contract as it existed and show the interest of the plaintiff to be that of the survivor;²⁹ or as has been said: "If one of the joint covenantees be dead, a suggestion of that fact is sufficient to show a right to sue in the names of the survivors."³⁰ And the personal representative of the deceased obligee or promisee is not a proper party to the action.³¹

(v) INSOLVENCY OF A JOINT OBLIGEE. A joint obligee who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors under the insolvent laws of the forum cannot subsequently be joined as a plaintiff in an action on the instrument. The assignment divests the title of the insolvent, and disables him afterward to sue in his own name, and consequently the action must be prosecuted in the names of the solvent obligee and the assignee.³² It is otherwise if one of the plaintiffs is a foreign bankrupt³³ or has made his assignment under the laws of another state.³⁴

(VI) SEVERANCE BY AGREEMENT. Where all the parties in interest in a joint contract agree to a severance of the joint interest and the obligor promises to pay each his several share, each may sue therefor, the action being based upon the promise to pay each severally, and not on the original joint promise; but the joint obligees cannot render the obligor liable to separate actions without his consent, by any agreement among themselves.³⁵ A debtor may, however, by his own act, render himself liable to a several action, as where he settles with a part of his joint creditors and refuses to settle with the rest.³⁶

b. Parties Defendant—(1) GENERAL RULE AT COMMON LAW. In an action on a joint contract, all the obligors or makers must be made defendants according to the rule at common law.³⁷ If in an action properly brought against all the joint contractors, some of them are defaulted and others make a successful defense, no judgment can be rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants who were in default, for judgment must be rendered against all or none.³⁸ If a joint promisor who is living at the time the action is commenced be not joined as a defendant, the non-joinder can ordinarily be taken advantage of only by a plea in abatement.³⁹ But if it appears on the face of the pleadings that an omitted party to a contract is living and jointly bound, the non-joinder may be taken advantage of by special demurrer, motion in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error.⁴⁰ The non-joinder cannot be given in evidence under the general issue⁴¹ or in covenant under the plea of covenants performed.⁴² Misjoinder of parties defendant in actions ex contractu is fatal in whatever stage of a cause it is shown. The plaintiff must show a joint subsisting liability of all the defendants or he cannot recover against any.⁴³

(II) WHERE A JOINT OBLIGOR IS DEAD. If one of the joint contractors is dead, the survivors only should be made parties, and the personal representative of the decedent is not a proper party.⁴⁴

(III) STATUTES ALLOWING PART TO BE SUED. By statute in some jurisdictions, in all cases of joint obligations, the action may be brought against all or any one or more of the persons liable.⁴⁵

(IV) EFFECT OF ENTERING JUDGMENT AGAINST ONE JOINT DEBTOR. At common law, a judgment against one upon a joint contract of several persons, bars an action against the others, although the latter may have been dormant partners of the defendant in the original action, and this fact was unknown to the plaintiff when the action was commenced. When the contract is joint, and not joint and several, the entire cause of action is merged in the judgment. The joint liability of the parties not sued with those against whom the judgment is recovered being extinguished, and the whole cause of action having passed in rem judicatam, their liability is entirely extinguished. They cannot be sued separately, for they have incurred no several liability; and they cannot be sued jointly with the others, because judgment has already been recovered against the latter, who would be subjected to two suits for the same cause of action, if they could be made joint parties in a second action.⁴⁶ But in a number of jurisdictions statutes commonly known as joint-debtor acts have been enacted, whereby it is provided in substance that in an action to recover a money judgment against two or more defendants alleged to be jointly liable, if the summons is served upon one or more, but not upon all of the defendants, the plaintiff may proceed against the defendant or defendants, unless the court otherwise directs; and if he recovers final judgment, it may be taken against all the defendants thus jointly indebted, and enforced against the joint property of all and the individual property of those personally served or who voluntarily appeared.⁴⁷ Such judgment does not merge the cause of action as against defendants not served, and consequently cannot be pleaded in bar by them.⁴⁸ It is no evidence of a personal liability on their part outside of the state where the judgment was rendered;⁴⁹ but it is conclusive as to the liability of those served and will sustain an action against them in any other state.⁵⁰

3. ACTIONS UPON JOINT AND SEVERAL CONTRACTS — a. Parties Defendant at Common Law. In an action upon a joint and several contract the obligee may, at common law, sue all or any one of the obligors, but he cannot join an intermediate number in the same action; that is, he must proceed either jointly against all or severally against each.⁵¹ If, however, one of the obligors is dead, the obligee may sue the survivors without joining the personal representative of the deceased obligor.⁵²

b. Effect of Judgment Against One. In the case of a joint and several contract, a recovery against one without satisfaction is no bar to an action against another. To constitute a bar it must be shown that the judgment has been fully satisfied, and a plea stopping short of this is not good.⁵³

c. Statutory Modification of Common-Law Rule. By statute in some jurisdictions the plaintiff may, upon a joint and several contract, sue all or any number of the obligors in one action.⁵⁴ Where this is so, the plaintiff may, after bringing suit against all, discontinue as to any defendant at any time before final judgment; and this will not operate as a discontinuance of the action, nor can the other defendants avail themselves of it.⁵⁵

4. ACTIONS BY ASSIGNEES OF NON-NEGOTIABLE CHOSSES IN ACTION — a. At Common Law Cannot Sue in His Own Name. It is a well-known rule at common law that a non-negotiable chose in action cannot be assigned so as to enable the assignee to sue on it in his own name.⁵⁶

b. Otherwise in Equity. But this rule is of less importance than it might at first sight appear to be, for the assignee may go into chancery in his own name, if the case be a proper one for equitable jurisdiction.⁵⁷

c. Action in Name of Original Creditor. And it has long been the rule that the assignee, as the equitable owner of the claim, may maintain an action at law in the name of the original creditor in whom the legal title to the claim is vested.⁵⁸ And the assignment of a chose in action is not defeated by the death of the assignor, for the assignee is entitled to sue in the name of his personal representative.⁵⁹ It does not lie in the mouth of the debtor to object to such use of the original creditor's name;⁶⁰ and a necessary nominal plaintiff can raise no valid objection to the use of his name, even without his consent, if he is adequately protected against costs,⁶¹ for it has long been the practice of courts of law to look beyond the nominal parties to the rights of the real parties in interest, and where a necessary nominal party, either plaintiff or defendant, refuses the use of his name, the court will, upon proper indemnity against costs and damages, permit the real party in interest to use the name of the nominal party, even against his protest.⁶² And a nominal plaintiff, suing for the benefit of his assignee, cannot, by a dismissal of the suit upon a collusive agreement with the defendant, create a valid bar against a subsequent suit upon the same cause of action.⁶³ The question whether a suit on a chose in action shall be brought in the name of the assignor or of the assignee is a question of the form of the remedy only and is to be determined by the lex fori.⁶⁴

d. Actions on Bills and Notes Payable in Specific Articles. A bill or note payable in specific articles, being non-negotiable, must at common law be sued in the name of the drawer or payee for the use of the holder.⁶⁵ But if the maker of such a note expressly promises to pay to an assignee of the note the amount due thereon, the assignee may maintain the action in his own name.⁶⁶ And the holder may sue in his own name the payee who has passed the note with the indorsement, "Pay the bearer."⁶⁷ So if the note is in terms payable to the payee or bearer, the bearer may recover in his own name, provided he alleges and proves that the note was delivered to him for a good consideration.⁶⁸ The effect of a statute by which bills or notes for specific articles are made assignable is simply to give the assignee a right of action in his own name.⁶⁹

e. Statutory Right of Real Party in Interest to Sue in His Own Name. It should be observed in this connection that the trend of modern legislation is to give the real party in interest a right to sue in his own name, and where such legislation exists, the assignee of any claim which is legally assignable may maintain an action at law thereon in his own name, whether the evidence of debt be negotiable or non-negotiable.⁷⁰ Each successive assignee by indorsement may should allege clearly what was agreed to be done, what has been done, and what has been omitted, together with the damages resulting from the omission.⁷⁴

b. Allegation or Statement of Contract or Promise—(1) IN GENERAL. In declaring on a contract, the declaration, complaint, or petition must show a binding agreement between the parties,⁷⁵ and must state facts to show that the defendant is under a legal obligation or duty to the plaintiff.⁷⁶ An averment that by reason of a contract it became the duty of the defendant to do certain acts is insufficient. The facts must be stated from which the duty arose.⁷⁷ A chief object of formal written pleadings is to apprise the opposite party of the real cause of complaint against him, so that he may in like manner interpose the proper answer on his part, and that on the trial he may not be taken by surprise. This requires that the injury complained of should be stated with such fullness and certainty as to leave no reasonable doubt of the particular transaction on which the plaintiff relies, and which he intends to prove to establish his right of action. These are fundamental principles and apply to every pleading which is required to be special in its nature.⁷⁸ Consequently there must be an allegation that a contract was made between the parties or a statement of facts upon which a contract can be predicated.⁷⁹

(ii) EXECUTION OF CONTRACT. If the plaintiff declares on a written instrument he must allege that it was duly executed.⁸⁰ This averment is equivalent to

Complaint held insufficient.—A complaint in an action for breach of contract which alleges that the plaintiff has a contract with the defendant which he has always performed on his part, whereby the defendant was to deliver to him, at an agreed price and upon agreed terms, such newspapers as he might order, is insufficient as a statement of a valid, subsisting agreement, as neither the contract price nor the terms are stated, and it is not shown that the contract was binding on the other party. *Collins v. an averment of its delivery, because the execution of a written contract includes its delivery to the proper party.⁸¹

(iii) CERTAINTY OF STATEMENT. The plaintiff must set for the subject-matter of the contract with sufficient certainty to make a possible adverse judgment a bar to another action.⁸² Every material part of the contract must be averred or the action fails;⁸³ and it will not do to set forth the evidence of the contract instead of the contract itself.⁸⁴ A contract to do one or the other of two things must be stated in the alternative according to its terms. If it be stated as an absolute contract to do the thing actually done the variance will be fatal.⁸⁵ And a conditional contract must not be set forth as an absolute one, although the condition has been performed.⁸⁶ Stipulations necessary to make a contract reasonable will be implied and need not be alleged.⁸⁷ If, however, the contract be in restraint of trade, and it does not appear on the face of it that it is reasonable, it can be enforced only when it is made to appear from the pleadings and proof that the restraint is founded on a valuable consideration, and that it is reasonably necessary to protect the party in his business, and not oppressive.⁸⁸ And the burden of showing this rests on the party seeking to enforce the contract.⁸⁹

(iv) MODE OF STATING CONTRACT. The plaintiff may if he chooses set out the contract in suit in hæc verba,⁹⁰ but this is not necessary, for it is sufficient to plead a contract according to its legal effect.⁹¹ This rule is of very extensive operation, and applies not only to the statement of contracts in the action of assumpsit but also to the statement by either party of contracts and obligations of every description, whether verbal, written, or specialties, and in any form of action.⁹² Where this mode of declaring on a written contract is adopted, it is sometimes customary to attach a copy of the contract as an exhibit;⁹³ and in some jurisdictions this is required.⁹⁴ But merely annexing to the declaration, complaint, or petition, as an exhibit, a copy of a contract in suit is not equivalent to positive allegations of the terms of such contract or a statement thereof in hæc verba.⁹⁵ A statement in a pleading inconsistent with the legal effect of a writing made a part of such pleading is no ground for demurrer.⁹⁶

while it is not necessary to set out more of an alleged contract than pertains to the obligation, the breach of which is complained of, yet if an alternative qualifies the obligation, the whole contract should be set out according to its legal effect or tenor;⁹⁵ or to say the least the omission of any part of the contract which materially qualifies and alters the legal nature of the promise alleged to have been broken will be fatal.⁹⁹ In other words if there is any part of an agreement which materially qualifies or varies the sense and legal effect of the parts set forth, care must be taken not to omit it in order to avoid a fatal variance.¹ It is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out the plans and specifications according to which he is to perform his contract or to attach them to his pleadings.² Nor is it necessary for him to set out another contract, the terms of which control his performance of the contract in suit.³

(VI) ALLEGATION AS TO WRITING. The general rule is that if a contract would have been good at common law before the passage of the statute of frauds, it is not necessary to aver that it is in writing. It is sufficient if the writing be produced in evidence at the trial.⁴ But where the duty or liability is created by statute, and also required to be in writing, then it must be averred that the promise was in writing.⁵ And there are cases which hold that all contracts within the statute of frauds are presumed to be oral, unless it is alleged that they are in writing.⁶ When a contract consists of an oral agreement, a part of which only has been reduced to writing, it is proper to declare on it as a parol contract.⁷

Writing modified by subsequent parol agreement.—In an action by a mortgagor to compel the mortgagee to pay over the balance

(vii) CONTRACT MODIFIED BY SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT. Where an agreement has been modified by a subsequent agreement, the plaintiff may declare on it as modified, without reference to the terms of the original contract which have been dispensed with;⁸ although if the original contract was not entirely superseded by the subsequent modification, it, together with such modification, constitutes the basis of the action.⁹ The only safe course to pursue is to declare on the contract in its modified form, for if the modification is valid and material and the plaintiff declares on the original contract only, the variance between his pleading and proof will be fatal to a recovery.¹⁰ No action lies upon a contract which has been superseded by the substitution of a different contract.¹¹ So in an action for the breach of a contract, where the plaintiff sets up two inconsistent contracts, one of which supersedes the other, and fails to show on which he relies, a demurrer should be sustained.¹² But it is not necessary for the plaintiff to plead an agreement between the defendant and himself, which amounts only to an extension of the time of performance and does not modify the terms of the original contract.¹³ It has been held in Nebraska that the fact that the contract sued on has been modified or rescinded is an affirmative defense which should be set up by the defendant.¹⁴

(viii) DATE OF CONTRACT. The day on which the contract was made must be stated, although the precise day may not be material.¹⁵ The general principle is that in declaring on a parol or simple contract, the day when the contract is alleged to have been made is not material.¹⁶ But where time is a vital element in the plaintiff's case it must be alleged with certainty.¹⁷ An allegation of mistake in the date of an instrument under seal need not be proved before introducing the instrument in evidence, unless the date of the instrument marks the beginning of the performance of the contract or is put in issue by the defendant.¹⁸

of the loan, to secure which the mortgage was executed, which had been withheld by the mortgagee, the plaintiff alleged that the cause of action was based on a verbal agreement, while his proof showed that the application for the loan was in writing, but that subsequently it was modified by parol before the loan was made. It was held that there was no variance. Kansas L. & T. Co. v. Love, 4 Kan. App. 188, 45 Pac. 953.

(ix) ACCEPTANCE BY PLAINTIFF. If the contract is wholly unilateral, the plaintiff should allege his acceptance, or that he entered upon its performance and gave notice thereof to the defendant.¹⁹ But in declaring upon a promise to pay upon the plaintiff's doing or omitting to do a certain act it is not necessary to allege an acceptance of the promise. It is sufficient to allege that the act was done or omitted.²⁰

(x) ALLEGATION OF A PROMISE. In an action for the breach of a contract, the plaintiff must allege a promise on the part of the defendant;²¹ but under the code system of pleading it is sufficient to allege the facts from which a promise may be implied.²² And generally it is not essential that there shall have been an affirmatively expressed promise to pay. It is sufficient if words were used which are tantamount to a promise, express or implied.²³ The plaintiff has been allowed to recover upon proof of an implied promise, although he has declared on an express promise.²⁴

c. Averment of Consideration — (i) IN GENERAL. If the contract in suit is under seal it imports a consideration and none need be alleged;²⁵ and the same is true if the instrument sued on is negotiable according to the law merchant.²⁶ And by statute in some jurisdictions every written contract is made to import a consideration, and where this is so, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege the consideration.²⁷ But the consideration is an essential part of a contract, and in the absence of statutory relief from the rule, a party declaring on a contract which at common law does not import a consideration must fully and truly state the consideration as well as the promise founded upon it, and must prove it as laid.²⁸ And if there be more than one consideration, the whole must be alleged and proved.²⁹ If no consideration is stated, it is a fatal defect which may

(II) HOW MUCH OF CONTRACT MUST BE STATED. It is sufficient to state so much of the contract, when it consists of several distinct parts, as contains the entire consideration for the defendant's promise, and that part of the promise of which the plaintiff alleges a breach.³¹

(III) WHEN CONTRACT RECITES A VALUABLE CONSIDERATION AND IS SET OUT IN HÆC VERBA. If the contract on its face purports to have been made for a valuable consideration, and the plaintiff sets it out in hæc verba, this is a sufficient averment of consideration.³² An allegation that a note was executed and delivered to the payee for value received is sufficient averment of a valuable consideration.³³

(IV) WHEN CONTRACT IS STATED ACCORDING TO ITS LEGAL EFFECT. Where the contract is pleaded according to its legal effect, particular facts showing a consideration legally sufficient to support the promise must be stated. It is a conclusion of law to allege that there was a full and valuable consideration, without stating the particular facts; and it is for the court and not the pleader to decide whether or not the facts stated show a consideration.³⁴

(V) PAST CONSIDERATION. No action can be maintained upon a consideration which appears to be past, unless it is alleged to have been performed by the assent or request of the defendant.³⁵

(VI) NOTES PAYABLE IN SPECIFIC ARTICLES. According to the weight of authority, in declaring on a note payable in property and not under seal, the

A writing which recites that in consideration of special services theretofore rendered to the defendant by the plaintiff's assignor in securing a contract for the sale of coal, defendant agrees to pay a commission of fifteen cents a ton on all coal sold and delivered under the contract of sale, implies that the services were performed at the instance and request of defendant, and therefore, in an action to recover the commission, the complaint need not allege such request where the contract is set out in full. *Hurst v. plaintiff must aver a consideration.³⁶ Some courts, however, have held that a note payable in specific articles may be declared on in the same manner as a negotiable promissory note; that is, that a special consideration need not be averred or proved.³⁷

d. Averment of Fulfilment of Condition Precedent. If the plaintiff's right of action depends upon a condition precedent, he must allege and prove the fulfilment of the condition or a legal excuse for its non-fulfilment. And if he omits such allegation, his declaration, complaint, or petition, as the case may be, will be bad on demurrer.³⁸ If a party agrees to pay money or do a particular thing on the happening of a contingency, its happening must be alleged by the plaintiff in an action on the contract.³⁹ And a general averment that the defendant failed to perform according to the terms of the agreement is insufficient.⁴⁰ But if the defendant's obligation to pay money was not to arise if a certain contingency did happen, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege that it did not happen. It is incumbent on the defendant to show that it did happen.⁴¹

e. Averment of Performance by Plaintiff—(i) WHEN COVENANTS ARE DEPENDENT OR CONCURRENT. As we have seen, there are three kinds of promises or covenants: First, such as are called mutual and independent, where either party may recover damages from the other for a breach of the promise or covenant, and where it is no excuse for the defendant to allege a breach on the part of the plaintiff;⁴² second, such promises or covenants as are conditional and dependent, in which the performance of one depends on the prior performance of the other, and until the prior condition is performed the other party is not liable to an action on his promise or covenant;⁴³ third, such as are mutual conditions to be performed at the same time, where the plaintiff must show that he was ready and offered to perform on his part, and the defendant neglected or refused to perform on his part, and may maintain his action, although it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act.⁴⁴ In order to ascertain the intention of the parties, it is considered a good general rule that where the promises or covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, and also that where a day certain is appointed for the payment of the money, if such day is to occur after the time when the consideration ought to be performed for which the money is payable, the performance of the consideration is a condition precedent to the payment of the money.⁴⁵ When the promises or covenants in an agreement are mutual and dependent or concurrent the plaintiff must aver and prove performance, or at least an offer to perform, on his part.⁴⁶ And if the plaintiff avers a tender of performance, the defendant is bound to take issue on such averment. He is not at liberty to plead the non-performance of the promises or covenants on the part of the plaintiff in bar of the action.⁴⁷ But where

Tender.—Where an action was brought upon a contract by which the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff two thousand five hundred dollars, at a certain time upon condition that the plaintiff should first furnish to the defendant a general release specified, and the complaint alleged that at the proper time he tendered such release and demanded payment, which was refused, it was held that the allegation of tender showed sufficient performance on the part of the plaintiff. Kelly the promises or covenants are independent the plaintiff need not aver or prove the performance of his own promise or covenant.⁴⁸ And where the plaintiff's promise or covenant, which forms the consideration, is dependent, yet if part of the consideration has been accepted and enjoyed by the defendant who refuses to proceed with the performance of the contract, the plaintiff may recover without alleging performance of the residue.⁴⁹

(II) WHEN FIRST ACT IS TO BE DONE BY PLAINTIFF. It is quite well established that where a specific act is to be done by the plaintiff, or any number of acts, by way of condition precedent, he must show in pleading precisely what he has done in performing them, in order to enable the court to see whether the defendant be in default.⁵⁰ Where anything is to be done by the plaintiff, precedent to performance by the defendant, the plaintiff must as a general rule allege performance by himself in declaring for a breach of the defendant's promise. An averment of readiness to perform is not sufficient,⁵¹ unless it be alleged that performance by the plaintiff was prevented by the act of the defendant, which dispenses with the necessity of an averment of performance or readiness to perform.⁵² He shows no right of action unless he shows that he has performed the condition precedent, or that he was prevented from doing so by the act of the defendant,⁵³

Substantial performance of conditions precedent is necessary to authorize recovery, as for performance of a contract, and an allegation that the opposite party refuses to permit it is not equivalent to an allegation of performance, especially where the complaining party does not allege his willingness and ability to perform at the time of such refusal or at any time prior to the expiration of the period fixed for performance. *Thompson v. Contract for services.—Upon this principle a party who engages to labor for another for a specified time cannot recover for his services unless he has performed his contract, has been excused by his employer, or is justified in leaving the service. Angle v. Hanna, 22 Ill. 429, 74 Am. Dec. 161. See MASTER AND SERVANT; WORK AND LABOR.

Statute requiring statement.—Under Mich. Pub. Stat. (1891), p. 230, § 4, providing that a contractor shall furnish the owner of land with a statement under oath of the amounts due for labor and material, and suspending the right to collect by action until such statement is made, a builder cannot sue on unless it appears that the performance of the condition would be a useless act, for the law does not require that.⁵⁴ In all cases of this kind, the plaintiff must either allege performance on his part or a sufficient excuse for non-performance.⁵⁵ And no excuse for non-performance can be shown where the plaintiff does not allege the facts constituting the excuse.⁵⁶ Where the right of action depends upon the performance of a condition precedent by the plaintiff, if he omits to allege performance the omission is not curable by verdict.⁵⁷ Generally, if a condition precedent has not been complied with, no recovery can be had on a quantum meruit.⁵⁸ But it is otherwise where the defendant himself completes the contract and thus puts it out of the power of the plaintiff to do so.⁵⁹

(III) WHETHER AVERMENT SHOULD BE GENERAL OR SPECIAL—(A) In General. At common law it was ordinarily required of the pleader not only to make an allegation of the performance of a condition precedent, but also a statement of the time and manner of its performance or an excuse for non-performance, in order that the court might determine as a matter of law whether or not the intention of the parties had been fulfilled, and in order that a traversable issue might be presented.⁶⁰ But according to the general rule as it now exists, and is established in some jurisdictions by statute, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent it is not necessary for the plaintiff to state the facts showing such performance, but he may aver generally that he has duly performed all the stipulations and conditions on his part.⁶¹ And in such case the defendant cannot a contract for the erection of a house, although he has not effected a lien thereon, until such statement is filed. Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73, 72 N. E. 24.

Excuse for non-performance.—A petition in a suit upon a contract need not allege that the plaintiff has performed his part of the contract if it states a good and sufficient excuse for non-performance. Buchanan v. Layne, 95 Mo. App. 148, 68 S. W. 952.

54. Thus where the plaintiff, upon the sale of land to a railroad company, received from the defendants their guaranty that certain stock of the railroad company which the plaintiff received for the land should be worth par in three years, or the defendants should make it up to par or pay whatever sum such stock should be worth less than par, it was held that this was an independent contract and valid, and the stock at that time being worthless and the railroad company wholly insolvent, it was further held that the bringing of an action against the railroad company was not a condition precedent to the bringing of an action against the guarantors. *Hill v. set up in defense the non-performance of any condition which he has not specified in his plea.⁶² In pleading the performance of a condition precedent under the code system, it is not necessary, as it was at common law, to state the facts showing such performance; but it is sufficient to state generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part, and if such allegation be controverted, the party pleading must establish on the trial the facts showing the performance.⁶³

(B) Condition Not Definitely Settled. Where the condition precedent is not definitely settled and limited by the terms of the contract, this rule, in the nature of things, cannot apply. In such case the plaintiff must state the facts upon which he relies for a recovery.⁶⁴ Thus where the covenant is indefinite or in the alternative the general averment is not sufficient, but the quo modo must be stated.⁶⁵

(c) Excuse For Non-Performance. Where the plaintiff intends to rely on an excuse for not performing, whatever it may be, the particular facts and circumstances constituting such excuse should be averred.⁶⁶

(d) When Act Involves a Question of Law. Another distinction is that where the act involves in it a question of law, that is, whether it was done as the law directs, the quo modo must be pointed out; but where it is a mere matter of fact a general averment is proper.⁶⁷

(E) Condition Altered by Subsequent Agreement. Again, if the conditions precedent of a contract have been altered by the consent of the parties, the alteration should be stated, and performance of the contract as modified should be alleged.⁶⁸

(F) When Character of Performance Cannot Be Understood From General Averment. And in any case, where the character of the performance cannot be understood from a general averment, the plaintiff should specifically aver the facts constituting the alleged performance;⁶⁹ and if he does this in any case it is sufficient.⁷⁰

(IV) AVERMENT OF READINESS TO PERFORM AND TENDER. In an action on a contract containing mutual and dependent or concurrent promises or covenants, the plaintiff must allege his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the agreement at the time and place stipulated.⁷¹ And an averment that the plaintiff was at all times willing to perform is not equivalent to an averment that he was ready and willing to perform.⁷² As a rule it is sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that he was ready and willing to perform on his part. He need not allege also an offer to perform.⁷³ And where the non-performance of a condition precedent was caused by the act of the defendant, the plaintiff is not bound to aver performance or readiness to perform on his part; he may simply allege the facts constituting his excuse.⁷⁴ When either party to a contract gives notice to the other that he will not comply with its terms, the other need not in an action for damages aver or prove a tender of performance on his part.⁷⁵ But if by the terms of the agreement the plaintiff is to do the first act he must allege a tender of performance.⁷⁶ And if a deed is to be given, money is to be paid, or services are to be performed, as a concurrent or precedent condition, the plaintiff must allege performance in so many words, or that performance was duly tendered and refused, together with such circumstances as are material in point of law to raise the corresponding obligation on the part of the defendant.⁷⁷ Where it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove a tender of performance, the day on which the alleged tender was made must be averred.⁷⁸ In an action against

In an action on a contract to dig a well, where the plaintiff alleged that he was prevented from finishing the well because of the defendant's furnishing unsuitable casing, which collapsed and stopped up the well, an allegation that the plaintiff offered to dig another well, without profit, at its actual cost, is unnecessary to the cause of action, and ineffectual as an offer to perform. the buyer for not accepting and paying for goods on the seller's offer of performance, the plaintiff must allege to whom the offer was made;⁷⁹ and if the contract alleged makes the place material, the place of the offer must also be stated.⁸⁰

(v) TIME WHEN DEFENDANT SHOULD HAVE PERFORMED. A declaration in an action on a contract which does not state the time at which the defendant should have performed it is bad on demurrer.⁸¹ Where no time for performance is specified in a contract, it should be averred that it was to be performed on request or within a reasonable time, and that such request has been made or that a reasonable time has elapsed.⁸²

f. Averment of Demand or Request — (i) WHEN A CONDITION PRECEDENT. Where a special request is a condition precedent, that is, where it is expressly or by necessary implication made a part of the contract, it must be alleged and proved. The omission to aver a special request or notice, where by law it is necessary in order to put the defendant in default, is a matter of substance and may be taken advantage of on general demurrer.⁸³ Upon a contract for the payment of a certain sum in goods, the goods being deliverable upon demand, an action for a recovery in money cannot be maintained without an allegation and proof of demand or refusal to deliver the goods.⁸⁴ And whenever it is necessary to allege a special request it should be stated with time and place;⁸⁵ and it should also be alleged by whom the request was made.⁸⁶ But in a case where a special request is not necessary, a general allegation of demand is sufficient without alleging the time and place.⁸⁷

(II) WHEN NOT A CONDITION PRECEDENT. In all cases where a party has laid himself under an absolute duty to perform an act, no previous request is necessary and of course none need be alleged or proved, although in such cases it is customary to add the general averment of licet sæpius requisitus.⁸⁸ Thus where the promise was to do a certain act or to pay a sum of money, and the defendant has not done the act, a special request to pay the money need not be alleged. When the particular act is not done at the time stipulated the payment of the money becomes a present duty.⁸⁹ So also in case of a contract to pay a sum of money at a fixed date no notice or demand is necessary before suit.⁹⁰ Indeed in such cases it is unnecessary to lay a general request, for the bringing of the action is itself a sufficient request, where the duty is one which the defendant is bound to discharge without a demand.⁹¹ The only use of a special request is to avoid vexatious suits by giving the defendant an opportunity to pay an undisputed demand without action, and no such request need be made when it is apparent that it would be a fruitless ceremony.⁹²

g. Averment of Notice. When the happening of a contingency or other matter alleged lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the plaintiff, he must aver that the defendant had notice;⁹³ but when it lies equally within the knowledge of the defendant such an averment is unnecessary. He is bound to take notice at his peril.⁹⁴ And the same is true where the defendant had ample means of ascertaining the happening of the contingency.⁹⁵

h. Not Necessary to Anticipate and Negative Matters of Defense. As a general rule it is not necessary for the plaintiff to anticipate and negative matters of defense.⁹⁶ Matters which should come more properly from the other side need not be stated; it is enough for each party to make out his own case.⁹⁷ Thus in an action on a contract which on its face refers to a contingency, on the happening of which the defendant should be discharged from liability, the plaintiff need not aver that the contingency has not happened, but if the defendant relies on it as a defense he must allege and prove that it did happen.⁹⁸ So in declaring on a contract, it is not necessary to allege the defendant's authority or legal capacity to make it. If he labors under any disability the fact must be set up as an affirmative defense.⁹⁹ And if the contract in suit was made by the defendant through the medium of an agent, it is not necessary to aver the authority of the agent.¹ But the defendant's connection with the contract must be distinctly averred. It is not sufficient to allude to the supposed agent in words which are merely descriptio personæ.²

i. Waiver of Performance. The plaintiff cannot show a waiver of performance or a modification of any part of a contract without alleging it.³ So also where the defendant relies on a waiver of a stipulation in a contract sued on he must plead it.⁴ And the facts showing a waiver of performance of a provision in a contract must be specially pleaded.⁵ It is essential to the validity of a waiver of performance of a contract that the party making it should know that the contract has not been performed, and a pleading by the plaintiff which sets up such waiver must aver such knowledge on the part of the defendant making it.⁶ A

Where a building contract makes an architect's certificate a prerequisite to payment, it is indispensable, unless withheld in bad faith or else waived by the employer. See supra, IX, C, 5, g; XII, G, 1, b, (1). A mere allegation that the employer duly accepted the work performed by the plaintiff under and by virtue of said agreement does not show that the work was accepted as a full compliance with the contract, and is insufficient waiver of performance of a contract and a waiver of damages for its non-performance set up in a pleading amount to one and the same thing.⁷

j. Assignment of Breach—(i) IN GENERAL. There can be no recovery unless the plaintiff sets forth a breach by the defendant of the contract in suit; and if he fails to do so a demurrer is proper.⁸ It is not enough to show a right of action against the defendant that the promises or covenants of the respective parties be fully set out, with the averment of performance on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff is bound to go further, and in due form to assign such breaches of the defendant's promises or covenants as are relied upon as grounds for a recovery of damages.⁹ And it follows that there can be no recovery upon a breach not assigned by the plaintiff.¹⁰

(ii) SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION. The essential facts constituting the breach should be set forth in unequivocal terms;¹¹ and the breach should be assigned with such certainty and particularity as will apprise the defendant in what particular he has failed to perform.¹² But where an enumeration of particulars would lead to great prolixity in pleading a breach, a general assignment will suffice.¹³ The same certainty is not required in assigning the breach of a contract as in setting forth its terms. All that can be required is that the breach complained of be substantially set forth and substantially proved.¹⁴ It is not necessary that the breach assigned should negative the performance of the defendant's contract in every particular; if it has been performed in part it is enough to aver non-performance of the residue.¹⁵ An allegation of the spoiling or destruction by the covenantor or promisor of the thing to be conveyed or delivered, whereby he has put it out of his power to perform, is a sufficient assignment of breach.¹⁶ But the naked averment that the defendant has disabled him-as an allegation of waiver. Schenke v. Rowell, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 286. See also Essex v. Murray, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 736.

Cure or waiver of defect in pleading.—The plaintiff erected a building for the defendant under an entire contract. After erection, but before entire completion, the defendant drove the plaintiff away and would not permit him to finish the building. The plaintiff sued for the balance due on the contract and obtained a verdict therefor on the ground that the defendant's action rendered the complete performance impossible. And it was held that although the plaintiff's narr. was defective in not setting out a waiver of performance, yet that defect was amendable at any time on motion, either in the common pleas or the court above; and as the defendant admitted driving the plaintiff away and thus rendering complete performance impossible, the absence of such averment was not a sufficient reason for reversing the judgment. *Wilman v. self from performing his contract is not a sufficient assignment of breach. From this it might be inferred that the defendant did not perform; but allegations in pleading must be direct, and are bad if they depend on mere inference.¹⁷ In an action on a joint and several contract, the assignment of a breach by only one of the defendants is insufficient.¹⁸ In assigning a breach of contract, it is not necessary to allege a promise which the law implies; it is sufficient to aver that the duty imposed by such implied promise was not performed.¹⁹

(iii) MANNER OF ASSIGNING BREACH—(A) In General Terms. At common law it is as a rule sufficient to assign a breach in the words of the contract either negatively or affirmatively as the case may require, or in words which are coextensive with the import and effect of the contract. Inasmuch as the defendant must generally know in what respects he has or has not performed his contract, no great particularity ought to be required.²⁰ In assigning the breach, it is not necessary to use the precise terms of the agreement sued on, but it is sufficient to state the intention of the parties, as it may be collected from the instrument itself.²¹ In other words it is sufficient upon general demurrer that the breach assigned be in words which contain the sense and substance or legal import, although they be not in the language of the contract.²²

(B) Cases Requiring Greater Particularity. Although it is well settled that in many cases the breach may be assigned in general terms, there is another class of cases to which a different rule applies. Where the terms of the contract leave its meaning ambiguous, the rule does not apply, for if the breach were assigned generally, without proper introductory matter and corresponding averments, the court might not know what judgment to render.²³ The law requires that both in setting out the agreement and assigning the breach enough must be placed on the record to show that the contract has been broken, and that the plaintiff has a cause of action.²⁴ It should also be observed that more particularity is required in assigning the breach where the matter rests peculiarly in the knowledge of the party pleading.²⁵

(C) In Covenant.²⁶ In covenant the breach may be assigned in the words of the covenant whenever a general negation or affirmance of the words necessarily shows a breach.²⁷ But if the words of a covenant taken in connection with the residue of the instrument do not mean the same as when they are separated from their context, a breach assigned in the words of the covenant is not well assigned.²⁸ And there are some other exceptions to the rule, as where the law implies a covenant, although there is none expressed, or where, by construction of law, the operation of the covenant is more restricted than the words of the covenant in their usual import would indicate.²⁹ Although it may not be necessary that the exact words of a covenant should be followed in assigning a breach, it must distinctly appear by express words, or by necessary implication, that, admitting the truth of the facts stated, the defendant has broken the covenant in its true sense and meaning.³⁰ And if the breach assigned vary from the sense and substance of the contract, and be either more limited or more extensive than the covenant, it will be insufficient.³¹ The averment of a breach should negative every mode of performance which the previous averments would authorize.³²

(iv) ASSIGNMENT OF SEVERAL BREACHES. In assumpsit as well as in covenant the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he thinks proper; at least where he does not declare on a promise to pay a penal sum.³³ Distinct breaches of separate covenants or promises may be assigned in the same count, and the count will be good if any one of them is well assigned.³⁴ And if, in a count setting forth several covenants or promises of the defendant, the breach of one be properly assigned, that is sufficient to support the count as against a demurrer.³⁵ The pleader, however, must not assign two or more breaches of the same covenant or promise in a single count, because that would be objectionable for duplicity.³⁶ And at common law, if several breaches be assigned, some of which are defective, and a general verdict be given, the judgment should be arrested on motion or reversed on writ of error, for the jury may have assessed damages upon the ill-assigned breaches.³⁷ Where a contract contains various substantive and independent stipulations and there is a breach of more than one of such stipulations, distinct causes of action arise which should be pleaded separately.³⁸

(v) ALLEGATION OF NON-PAYMENT—(A) In Actions For Recovery of Money. In an action on a contract to pay money, it should appear from the declaration, complaint, or petition that the sum demanded remains unpaid.³⁹ The

Under the Connecticut statute (Pr. Act, §§ 1, 9), requiring a complaint merely to state a plain and concise statement of the material facts requisite to show the plaintiff mere statement that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff is substantially the conclusion to be found by the jury at the end of the investigation.⁴⁰ In such an action it is not sufficient to allege merely that the whole amount is now due; but the plaintiff must allege that the defendant has not paid it.⁴¹ Whether the action be assumpsit or debt, the plaintiff must not only allege the non-payment of the debt, but must make this allegation general, and not confine it to the time when the debt became due.⁴² And the allegation must be extended to every person who had a right to receive payment, either at the time the debt fell due or at any subsequent time prior to the commencement of the action.⁴³ If there be two obligees the averment must be of non-payment to either of them.⁴⁴ But it is generally sufficient to allege that the defendant, although often requested by the plaintiff to pay, has failed, neglected, and refused to pay the money alleged to be due or any part thereof.⁴⁵ An assignment that a sum less than the amount sued for is due and unpaid is not objectionable on that account. It merely limits the damages recoverable to the amount assigned in the breach.⁴⁶

(B) In Actions For Damages. In an action for breach of a contract to do something other than to pay money, it is not necessary to allege that the damages claimed are due and unpaid, for the damages in such case are not the primary object of the contract, but merely an incident of its breach, and the object of the action is to recover these very damages when they shall have been ascertained by the jury. In such cases the breach alleged is not a failure to pay, but a failure to do something else for which the damages are not liquidated.⁴⁷ Where the contract is to do, or refrain from doing, a certain act, or in case of breach to pay a certain sum as damages, it is not necessary to aver that the stipulated damages remain unpaid.⁴⁸ If a note is payable in merchandise it is not necessary to allege failure to deliver the merchandise; the usual allegation of non-payment is sufficient.⁴⁹

2. PLEAS AND ANSWERS — a. Argumentative Denials. An argumentative denial is bad.⁵⁰ A plea setting up a different contract from the one declared on is bad entitled to the relief demanded, in an action on an implied contract to pay for services, judgment will not be arrested because the complaint fails to allege that the debt remained unpaid at the commencement of the action. Morehouse v. Throckmorton, 72 Conn. 449, 44 Atl. 747.

as amounting to the general issue. It is an argumentative denial of the contract instead of being a direct denial.⁵¹ Any plea or answer setting up new matter which amounts only to the general issue is bad as an argumentative denial.⁵² But where the defendant first denies the contract alleged by the plaintiff and then sets up a contract materially different a substantial issue is raised.⁵³ A plea which merely denies that any such contract as that alleged in the declaration was seriously entered into by the parties, and alleges that if it was made in fact it was not intended to be operative is not open to the objection of being argumentative.⁵⁴

b. Partial Defense Pleaded as Complete Defense. Where a partial defense to an action on a contract is pleaded as a complete defense it is bad on demurrer.⁵⁵

c. New Contract Set Up as a Defense. At any time before a breach, the parties to a written contract may dissolve, waive, discharge, or qualify the contract or any part of the same by a new contract;⁵⁶ but a plea or answer setting up such new contract as a defense must aver that it was made before breach of the contract in suit.⁵⁷ And it must be shown that such new contract was binding on both parties.⁵⁸ If the time of payment mentioned in any written contract not under seal is enlarged by agreement of the parties, the plaintiff may declare on the original contract without noticing the agreement to enlarge the time of payment; and if he does this the defendant must plead and prove the subsequent agreement if he would rely on it as a defense.⁵⁹

d. Breach by Plaintiff. In pleading the non-performance of a contract by the plaintiff the facts which constitute the breach must be alleged.⁶⁰ Where a party defends on the ground that work, for the price of which he is sued, was negligently and unskilfully done, the nature and character of the imperfections must be set out specifically. General allegations are insufficient.⁶¹ Where the plaintiff alleges compliance with all the conditions of a contract and the defendant relies upon a breach of one condition, he must either deny such compliance or specially plead the breach relied on as a defense.⁶² Where by statute the plaintiff is authorized to plead a general performance of all conditions precedent, the defendant must, if he relies upon the fact that any of the conditions precedent have not been performed, set out specially the condition and the breach, thus confining the issue to be tried to such particular condition or conditions precedent as he may indicate as unperformed.⁶³

e. Setting Up Parol Contemporaneous Agreement. A plea or answer setting up a parol contemporaneous agreement inconsistent with the written contract in suit is bad on demurrer.⁶⁴ But a contemporaneous parol agreement may be the consideration for a written promise, and a failure to perform it would constitute a failure of consideration, and this is open to inquiry by extrinsic evidence.⁶⁵

f. General Issue and General Denial—(1) GENERAL ISSUE. If the plaintiff declares in assumpsit, the defendant may, under the general issue of non assumpsit, show that no such contract as that declared on was ever made,⁶⁶ for if the plaintiff misdescribes the terms or mistakes the meaning of the contract on which he sues, non assumpsit or a plea traversing the contract is the proper plea to let in the objection.⁶⁷ And it seems that the defendant may show that another and different agreement was actually made,⁶⁸ although this has been disputed.⁶⁹ The plea of non assumpsit, verified, puts in issue the execution of the instrument sued on to the same extent that the plea of non est factum does in actions of covenant;⁷⁰ but by statute or rule of court in some states, if the defendant pleads the general issue without denying the execution of the contract under oath, he must be considered to have admitted its execution in manner and form as alleged.⁷¹ Under the general issue the defendant may show that the instrument was delivered conditionally;⁷² but he is not at liberty to show an excuse for non-performance,⁷³ although it has been held that he may show that he offered to perform his part of the contract, but was prevented by the act of the plaintiff.⁷⁴ He may show under the general issue, by way of reduction of damages, that work was unskillfully done or that goods were not of the quality warranted.⁷⁵ But it seems that he cannot show, for the purpose of reducing damages, a breach by the plaintiff of stipulations independent of those on which the plaintiff seeks to recover, even though they be included in the same contract on which the action is brought.⁷⁶ And fraud which invalidates a contract cannot be proved under the general issue, unless the statutory notice is given.⁷⁷ The plea of "never was indebted" is applicable only to the common counts of a declaration. It is not applicable to a count upon a special contract.⁷⁸ A denial of indebtedness is not a sufficient answer where the plaintiff charges that the indebtedness arose out of breaches of a specific contract. The breaches must also be denied.⁷⁹

(II) GENERAL DENIAL—(A) Affirmative Defenses Cannot Be Shown. The rule is that a general denial in an answer simply puts the plaintiff upon proof of all matters necessary to make out his cause of action, but does not authorize the defendant to prove any new matter constituting an affirmative defense.⁸⁰ Such new matter, or matter in confession and avoidance, as it is known at common law, must be specially pleaded, and cannot be introduced in evidence under a mere denial.⁸¹

(B) Facts Inconsistent With Plaintiff's Allegations. Although under the requirements of the code practice new matter must be pleaded, and consequently the defenses of payment, release, accord and satisfaction, arbitration, and many other entire and partial defenses which, while they do not deny the cause of action stated in the complaint or petition, yet seek to avoid or bar it, and which were formerly available under the general issue, must now be set up in the answer before evidence in their support can be received, yet under a general or special denial of any part of the complaint or petition which the plaintiff is required to prove in order to maintain his action, the defendant, upon principle and authority, is at all times at liberty to prove anything tending to show that the plaintiff's allegations are untrue.⁸² And he may introduce evidence to disprove, wholly or in part, any fact which the plaintiff must establish to show a cause of action.⁸³ He may prove facts which are apparently new matter, when, instead of confessing and avoiding, they tend to disprove the facts alleged by the plaintiff. Such facts support the denial, because they tend to show that the plaintiff's allegations cannot be true by reason of certain other facts which are inconsistent with them.⁸⁴ Thus he may show that at the time of making the alleged contract he was, by reason of excessive indulgence in the use of intoxicating liquors, in such unsound mental condition that he was wholly devoid of judgment and discretion.⁸⁵ And he may prove that the contract sued on was conditional and that the condition was not fulfilled,⁸⁶ or that the contract by force of the condition has terminated.⁸⁷ So also he may show that the plaintiff has failed to perform the contract upon which he has sued.⁸⁸ And in an action for goods sold and delivered, which are claimed to have been purchased by the defendant's agent, a revocation of the agent's authority and notification thereof to the plaintiff before the sale may be shown under a general denial.⁸⁹ In such action the defendant may show under a general denial that the goods were sold and delivered to his wife under such circumstances as not to bind him.⁹⁰

(c) Proof Of the Real Contract. Under a general denial the defending party is always at liberty to disprove and overthrow the contract asserted against him, by proving that it was materially different from the one so asserted.⁹¹ In other words he may show what the contract really was.⁹² And upon this principle he may show that the instrument has been materially altered since its delivery.⁹³ So also in an action on an implied contract for services rendered, the defendant may show under a general denial that there was an express contract for the same services, even though such express contract be unlawful and invalid.⁹⁴ But if rescission is relied on as a defense, it must be specially pleaded. Proof of the fact cannot be admitted under an answer which merely denies the making of the contract.⁹⁵

(d) Conjunctive Denials. The pleader should take care not to deny the plaintiff's allegations in conjunctive form. Such qualified and copulative denials are insufficient to raise a substantial issue.⁹⁶

g. Plea of Performance. The general plea of performance is allowable only when all the covenants or promises are in the affirmative and comprehend a multiplicity of matters which are general in their nature. If they are specific, a plea of general performance is not good. In such case the plea should specifically set forth the mode of performance.⁹⁷ In a declaration assigning specific breaches, a plea of general performance is inapplicable and vicious; for the court is forced to the alternative of regarding it either as a nullity or as putting in issue only the acts of omission or commission imputed to the defendant as violations of his compact. If it were otherwise, and the plea were regarded as putting in issue every covenant on the part of the defendant to be performed, it might produce the strange absurdity that the plaintiff would recover damages for breaches of covenants of which he had never complained.⁹⁸ The plea of covenants performed admits the execution of the instrument;⁹⁹ and such a plea with no absque hoc to a declaration averring performance also admits performance on the part of the plaintiff.¹ But a plea of covenants performed absque hoc puts the plaintiff upon proof of his own performance of the contract.²

h. Tender of Specific Articles — (i) DESCRIPTION OF ARTICLES. In a plea of tender of goods upon an obligation payable in merchandise, the articles tendered must be described so that they can be distinguished and known.³

(ii) READINESS TO PERFORM. In such a case a plea that the defendant was ready and willing to deliver the articles at the time and place stipulated is insufficient. Readiness does not amount to a tender.⁴ The articles must have been designated and set apart, and placed absolutely at the disposal of the creditor, as upon a sale;⁵ and the plea must state that they were kept ready for delivery until the uttermost convenient time of the day of payment.⁶

(iii) NEED NOT BE PLEADED WITH AN UNCORE PRIST. If there has been an actual tender it need not be pleaded with an uncore prist; and the reasons assigned for not requiring the party to go beyond his contract and incur a further obligation attempted to be cast upon him by the creditor are that goods are perishable, and that there is an expense attending their keeping which the debtor must incur if he is obliged to keep his tender good.⁷

(iv) EFFECT OF THE TENDER. A tender, properly made, is a satisfaction of the demand; and while it is true that the property tendered is no longer lost to the creditor merely by his neglect or refusal to receive it, it is also true that by the tender the debt is paid and the articles tendered become the property of the creditor and are afterward kept at his risk and expense. The relation of debtor and creditor no longer subsists between the parties, but that of trustee and cestui que trust or bailor and bailee. In other words the effect of the tender is to give the promisee, instead of the jus ad rem which he loses, an absolute jus in re.⁸

1. Want of Consideration—(i) IN GENERAL. The defendant may plead non est factum and a want of consideration, and he will not be compelled to elect upon which defense he will stand.⁹ But the plea of no consideration standing alone admits the execution and delivery of the instrument.¹⁰ A plea or answer which avers that a note, bond, or other like instrument was given without any consideration, although it is in the negative, does not traverse the whole of the declaration, complaint, or petition, and must be treated as pleading new matter not alleged by the plaintiff, and therefore presents an issuable defense, to which a reply is necessary to produce an issue.¹¹ A plea or answer that the defendant received no consideration is bad on demurrer. If the contract has a consideration to support it, that is sufficient, whether it was received by the defendant or by someone else by his consent.¹² A plea which sets forth facts showing a want of consideration, but states them as showing a failure of consideration, is nevertheless a good plea of want of consideration.¹³ Want of consideration may be pleaded to a part, as well as the whole, of the cause of action, when limited to that part.¹⁴ Ordinarily the defense of a want of consideration may be made at law, but when a determination of the question of consideration depends upon the settlement of the affairs of a partnership, some of the members of which are not before the court, it becomes a question for equitable jurisdiction.¹⁵

(ii) PROOF UNDER THE GENERAL ISSUE OR GENERAL DENIAL. If the plaintiff declares specially upon an express contract a want of consideration cannot be proved under the general issue.¹⁶ But if he declares on the common counts instead of declaring specially, the defendant may show either a want or a total or partial failure of consideration under the general issue; and this upon the principle that the plea of non assumpsit puts the plaintiff upon proof of his whole case and entitles the defendant, without prior special notice, to give evidence of anything which shows ex æquo et bono that the plaintiff ought not to recover.¹⁷ If the instrument be one that imports a consideration, none need be alleged by the plaintiff; and if the defendant relies upon a want of consideration, he must plead it. He cannot avail himself of the defense under the general issue or a general denial.¹⁸ But if the instrument be such that the plaintiff is bound to plead and prove the consideration, a general denial puts in issue the existence of the consideration as well as other material facts.¹⁹ So also where the consideration is implied, the implication stands in the place of the alleged consideration in the other class, and the defendant's averment of a want of consideration is in effect but a denial of the implication; and it would seem that as complete an issue is thereby formed in the one case as in the other.²⁰

(III) GENERAL AND SPECIAL AVERMENTS. In an action upon an executory contract, a general averment that the contract was executed without any consideration whatever would seem to be sufficient without going into circumstantial details which are matters of evidence rather than averment.²¹ But according to another line of decisions, an allegation that the contract set forth by the plaintiff is inoperative and void for the want of a sufficient and adequate consideration is deemed to be merely an allegation of a conclusion of law; and it is considered necessary to aver the facts which show that there was no consideration.²² It has been held that the objection that no consideration is shown upon the face of the instrument, or that none is averred by the plaintiff, cannot be taken by demurrer; but that the want or failure of consideration must be averred and shown by way of defense when the action is upon a written contract.²³

j. Failure of Consideration—(1) PARTIAL FAILURE. A plea of partial failure of consideration, in an action on a sealed instrument reciting a consideration, is bad.²⁴ And at common law, partial failure of consideration could not be set up as a defense, unless the transaction was fraudulent in its inception. The defendant was obliged to resort to a cross action to recover his damages, unless he could show an entire failure of consideration.²⁵ But now generally, either by statute or judicial determination, the defense of partial want or failure of con-

Insufficient plea.—In an action on a note, a plea of want of consideration alleging that the payee was a son-in-law of the maker, and as heir of the maker's deceased daughter claimed an interest in the land in question, of which the maker was in possession under a homestead sued out in right of his wife and minor children, that the land was purchased with money of the maker, and that the note was given in settlement of the payee's claim and to prevent a threatened suit for partition, is insufficient in failing to allege that the maker took title to the premises in his own name or that his daughter in fact had no resulting trust in the property. *Johnson v. sideration may be interposed in an action on a contract, when the facts constituting the defense are specially pleaded or set out by way of recoupment or as a bar to so much of the demand as may be thus answered; and this rule promotes the ends of justice by avoiding the circuitry of action necessary under the old rule.²⁵ Thus where the plaintiff has made a warranty, either mala fide or bona fide, of which there has been a breach, the defendant may plead and prove his damages in the vendor's action for the price of the articles sold instead of bringing a cross action on the warranty.²⁷

(II) TOTAL FAILURE. There can be no recovery on a contract or promise, the consideration of which the promisee by his own voluntary act has annulled and destroyed.²⁸ Where there is a total failure of consideration for a contract, induced by the fraudulent representations of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is unable to perform, no notice of rescission is required to enable the defendant to plead failure of consideration as a defense.²⁹ A plea of failure of consideration must aver more than the mere failure; it must disclose the manner of the failure, and should state the consideration and its failure, not in general, but in specific terms. In other words it must state the facts showing the substance of the matter relied on as a defense, for a mere general averment that the consideration has failed is a statement of a legal conclusion.³⁰

(III) ALLEGATION AS TO WHETHER FAILURE IS PARTIAL OR TOTAL. If a failure of consideration is set up as a defense, it must be stated whether it is a partial or total failure.³¹ And a plea which avers a total failure of consideration, but discloses only a partial failure, is bad on demurrer.³² But under a good plea of total failure of consideration, a partial failure may be proved and made available at the trial.³³ So also a plea which sets out the consideration, but does not allege wherein it is insufficient, is bad on demurrer.³⁴

k. Illegality of Consideration — (i) IN GENERAL. As we have seen an action cannot be maintained on an illegal contract, whether the illegality be because the contract contemplates a violation of a rule of the common law or of a statute, or because it is contrary to public policy.³⁵ A plea or answer therefore which sets up facts showing that the contract sued upon is illegal for either of these reasons is good.³⁶

(ii) PROOF UNDER THE GENERAL ISSUE OR GENERAL DENIAL. In assumption at common law illegality of consideration may be shown under the general issue. The courts, in the due administration of justice, will not enforce a contract in violation of law or permit the plaintiff to recover upon a transaction contrary to public policy, even if the invalidity of the contract or transaction be not specially pleaded; and this is still the rule in some states.³⁷ In England, since the adoption of the Hilary rules, if a good cause of action at common law appear in the Winchester Repeating Arms Co.*, supra, Field, J., said: "The position of the plaintiff, that the illegality of the contract in suit cannot be noticed because not affirmatively pleaded, does not strike us as having much weight. We should hardly deem it worthy of serious consideration had it not been earnestly pressed upon our attention by learned counsel. The theory upon which the action proceeds is that the plaintiff has a contract, valid in law, for certain services. Whatever shows the invalidity of the contract, shows that in fact no such contract as alleged ever existed. The general denial under the Code of Procedure of New York, or the general issue at common law, is, therefore, sustained by proof of the invalidity of the transaction which is designated in the complaint or declaration as a contract." The learned justice quoted with approval the language of Swayne, J., in Hall v. Coppell, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 542, 19 L. ed. 244, where it was said: "The defense is allowed, not for the sake of the defendant, but of the law itself. The principle is indispensable to the purity of its administration. It will not enforce what it has forbidden and denounced. The maxim, Ex dolo malo non oritur actio is limited by no such qualification. The proposition to the contrary strikes us as hardly worthy of serious refutation. Whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. No consent of the defendant can neu-declaration, the defendant must plead any statutable illegality upon which he relies as a defense.³⁸ And in many cases decided under American statutes requiring the facts constituting the cause of action or defense to be pleaded, it has been decided that evidence tending to show the illegality of the contract in suit cannot be given under a general denial or the general issue, if the contract is valid on its face, and the illegality does not appear from plaintiff's proof; but the defense must be specially pleaded, and the facts going to show in what the illegality consists must be stated.³⁹

tralize its effect. A stipulation in the most solemn form to waive the objection, would be tainted with the vice of the original contract, and void for the same reason. Wherever the contamination reaches, it destroys. The principle to be extracted from all the cases is, that the law will not lend its support to a claim founded upon its violation."

If the contract is merely voidable, and not void, the defense of the invalidity cannot be made under a general denial. Kearns v. New York, etc., Ferry Co., 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 19, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 771.

Failure of consideration.—Illegality in the consideration cannot be pleaded as a failure of consideration. Wilkins v. Riley, 47 Miss. 306.

mated above, the rule last stated is subject to the qualification that the plaintiff must, to support his action, allege and prove a contract valid on its face. If he fails to do this, his complaint may be dismissed, although the invalidity of the contract has not been pleaded as a defense.⁴⁰ Consequently the rule does not apply where the illegality of the contract is disclosed by the plaintiff's own evidence; for then, under a general denial, the defendant may object that the plaintiff's evidence shows that no valid contract was made.⁴¹ Although it is frequently necessary to plead the facts upon which the illegality of a contract or transaction depends, it is never necessary to plead the law. When the facts appear, either upon the pleadings or proof, either party may insist upon the law applicable to such facts.⁴²

(IV) AGREEMENT TO SUPPRESS CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.⁴³ A plea or answer alleging that the consideration of the contract was a promise to suppress a criminal prosecution is sufficient, although it does not aver that a crime has in fact been committed.⁴⁴

1. Fraud or Duress—(i) IN GENERAL. If the defendant pleads fraud or duress in defeasance of the contract in suit, he must generally set forth the issuable facts upon which he relies to establish the defense.⁴⁵ For although fraud in the procurement of any contract vitiates it, such a defense must be pleaded, and it must be shown that the plaintiff was connected with, or was cognizant of, the Sufficiency of plea of fraud.—In Beck, etc., Lithographing Co. v. Houppert, 104 Ala. 503, 16 So. 522, 53 Am. St. Rep. 77, the facts averred in the plea were that the parties came to an agreement, that the plaintiff's agent reduced it to writing and then read it to the defendant in the terms agreed upon, when the defendant, believing the instrument was written as read, executed it. The plea then showed the difference in the instrument signed and the one the defendant intended to sign, and it was held good on demurrer. And see infra, XII, G, 2, I, (II).

fraud.⁴⁶ It has been held in Delaware, however, that in an action of assumpsit proof of fraud is admissible under the general issue.⁴⁷

(ii) WHETHER AVERMENT MAY BE GENERAL OR SHOULD BE SPECIFIC. As a rule a mere general averment of fraud, without stating the facts and circumstances on which the charge is based, is deemed to be an averment of a mere conclusion of law, presenting no issue, and not rendering proof admissible to establish the defense.⁴⁸ But while this general rule has gone unquestioned where the plaintiff alleges fraud and seeks affirmative relief,⁴⁹ cases are not wanting in which it has been considered that a general allegation of fraud as a defense is sufficient, because covin is usually so secret that the defendant cannot be supposed to have full knowledge of the facts.⁵⁰ Indeed it has been said that there may be considerable risk in pleading the fraud specially, for if the plea states in what the fraud and covin consist, it will preclude the defendant from going into general evidence of fraud.⁵¹ And in a number of cases it has been held that, in the absence of a statutory requirement to the contrary, a plea or answer to an action on a note, bond, or other like instrument, alleging in general terms that the writing was obtained, or its execution procured, by fraud, misrepresentation, and covin, without specifically averring the facts constituting the fraud, is sufficient, and presents a substantive and issuable fact which is not a mere conclusion of law, and which must be taken as true unless denied.⁵²

(iii) FALSE REPRESENTATIONS. Where the defense is grounded on false and fraudulent representations, as an inducement to enter into the contract, the defendant must set forth the alleged false and fraudulent representations, together with the threats and the defendant's fear of their execution must be alleged. Murdock v. Lewis, 28 Mo. App. 234.

Tipton*, 1 Mo. 446), although now, under the code, it is held that the facts and circumstances constituting the fraud must be pleaded (Nichols v. Stevens, 123 Mo. 96, 25 S. W. 578, 27 S. W. 613, 26 L. R. A. 36). And so are the English precedents. See 2 Chitty Pl. (16th Am. ed.) 393.

the facts as they actually exist.⁵³ He must state by whom the false representations were made in order that it may be ascertained whether they were made by a person in a position to speak for the plaintiff;⁵⁴ and he must distinctly negative the truth of the alleged false representations.⁵⁵ So also he must allege that the representations were made with a knowledge of their falsity on the part of the plaintiff;⁵⁶ and that he was misled and induced to enter into the contract through a belief in their truth.⁵⁷ At common law fraud could not be pleaded or given in evidence in an action on a specialty, unless it vitiated the execution of the instrument, and the defendant in such action was not permitted to show that he was induced to execute it by fraudulent representations as to the nature or value of the consideration.⁵⁸ But under modern statutes the rule is otherwise.⁵⁹ A distinction has been raised between a defense resting upon facts which were misstated in order to induce a party to enter into a bond, the contents of which he knew, and one resting on a misrepresentation of the contents of the instrument itself to an illiterate person. In the former it is said the bond is the obligation of the party who seals it, but is avoided by the false inducement to enter into it, the facts of which must be pleaded; but in the latter it is not his deed or bond at all, and he may successfully defend under the plea of non est factum.⁶⁰

m. Plea of Non Est Factum. The plea of non est factum puts in issue only the actual execution of the instrument. All other material averments of the declaration are deemed to be admitted, and all other defenses must be specially pleaded, including matters which make the instrument absolutely void as well as those which make it voidable.⁶¹ Under this plea it is not competent for the defendant to show matter in evidence which goes only to the avoidance of the contract; the reason being that the instrument remains his deed notwithstanding its liability to be avoided, until plea pleaded; so that he cannot in truth say that it is not his deed.⁶²

3. REPLICATION OR REPLY AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS — a. Replication at Common Law — (1) IN GENERAL. When the plea properly concludes to the country, which can be only when the allegations of the declaration have merely been traversed or denied, the plaintiff cannot in general reply otherwise than by adding what is termed the similiter.⁶³ But when the plea has introduced new matter and has therefore concluded with a verification, and the plaintiff does not demur, he must reply, and it is error to proceed to trial without a replication to the plea.⁶⁴ A good replication may conclude the defendant by matter of estoppel, may traverse or deny the matter alleged in the plea, may confess and avoid the plea, or lastly, in case of an evasive plea, may new assign the cause of action.⁶⁵ But the facts alleged in the plea should be traversed by the replication, unless matter in avoidance be set up. It is not sufficient that the facts alleged in the replication be inconsistent with those stated in the plea; an issue must be taken on the material allegations of the plea.⁶⁶ And if the plaintiff resorts to a traverse the replication must answer the whole of the plea.⁶⁷

(II) REPLICATION DE INJURIA. Formerly the general traverse, or the replication de injuria, as it is called, was confined in practice to actions of trespass, replevin, and cases for personal injuries, where some excuse was set up by the defendant in his plea.⁶⁸ But when the exigency of the new rules rendered special pleas in excuse frequent in actions of assumpsit and debt on simple contracts, it became reasonable that the plaintiff should be allowed to take issue by a general traverse on the whole matter of excuse alleged; and accordingly the courts soon sanctioned the use of such a form of replication, changing only such words as are merely formal.⁶⁹ This replication, however, is not to be allowed where the plea is in denial and not in excuse, as where it amounts to the general issue, to a denial of the contract, or the breach of it, on which the action is founded.⁷⁰ Nor is this replication allowed where the plea amounts to matter of discharge and not of excuse, as when the plea is payment, accord and satisfaction, release, or the like.⁷¹

(iii) DEPARTURE. The replication must not depart from the allegations made in the declaration in any material matter; the reason for the rule being that if the parties were permitted to wander from fact to fact, and to supply a new cause of action as often as the defendant should interpose a legal bar to that which the plaintiff previously set out, it would lead to endless prolixity, and it would even be possible by this means to prevent them from ever coming to issue.⁷²

b. Replies Under Code System—(i) OFFICE OF REPLY. The office of a reply under the code system of pleading is to deny new matter alleged in the answer as an affirmative defense or counter-claim or to allege new facts in avoidance of such defenses.⁷³ And the plaintiff by failing to reply admits the truth of all material allegations of new matter of such character as to call for a reply.⁷⁴

(ii) NOT REQUIRED WHERE ANSWER IS SUBSTANTIALLY A DENIAL. Facts stated in the answer, however, which could have been given in evidence under a general or special denial do not constitute new matter calling for a reply;⁷⁵ and no reply is required to an answer if its legal effect is a mere denial of the plaintiff's cause of action.⁷⁶ An answer setting up a different contract from that sued on does not constitute new matter calling for a reply.⁷⁷

(iii) STATUTORY REGULATIONS IN REGARD TO NECESSITY FOR. By statute in some jurisdictions no replication or reply is required, but all new matter set up in the answer is deemed to be controverted.⁷⁸ In others a reply is not necessary unless the defendant has set up new matter constituting a counter-claim.⁷⁹ In still others the law operates as a denial of an affirmative defense pleaded in the answer;⁸⁰ although any matter in confession and avoidance of the answer must be set up in a reply, for such is the office of a reply.⁸¹

(iv) DEPARTURE. It is not the office of a reply to state a cause of action,⁸² and the plaintiff is not permitted to plead in his reply matters which are material only to the cause of action alleged in his complaint or petition.⁸³ Much less will he be permitted to recover on a distinct cause of action which is pleaded for the first time in the reply.⁸⁴ When an answer is filed, he may be awarded any relief consistent with the case made by his initial pleading or embraced in the issue made by the answer; but he cannot be awarded an entirely different judgment from that prayed for in the first instance.⁸⁵ A reply which sets up matter which is not inconsistent with the complaint, but which tends to support and justify it, is not a departure.⁸⁶

c. Pleadings Subsequent to Replication. If the replication be in confession and avoidance, and not by way of traverse, the defendant may in turn traverse or confess and avoid its allegations. Such a plea is called the rejoinder. And so after this there may be surrejoinder, rebutter, and surrebutter.⁸⁷ The defendant must conform his rejoinder to a maintenance of the defense made by the plea.⁸⁸

H. Pleading and Proof — 1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES — a. Strictness of Proof Required. Matter of allegation or averment need be proved only in substance, and only so much thereof as makes out a legal claim. The remainder may be rejected as surplusage.⁸⁹ But matter of description must be proved as set forth. It cannot be rejected as surplusage, although the insertion was unnecessary.⁹⁰

b. Evidence Confined to Issues. When a material matter is put in issue by the pleadings, any competent evidence tending to sustain the contention of either party is admissible;⁹¹ and it is not essential to the admissibility of evidence that it should prove the issue under which it is offered. It is necessary only that it should tend to prove the issue or some part of it.⁹² But neither party is at liberty to introduce evidence of facts which are not alleged in the pleadings and are not within the issues made thereby.⁹³ Under an allegation of performance, an excuse for non-performance is not admissible in evidence.⁹⁴ Nor can defendant show a reason for non-performance under a plea of covenants performed, as it negatives instead of supporting the issue.⁹⁵ So where the defendant avers breaches of the contract in suit by the plaintiff, the latter cannot introduce evidence of matter in avoidance, unless he sets it up in his replication or reply.⁹⁶ Upon this principle it has been held that under an averment of performance it cannot be shown that performance was waived.⁹⁷ But on the other hand it has been held that under an allegation of performance the plaintiff may introduce proof of a waiver of any condition of the contract by the defendant.⁹⁸ Where this rule obtains, if there is a general allegation of performance, and the answer sets up affirmatively a breach of one or more of the conditions, an issue of waiver may be made by the reply.⁹⁹ If the plaintiff alleges performance of the contract on his part, the defendant may give evidence of a breach under a general allegation of a violation of the contract.¹

c. Traversable Matter Not Denied. All traversable matter not denied is deemed to be admitted, and it is not necessary to prove it.²

2. VARIANCE — a. General Correspondence Between Allegations and Proof. It is a fundamental rule that judgment shall be secundum allegata et probata, and any departure from that rule is certain to produce surprise, confusion, and injustice.³ Pleadings and a distinct issue are essential in every system of jurisprudence, and there can be no orderly administration of justice without them; and if a party can allege one cause of action and then recover upon another, his pleadings can serve no useful purpose, but will rather ensnare and mislead his adversary.⁴

4. Romeyn v. Sickles, 108 N. Y. 650, 15 N. E. 698; Southwick v. Memphis First Nat. Bank, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 164. No recovery can be had on a declaration alleging the sale of a team of horses directly to the defendant, who paid for them by note which he represented was good and collectable, but which was worthless, where the proof showed that the defendant sold the horses as the plaintiff's agent to a third person and accepted in payment paper which he was unauthorized to receive and which the plaintiff accepted upon false representations. Bilsborrow v. Warner, 117 Mich. 506, 76 N. W. 7.

b. Allegation of Express, and Proof of Implied, Contract. In an action upon an express contract the plaintiff cannot recover upon proof of an implied contract.⁵ Where the plaintiff declares upon an express contract, proof of reasonable value is not admissible under the contract.⁶ So where the action is to recover for work and materials alleged to have been furnished under a contract, which is not denied, the only issue made being as to the contract price, it is error to admit evidence of reasonable value.⁷ Such evidence, however, may sometimes be admitted in support of the contract to show that it is reasonable and one likely to be made under the circumstances.⁸ An allegation that the party charged a certain sum for his services, without any allegation of their value or of an agreed compensation, is not sufficient to let in proof of a claim for that or any amount.⁹

c. Allegation of Implied, and Proof of Express, Contract. Where an action is on an implied contract to recover the reasonable value of goods or services, and the proof shows a special contract for a stipulated price, the variance is fatal,¹⁰ except in certain cases heretofore referred to in which there can be a recovery on implied contract notwithstanding the existence of an express contract.¹¹

d. Rule Under Code System. Under the code system of pleading the plaintiff may sometimes allege the same cause of action in two counts, one on the special contract and the other on a quantum meruit, so as to meet any possible state of the proof, and where this is permitted the plaintiff cannot be compelled to elect on which he will go to the jury.¹² And it has been held that under a pleading alleging an express contract, a recovery on an implied contract may be sustained, where the defendant's rights have been fully protected. At most it is but a variance between the pleadings and the proof which may be disregarded unless it appears that the defendant was misled by it.¹³ So also where the court can see that a trial has been had upon the real issues without objection, it will not disturb a recovery upon the ground that it was not embraced in the pleadings.¹⁴ There are cases which have proceeded in disregard of the pleadings and wherein the whole case has been presented by both parties in their proofs without objection, in which an amendment has been allowed after the evidence was closed to conform the pleadings to the proofs.¹⁵ But when objection is seasonably taken or an exception presents the question, it is fatal to a recovery that it does not conform in all material respects to the allegations of the pleadings. The court will not ignore the whole office of a pleading and compel the parties to try their cases in the dark.¹⁶

e. Misstatement of Whole Contract — (i) IN GENERAL. The elementary rules of evidence require the contract set out to be substantially proved as stated, as this is essential to the establishment of the identity of the claim;¹⁷ and it is a well-settled legal principle that a recovery cannot be had upon proof without corresponding allegations.¹⁸ And if the contract alleged is materially different from that offered in evidence, the plaintiff cannot recover, for the contract must be rejected as evidence, inasmuch as the variance is fatal.¹⁹ A plaintiff is not allowed to declare on one cause of action and recover upon proof of another, because, if such variances are tolerated, however diligent the defendant may be he cannot so prepare his defense as to meet surprises.²⁰ But in an action to recover back money paid by mistake, where the plaintiff alleges a demand and a refusal to pay back the money, and the defendant admits the refusal to pay, proof of a subsequent promise by the defendant does not present such a variance between the cause of action alleged and the evidence as precludes a recovery.²¹ A variance between a contract set forth in a plea or answer and that given in evidence is equally fatal to the defense.²²

(II) MISTAKE IN PLEADING LEGAL EFFECT OF CONTRACT. Where the plaintiff sets out the contract in hæc verba and makes it a part of his initial pleading there can be no variance.²³ Where the declaration, complaint, or petition purports to set out an instrument according to its substance and legal effect, it is ordinarily sufficient if the instrument proved and the one alleged correspond in all essential particulars; but if the writing given in evidence is substantially different from that declared on, the variance will be fatal to a recovery.²⁴ Thus an allegation that a promise was to pay a sum of money in a reasonable time or on request is not supported by proof of a promise to pay on a day certain.²⁵ An action for wages will be sustained only by proof that the services were performed; and where the plaintiff seeks damages for a breach of contract to employ the case must be so pleaded.²⁶ A declaration which alleges a contract to tow a vessel

25. Willoughby v. Raymond, 4 Conn. 130. Where the promise laid in the declaration is to pay on request, and the promise proved on the trial is to pay in three months, the variance must be fatal, however strict a conformity there may be between the allegations and proof in every other particular. Query v. Brindlinger, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 86. So an allegation that rent was to be paid on demand is not supported by proof that it was to be paid at the end of the year. Taylor v. Hickman, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 434.

and cargo out safely and securely is not supported by proof of a contract to tow out free from a particular description of danger.²⁷ And an averment of a contract to build a ship is not supported by proof of a contract to finish a ship partly built.²⁸ In an action upon a contract to deliver certain articles when called for, the plaintiff must allege a demand for the articles and a refusal to deliver them; and an allegation of a demand for the amount of the articles in money will not admit proof of a demand for the articles themselves.²⁹

(iii) PROOF MORE AMPLE THAN ALLEGATIONS. An averment of a single contract is not supported by proof of two subsisting contracts.³⁰ And the plaintiff cannot give in evidence an entire contract relating to two distinct subjects when he declares as to one of them only.³¹ But it is no variance that the defendant promised other distinct matters in addition to that alleged, if the proof supports the averment as far as is requisite, unless the contract must be regarded as entire.³²

f. Misstatement of Particular Part or Term of Contract. There are many instances of variance in the statement of some particular part or material term of the contract. Errors of this description are generally as fatal to the plaintiff's case as a misstatement of the whole contract.³³ A variance between the averment and the agreement offered in evidence as to the sum due is fatal.³⁴

g. Alternative and Conditional Contracts. An averment of an absolute contract is not supported by proof of a contract in the alternative;³⁵ and on the other hand, when the contract is absolute and it is stated as an alternative contract, the variance will be equally serious.³⁶ So also where the contract is conditional it will be fatal to describe it as an absolute one,³⁷ even though the condition has been performed.³⁸

h. Exceptions and Provisos. If the defendant's promise or engagement, whether it be verbal, in writing, or under seal, contain as a part of it an exception which qualifies his liability, or in certain instances renders him altogether free from liability, the exception must be stated or there will be a fatal variance.³⁹ But a proviso need not be stated, unless it goes to discharge the liability under the contract entirely, for this comes more properly from the other side.⁴⁰

i. Averment as to Writing. If the plaintiff avers an express contract without stating whether it is written or verbal, evidence of a written agreement is admissible;⁴¹ but if he declares on a written contract he cannot be allowed to recover upon proof of a verbal contract.⁴² Nor can he prove a written contract if he declares on a verbal contract, even though the written instrument is lost.⁴³ Where the plaintiff seeks to recover upon an oral contract, a nonsuit should be granted if the evidence develops that there was an express written contract.⁴⁴

j. Statement of Consideration. Great accuracy is required in the statement of the consideration, and if it is put in issue it must be proved strictly as stated.⁴⁵ In assumpsit, although it is sufficient for the plaintiff to state only those parts of the contract for the breach of which he seeks to recover, yet the whole consideration must be explicitly and correctly stated, and if any part of an entire consideration, or of a consideration consisting of several things, be omitted or misstated, the plaintiff will fail at the trial on the ground of variance.⁴⁶ But this rule does not apply where the consideration is in part good and in part frivolous and insufficient. The insufficient part is regarded as mere surplusage if alleged, and consequently it is not necessary to notice it in the pleadings or to prove it if stated.⁴⁷

k. Performance and Breach—(i) IN GENERAL. It is a general rule of pleading that an averment of performance will not be supported by proof of a legal excuse for non-performance.⁴⁸

(ii) PROOF OF MALFEASANCE OR DEFECTIVE PERFORMANCE. An averment of nonfeasance is not supported by proof tending to show a malfeasance.⁴⁹ Under an allegation that the defendant totally neglected and refused to perform his engagement, proof that he performed it in a negligent and unskilful manner is not admissible.⁵⁰ In an action to recover the contract price agreed to be paid for work and materials, the defendant cannot show that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, unless he has pleaded such defense.⁵¹ But if he has alleged generally that the work was not performed in a good and workmanlike manner, he may prove defects other than those he may have specifically pointed out in his plea or answer.⁵²

(iii) TIME OF PERFORMANCE. As a general rule the date for the performance of a contract must be proved as laid,⁵³ unless the case be one in which the time alleged is not of the essence of the contract;⁵⁴ and if a pleading aver a contract to be performed at a time specified, a written agreement offered in evidence naming a day for performance other than that alleged, should be excluded upon the objection of variance.⁵⁵ A note without date of payment expressed is payable immediately, and if the plaintiff alleges no date of payment, a note payable on a day certain after its execution cannot be received in evidence, as its legal effect is different from that of the note alleged.⁵⁶

l. Place and Date of Execution. A distinction is established between allegations of matter of substance and allegations of matter of description. It is sufficient if the former be substantially proved, but the latter must be proved with a degree of strictness amounting in many cases to literal precision.⁵⁷ The place where a transitory contract purports to have been made is ordinarily immaterial;⁵⁸ but it may be made material by averments by way of description, and if it was executed at a different place, it seems that the variance is fatal.⁵⁹ So also the misstatement of the date of a written instrument is a fatal variance, where the date is alleged as a matter of description,⁶⁰ for in every written instrument the day laid is material and must be proved as laid where the action is brought on the instrument itself.⁶¹ If the instrument bears no date, it may be alleged to have been executed on any day, but in that case the words, "bearing date" or "dated," being descriptive words, must be omitted.⁶² It is usual to set out the true date of the contract, both as to time and place, and to lay the venue under the form of a videlicet, which obviates the necessity of strict proof.⁶³ And as time is not considered as forming a part of the material issue, where the day of making a contract is laid under a videlicet it need not be proved as laid. Consequently it is sufficient to prove that the damage occurred by reason of the breach of contract, without particular reference to the date of its execution.⁶⁴

m. Parties—(i) AVERTMENT OF JOINT AND PROOF OF SEVERAL CONTRACT. There may be a fatal variance between the pleading and proof in respect to the parties to the contract in suit. Thus if the plaintiff declares on a joint contract of the defendants, and that offered in evidence is several, or was made by a part of the defendants only, the variance is fatal.⁶⁵ So also a misjoinder of plaintiffs in an action ex contractu is fatal;⁶⁶ and if they declare on a contract made with them jointly, and the proof shows a several contract with each plaintiff, a nonsuit is proper.⁶⁷

(II) AVERMENT OF SEVERAL AND PROOF OF JOINT CONTRACT. And conversely it has been held that a joint contract cannot be given in evidence where a several contract only is alleged.⁶⁸ Proof of a copartnership contract will not sustain allegations of an individual contract.⁶⁹ But at common law, in a suit against one, proof may be given of a debt due from him and another jointly; and this is reasonable, for if the other joint debtor is living and not discharged, and is within reach of process, the defendant should plead the non-joinder in abatement.⁷⁰

(III) PROMISE FOR BENEFIT OF THIRD PERSON. Where a promise is made by one person to pay the debt of another, it is necessary for the party for whose benefit the promise was made to declare specially, unless the case be one in which the action for money had and received can be maintained, because if he declares generally he will encounter a fatal variance between his pleading and proof.⁷¹

(IV) CONTRACT MADE WITH CORPORATION. An allegation that a contract was made with a corporation is supported by proof that it was made with the president and directors of the company.⁷²

(V) CONTRACT MADE THROUGH AGENT. Proof of a contract made through the medium of an agent will sustain an allegation that it was made by the principal.⁷³

n. Effect of Subsequent Agreement. If the plaintiff declares on a contract as originally made, and his evidence reveals that the original contract has been superseded or materially modified by a valid subsequent agreement, the variance will be fatal to a recovery.⁷⁴

o. Surplusage. Where matter is alleged, the whole of which might have been struck out without destroying the plaintiff's right of action, it need not be proved at the trial.⁷⁵ But it is otherwise if the whole cannot be struck out without getting rid of something essential to the cause of action, for then, although the averment be more particular than it need have been, the whole must be proved or the plaintiff cannot recover.⁷⁶

I. Burden of Proof — 1. IN GENERAL. The usual test employed to determine on which side the burden of proof lies is to ascertain which party would be entitled to a verdict if no evidence were offered on either side of the issue,⁷⁷ for the general rule is that the burden of proof lies upon the party who takes the affirmative.⁷⁸

2. BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING CONTRACT. The party who alleges a contract, either as a cause of action or a defense, has the burden of proving it, if the existence of the contract is put in issue,⁷⁹ and he has the burden of proving every fact essential to the cause of action or defense.⁸⁰ The rule applies to implied as well as to express contracts.⁸¹ He must make out at least a prima facie case that the minds of the parties met in making the contract.⁸² Where the existence of a special unrescinded contract is disclosed by the evidence, the plaintiff must show its Defense of express contract in action on quantum meruit.—If, in an action upon the quantum meruit for services, the defendant sets up an express contract that the plaintiff's compensation was to depend upon a specified contingent event, it is not incumbent upon the defendant to prove that the specified event did or did not happen. The burden of proof remains with the plaintiff (Evans v. Miller, 37 Minn. 371, 34 N. W. 596; Hull v. Cooper, 36 Mo. App. 389); for it would be very illogical to hold that because the rules of pleading permit the plaintiff to sue in assumpsit, and not on the special contract, the defendant is therefore saddled with the burden of establishing his version of the special contract (Hull v. Cooper, 36 Mo. App. 389).

stipulations; otherwise it would be impossible to determine whether he has a right to recover.⁸³ And this is true, although the paper containing the terms and conditions of the contract is in the possession of the defendant, for the plaintiff has the means of enforcing its production or of introducing secondary evidence of its contents in case it is not produced upon proper notice, or under a subpoena duces tecum.⁸⁴ If the contract is expressly admitted, or its existence is not put in issue, the party alleging it is relieved of the burden of proving its execution.⁸⁵

3. NECESSITY OF PUTTING WRITING IN EVIDENCE. In no case, either in law or in equity, is a party required to prove facts alleged in his pleadings and admitted by the pleadings of the opposite party.⁸⁶ Accordingly, if the existence, execution, and contents of a written agreement are admitted as alleged, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to offer the writing in evidence.⁸⁷ But in the absence of such admission, a written contract declared on must be put in evidence, unless a sufficient foundation be laid for the introduction of secondary evidence of its contents.⁸⁸

4. NECESSITY OF PROVING DELIVERY. Where a written agreement signed by one of the parties is found in the possession of the other party, it is presumed to have been duly delivered; but this presumption may be rebutted and the possession explained by parol evidence.⁸⁹ And where the execution of the instrument sued on is denied under oath, the plaintiff must prove its delivery as well as the other elements of its execution.⁹⁰

5. BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING JOINT INTEREST OR LIABILITY. Plaintiffs who sue as joint contractors must show a joint interest in the subject-matter.⁹¹ And if two or more are sued jointly, the plaintiff has the burden of showing a joint substantial liability on the part of all the defendants,⁹² although exceptions to this rule exist in case of the death of a defendant, and where one or more of the defendants plead and establish infancy, coverture, or a discharge under a bankrupt or insolvency law.⁹³ Where two or more persons are jointly interested to have certain services performed, and one of them requests another to perform them, he may be presumed to have done it in behalf of all those interested, unless there be something to indicate a different intention.⁹⁴

6. BURDEN OF PROVING PERFORMANCE — a. In General. A party who sues on a special contract to recover compensation alleged to be due on its performance must show performance on his part, if that matter is put in issue.⁹⁵ But if the plaintiff's allegation of performance is not put in issue by the defendant, he is relieved of the burden of proving it.⁹⁶ Where a tender of performance has been declined, and the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the breach, it is sufficient for him to prove a legal excuse for non-performance.⁹⁷ In an action on a contract to perform some duty, if the plaintiff proves the contract, it is then incumbent on the defendant to prove performance or its equivalent, without proof of non-performance on behalf of the plaintiff.⁹⁸ Thus where an affirmative contract to pay money is proved, it is incumbent on the defendant to prove payment if he relies on that defense.⁹⁹ One who seeks to recover payment for work partly performed must prove that the work which he did was done according to his covenant. Until he shows this, evidence that he was prevented from finishing it by the defendant is irrelevant;¹ and in such case the burden also rests on the plaintiff to excuse his failure to perform the contract.² The general principle undoubtedly is, in all cases where services are performed under a special contract, that the party claiming payment therefor must prove substantial performance or a waiver.³ An acceptance or a voluntary use of the subject-matter of the contract will be evidence of performance or of a waiver, although not conclusive.⁴ But if such acceptance or use is in ignorance of any deficiency of performance, it will not be held to be a waiver.⁵ Under such circumstances, however, the burden of showing defective performance rests on the party alleging it.⁶ Where the owner permits a contractor to proceed with the work after the expiration of the time for its completion, the presumption is that the stipulation in regard to the time of performance has been waived.⁷ Where the plaintiff proves complete performance of his contract, it is not necessary for him to prove also an acceptance on the part of the defendant.⁸

b. Conditional Contracts. In an action on a special and conditional contract, the plaintiff has the burden of showing an actual compliance with the conditions imposed upon him before he can be heard to urge a breach by the defendant.* So where the covenants are dependent the plaintiff is bound to allege and prove performance on his part.¹⁰ And where the defendant pleads performance specially in bar, the burden of proof is upon him, for the plea of conditions performed admits all the facts that are well alleged and assumes the proof of performance.¹¹ So if the defendant claims a waiver of performance by the plaintiff, the burden is upon him to show both knowledge and acquiescence necessary to constitute a waiver.¹² And where the defense is based on any excuse for non-performance the burden rests on the defendant to prove it.¹³

c. Demand For Performance. Where a demand for performance is a condition precedent to a right of action on a contract, the plaintiff must not only allege it, but has the burden of proving that a demand was actually made and that the defendant refused to perform.¹⁴

d. Readiness and Ability to Perform. Neither party to a contract can maintain an action for damages for its violation, without showing a readiness and ability to comply with his own engagements under the contract,¹⁵ unless the averment of these matters is not denied by the defendant,¹⁶ or it be alleged and proved that the defendant has refused to perform on his part, and has actually prevented performance by the plaintiff.¹⁷ If by the terms of the contract the defendant is not required to do the first act, the plaintiff must allege and prove an offer to comply with the agreement or a sufficient excuse for not doing so.¹⁸

7. FULFILMENT OF CONDITIONS. The burden rests on the plaintiff to show the fulfilment of a condition precedent to his right of recovery.¹⁹ But in the case of a condition subsequent, the happening of which is to defeat the cause of action, the burden of proof rests on the defendant.²⁰ And the same is true where the fact in question is one peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant.²¹

8. BURDEN OF PROVING BREACH. In an action to recover damages for a breach of contract, it is as a rule incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the breach complained of.²² But if an affirmative contract to pay money or perform some duty is proved, it is then incumbent on the defendant to prove payment, performance, or tender, or a sufficient excuse therefrom.²³

9. EFFECT OF REFUSAL TO PERFORM. In a suit for breach of contract, a notice by one party to the contract that he will not perform it dispenses with the necessity of proof of readiness to perform by the other party.²⁴

10. SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT. A party who relies on the execution of a subsequent written agreement as an abandonment of an oral agreement assumes the burden of proving it.²⁵ And generally the party who asserts a change or modification in a contract after it was made has the burden of establishing his assertion.²⁶ instrument merely as a witness, the burden is upon him to prove that fact if there is nothing on the face of the instrument to show that he signed it in that capacity.²⁷

12. SHIFTING BURDEN. When once the plaintiff has established a prima facie case, the burden is then shifted to the defendant to establish his defense.²⁸ And after proof of the execution of the contract and the breach by the defendant, the burden is then on the defendant to show an excuse for the breach.²⁹

13. PROOF OF FRAUD, ILLEGALITY, AND OTHER AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES. In an action for calls on shares, where the defendant pleads that he was induced to take the shares by fraud, it is not for him to show that he repudiated the shares as soon as he became aware of the fraud, but it lies on the plaintiff to show that he adhered to the contract notwithstanding the discovery of the fraud. *Aaron's Reefs v. Public policy.—As an agreement is not void unless itself or its tendency is to injure the public, the burden of proof is on the party who asserts that it is against public policy. A party who seeks to put a restraint upon the freedom of contract in any case must make it plainly and obviously clear that the contract in question is against public policy.

proving it.³⁴ Where the defendant pleads generally that there was no consideration for the contract sued on, the burden of the issue is on the plaintiff;³⁵ but if he pleads specially the matters showing the want of consideration, he thereby assumes the burden of proof of the issue.³⁶ A party who alleges a partial failure of consideration as a defense must prove the extent to which the consideration has failed.³⁷ Of course the defendant is relieved of the burden of proving such defenses as those mentioned above if the infirmity of the contract is disclosed by the plaintiff's own evidence.³⁸

J. Admissibility of Evidence — 1. EVIDENCE OF CONTRACT — a. In General.

Where the parties have deliberately reduced their agreement to writing, the writing itself, if it can be produced, is the only admissible evidence of the contract, and parol evidence is not admissible to contradict, vary, or modify the written contract in any particular.³⁹ So also if the contract be such as requires a writing under the statute of frauds, parol evidence cannot be admitted to prove the contract or any essential terms thereof, or to prove a subsequent agreement materially modifying it.⁴⁰ But if a simple contract, although reduced to writing, would have been valid without writing, a subsequent modification of it may be proved by parol evidence; or a new and distinct agreement, upon a new consideration, may be thus proved, whether it be a substitute for the old or something in addition to it.⁴¹ And where the contract has been modified, but not entirely superseded by a subsequent parol agreement, the original written contract is admissible in evidence in an action on the contract as modified.⁴² If an agreement, valid without writing, rests in parol, it may of course be proved by oral evidence.⁴³ And written instruments may be evidence of an oral contract.⁴⁴ A contract may

In the case of lobbying contracts, the plaintiff's pleadings and proof usually reveal the vicious tendency of the contract, and the burden then rests on the plaintiff to show that his services were of a legitimate character. *Mills v. Where plaintiff alleges a written contract with defendant containing certain conditions, the plaintiff's performance of the conditions and the defendant's default, the written agreement is admissible in evidence, although it contains conditions not alleged, provided they are not inconsistent with the allegations.

When a written contract in suit is treated in the pleadings as resting in parol, the writing is not admissible, and hence the contract may be proved by parol. Durflinger v. Baker, 149 Ind. 375, 49 N. E. 276.

Acts of parties.—Where the issue is as to what a verbal agreement is, the acts, as well as the words of the parties with respect to the matter of the agreement at the time of making it, are admissible in evidence and should be considered by the jury. Egan v. Faendel, 19 Minn. 231.

44. An unsigned writing, admitted by both parties to contain a correct statement of an

be proved by the correspondence of the parties, provided it shows that a definite offer was made on one side and was accepted without qualification on the other.⁴⁵ Where the making of a contract is denied, and the defendant is precluded from testifying by reason of the death of the other alleged contracting party, it is the right and privilege of the defendant to put before the jury every fact and circumstance which may have any tendency to show or raise the presumption that such contract never existed.⁴⁶

b. Distinction Between Express and Implied Contracts. There is a distinction between an express and an implied contract in the mode of substantiation. An express contract is proved by evidence of an actual agreement; an implied contract by circumstances and the general course of dealing between the parties.⁴⁷ But there are cases in which it is held that an express contract may be established either by direct and positive evidence or by circumstantial evidence equivalent to that which is direct and positive.⁴⁸

c. Memoranda of Witnesses. While it is clearly the privilege of the jury or any member of it to take notes of the oral testimony as aids to memory, there is no principle of law which authorizes memoranda of calculations made by a witness to assist his own memory, to be placed before the jury, if objection be made.⁴⁹

d. Execution of Instrument. The execution of a written instrument by a person may be proved by positive evidence, such as the testimony of subscribing witnesses or proof of his handwriting;⁵⁰ but as it is not essential that he should write his own name to the instrument in order to make it his contract, if facts are proved amounting to an acknowledgment on his part that it was his act, the jury may infer that it was executed by him or by his authority.⁵¹ As the plea of oral agreement entered into by them, although it may not be introduced as the contract, is competent evidence of what the oral agreement was. Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Lyon, 73 Mich. 438, 41 N. W. 497.

An instrument which is void on its face is not admissible to prove the contract of which it was intended to be the memorial. Craig v. Andrews, 7 Iowa 17. But an instrument, although void, may be admissible in evidence, in an action on a valid contract, as a written admission of the party who signed it. Iron Mountain, etc., R. Co. v. Stansell, 43 Ark. 275. And a party may show that he acted under a void or illegal contract, when the evidence is offered merely for the purpose of showing with what intention an act was done, such intention being material, and the contract being otherwise immaterial. Harvey v. Stevens, 58 N. H. 338.

Upon the question whether there was an agreement made by letters, all the correspondence between the parties on that subject is admissible in evidence. Bryant v. Lord, 19 Minn. 396. Where a declaration on a contract of sale does not count upon it as in writing, a letter offering to sell may be received in evidence, without showing that it constitutes the entire correspondence between the parties. Trench v. Hardin County

Canning Co., 168 Ill. 135, 48 N. E. 64 [affirming 67 Ill. App. 269]. But where, after the minds of the parties meet, they deliberately reduce the whole contract to writing, their previous correspondence on the subject, not referred to in the written contract, is not admissible in evidence. Randall v. Rhodes, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 90, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,556.

Proof of the confession of a party signing

non est factum relates to the time of pleading, proof of an acknowledgment or ratification at any time ante litem motam is sufficient to establish the issue raised by such plea in favor of the plaintiff.⁵² But before the plaintiff can introduce evidence of a ratification of the alleged contract by the defendant, he must show a compliance with its terms on his own part.⁵³ When the making of an alleged contract is directly put in issue, all the surrounding circumstances which may be considered part of the res gestæ are admissible in evidence.⁵⁴ Where evidence as to the existence of a contract is conflicting, the plaintiff may show in corroboration that the defendant has, either in person or by his agent, actually performed it in part.⁵⁵ A paper which has never been delivered is not admissible in evidence to prove a contract.⁵⁶

2. EVIDENCE OF PERFORMANCE OR BREACH. The defendant has a right to introduce any competent evidence to show non-performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, and plaintiff may introduce any competent evidence to show performance.⁵⁷ Where the defense is that the plaintiff did not complete the work as agreed upon, the defendant may introduce evidence of the amount necessarily expended in getting the work completed, because it tends to prove the defense and also the extent of the damage occasioned by the non-performance.⁵⁸ Where the plaintiff sues on a contract which he has not fully performed, he may prove any legal excuse for non-performance, if he has so framed his pleadings as to let in such evidence.⁵⁹ And where the defendant has objected to the sufficiency of work performed by the plaintiff, it is competent for the plaintiff to prove any fact bearing on the good faith of the defendant's objecan instrument not under seal that he executed it is sufficient without calling the subscribing witnesses. Hall v. Phelps, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 451.

Ratification of act of an agent.—Where an agreement was made through an agent of one of the parties, it is error to exclude evidence that it was submitted to the principal and ratified by him. Canfield v. Johnson, 144 Pa. St. 61, 22 Atl. 974.

Execution not denied under oath.—A contract which is the foundation of the suit is admissible in evidence without proof of its execution, under Ala. Code, § 1801, where the execution is not denied by plea filed, verified under oath. Thornton v. Savage, 120 Ala. 449, 25 So. 27.

54. Brown v. Tourtelotte, 24 Colo. 204, 50 Pac. 195. And see EVIDENCE.

Proof of absence at time and place of execution.—Evidence that an alleged maker of a note was not present at the time and place it was claimed to have been signed is relevant and material to support the defense of forgery. Brown v. Tourtelotte, 24 Colo. 204, 50 Pac. 195.

Facts not part of res gestæ.—The question being whether the contract was in fact made or not, evidence that one party did not at the time have the property agreed to be delivered, or that one of the defendants told the other, his partner, not to make the contract, is inadmissible. Such facts are no part of the res gestæ. Nash v. Hoxie, 59 Wis. 384, 18 N. W. 408.

Where the issue is whether the contract was performed within a reasonable time, evidence of the condition of the market for materials used at the time is admissible as tending to show what was a reasonable time. Moore v. H. Gaus, etc., Mfg. Co., 113 Mo. 98, 20 S. W. 975.

The difference in the results produced by a model and its imitation is admissible in corroboration of the testimony of a witness that there is a difference in their construction. Tilton v. Miller, 66 Pa. St. 388, 5 Am. Rep. 373.

Performance interrupted by defendant.—In an action on a contract which the plaintiff has not been permitted to complete, evidence is admissible to show that he performed in a proper manner so far as he went. Americus v. Alexander, 64 Ga. 447. And where, in an action for breach of contract, the plaintiff claims that his performance was prevented by certain correspondence with the defendant's agent, it is proper to submit the correspondence to the jury. Chapman v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 146 Mo. 481, 48 S. W. 646.

Tender of performance.—On an issue of the sufficiency of a tender of performance, evidence that aside from the tender made the party was in a position to perform the contract is not admissible. Hawley v. Mason, 9 Dana (Ky.) 32, 33 Am. Dec. 522.

tion.⁶⁰ Great lapse of time will raise a presumption that a covenant has been performed, but this presumption may be rebutted.⁶¹

3. EVIDENCE OF DAMAGES. The plaintiff's case includes not only the making and breach of the agreement declared on, but the amount of damages if any to which the plaintiff is entitled, and evidence tending to ascertain such amount is pertinent to the issue.⁶²

4. EVIDENCE OF ABANDONMENT. On an issue as to the abandonment of a contract and the rights under it, it is competent to prove not only acts, admissions, and declarations tending to show an abandonment in fact, but also, in connection therewith and to characterize such acts, admissions, and declarations to show a reason or motive for abandonment, such as that, owing to low prices or values of the property involved, the venture and the rights under the contract appeared to be of no value.⁶³ In determining whether a party has given his consent to a rescission or abandonment of a contract, it is always proper to inquire whether it was to his interest to do so.⁶⁴

5. EVIDENCE OF ILLEGALITY. Where a contract is assailed on the ground that it is illegal and void, the defense may be and generally is established by evidence aliunde,⁶⁵ for the rule which forbids the introduction of parol evidence to contradict, add to, or vary a written instrument does not extend to evidence offered to show that a contract was made in furtherance of objects forbidden by statute, by the common law, or by the general policy of the law.⁶⁶ It is competent to prove that a written contract was executed on Sunday and is therefore invalid,

Evidence of public policy.—The constitution, laws, and judicial decisions of a state are the only authentic and admissible evidence of its public policy on any given subject. The law points out the sources of information to which courts must appeal, and vague surmises as to what would be shocking to the moral sense of the people are not to be indulged in when contracts are assailed on the ground that they are contrary to public policy. *Swann v. although it purports on its face to have been executed on another day.⁶⁷ When the consideration for a contract is the compounding of a felony, the contract is void, and evidence tending to show that no crime was in fact committed is not admissible.⁶⁸ And a fortiori statements of the prosecuting attorney in regard to the merits of the prosecution are not admissible.⁶⁹

6. EVIDENCE OF VALUE OR PRICE. In assumpsit to recover for services rendered, evidence of the value of such services is admissible, where there is nothing to show an agreement to pay a particular sum or at a particular rate.⁷⁰ But where the compensation for services rendered or the price of property sold or materials furnished is stipulated by express agreement no evidence of value is admissible.⁷¹ Thus in an action upon an executory agreement to purchase property at a stipulated price the value of the property is immaterial and need not be proved.⁷² It has been held, however, that it is not error to admit evidence of the value of services in corroboration of evidence of the express agreement.⁷³ And where there is a direct conflict of evidence as to the agreed rate of payment, the actual value of the services rendered, of the property sold, or of materials furnished at the time of making the contract may be proved, as such evidence tends to show whose contention is probably correct.⁷⁴ In an action on a contract for services at an alleged stipulated rate, where the contract is denied, and it is insisted that a contract to pay the alleged compensation would be unreasonable, and that it is therefore improbable that it was entered into, evidence of the plaintiff's earning capacity in other employment is admissible to repel the imputation of unreasonableness.⁷⁵ But it has been held that where the making of an alleged contract of sale is in dispute, the value of the thing alleged to have been sold cannot be proved to show the making of the contract.⁷⁶ If the circumstances are such that the plaintiff, without full performance, may sue in assumpsit, evidence of the value of what has actually been done is admissible.⁷⁷ And it has been held that where the plaintiff alleges an interruption of performance by the act of the defendant and brings his action on the special contract evidence of the value of what he has done is admissible.⁷⁸

These cases proceed upon the principle that in controversies where a special agreement is alleged on one side and is denied on the

7. TENDENCY TO SUPPORT ISSUE. It is not essential to the admissibility of evidence that it will actually establish a cause of action or defense. When otherwise competent it should be received if it has a tendency to do so,⁷⁹ particularly if a transaction is assailed on the ground that it is tainted with fraud, for courts will not trouble themselves about fine distinctions in the admissibility of evidence when the purpose is to unkenel a fraud.⁸⁰ Evidence of facts outside the issue is not admissible, although such facts may tend to prove the issue in an argumentative way.⁸¹

other, it is relevant to put in evidence any circumstances which tend to make the proposition at issue either more or less improbable; and this not to change the contract, but as evidence bearing upon the probability that the contention of one party is correct rather than that of the other. Miller v. Early, 53 S. W. 789, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 825; Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438, 7 N. W. 77; Moore v. Davis, 49 N. H. 45, 6 Am. Rep. 460; Barney v. Fuller, 133 N. Y. 605, 30 N. E. 1007, 44 N. Y. 8. DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS.⁸² Letters written by a party to a suit are not admissible in his own behalf, unless they are part of a mutual correspondence resulting in a contract. A party can no more make evidence for himself by writing letters than by making oral declarations.⁸³ And the same is true of the written statements of a party's agent.⁸⁴ But the written admissions of a party are competent evidence on behalf of his adversary, if they are relevant to the issue.⁸⁵ And the same is true of oral admissions and declarations against interest.⁸⁶ When the admissions of a party are given in evidence in the course of a trial, the whole of what he said at the same time and relating to the same subject must be given in evidence, but it is for the jury to consider, under all the circumstances, how much of the whole statement they deem worthy of belief, including as well the facts asserted in his own favor as those making against his interest.⁸⁷ So also Thus where a contract provides that lumber is to be manufactured in a good and workmanlike manner, no reference being made as to the kind of mill to be used, it is error to admit evidence that portable mills are not expected to make as good lumber as stationary ones. Grice v. Noble, 59 Mich. 515, 26 N. Y. 688.

Where, in an action to recover for the storage of railroad ties, the jury find that a special contract for storage existed between the plaintiff and defendant, evidence as to the value of the ties and of the lots on which they were stored is inadmissible. *Lansburgh v. In determining whether arc lights of an electric plant fulfil the contract under which they are furnished, it is not competent to introduce evidence comparing them with arc lights at other places, or of a former plant at the same place, even when the character and capacity of the lamps, or the conditions under which the other lights were operated, are shown by the witnesses. *A. All acts and declarations of the parties offered and tending to prove or establish an oral contract alleged in the complaint should an admission contained in a pleading or other writing is to be taken as a whole. It cannot be extended beyond its fair import, and is limited by any statement therein which qualifies or explains it.⁸⁸ The admissions of an agent as to past transactions are not admissible in evidence against the principal unless they were part of the res gestæ.⁸⁹

9. COLLATERAL WRITINGS. A collateral writing which involves no departure from the contract sued on, but which supplements it, is admissible in evidence, where the contract in suit manifestly does not express the whole agreement.⁹⁰ Where plans and specifications are advertised or furnished, on the basis of which a contract is made, they cannot be excluded as evidence in an action on the contract.⁹¹ So also an engineer's estimates of the quality and probable quantity of work to be done under a contract based on them are admissible in evidence in an action for a breach of the contract.⁹² But estimates prepared by the defendant's engineer after the breach are not admissible in evidence in behalf of the defendant,⁹³ although estimates of the defendant's engineer have been held to be admissible on behalf of the plaintiff as tending to show that the defendant be admitted on the trial, and it is error to exclude such evidence. Idaho Mercantile Co. v. Kalanquin, (Ida. 1900) 62 Pac. 925; Clerihew v. Standard Railroad-Signal Co., 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 760, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 1108.

Conditions printed on the back of a paper on which a contract is written, and referred to on the face of the paper, are admissible in evidence. Haddaway v. Post, 35 Mo. App. 278. See also supra, II, C. 3, c. (VI).

Parol evidence to connect printed rules.—Where a contract is written on paper upon which are printed extracts from the rules of an exchange, parol evidence is admissible on both sides upon the question whether or not the contract was made subject to such rules. Berry v. Kowalsky, 95 Cal. 134, 30 Pac. 202, 29 Am. St. Rep. 101.

A contract for the construction of a railway road-bed referred to certain specifications and plans, and required that the road-bed should be constructed in accordance therewith; but it was shown that although such specifications might have accompanied the contract, the plaintiff's attention had never been called thereto, and that they were never seen by him, nor used in entering into or in carrying out the contract. The contract, however, was performed according to its terms and to the satisfaction of the defendant's engineer. It was held, in an action to recover a balance on the contract, that the contract was admissible to show the stipulated prices for the work executed, although no specifications were attached. Terrell Coal Co. v. Lacey, (Ala. 1901) 31 So. 109.

10. EVIDENCE OF OTHER CONTRACTS. Evidence of subsequent contracts between the parties is not admissible, unless it is proposed to show that in making such subsequent contracts the matter in controversy was adjusted.⁹⁵ Neither is evidence of a similar contract previously made admissible to prove the terms of the contract in suit.⁹⁶ But a prior contract concerning the same subject-matter may become material on the question as to what is a reasonable time for the performance of the contract in suit.⁹⁷

11. COLLECTIVE STATEMENTS OF FACTS. In order to avoid prolixity it is permissible, and frequently desirable, for a witness to make a collective statement of facts; then if the other side wishes to go into the details they may be brought out on cross-examination.⁹⁸

12. VALIDITY OF ASSENT. When the pleadings are in proper shape, any competent evidence is admissible to show that the contract was procured by fraud.⁹⁹ And so of duress. Evidence of what took place at the time of taking a married woman's acknowledgment is admissible to prove duress.¹ And where a married woman sets up fear and compulsion of her husband as a defense, the plaintiff may prove her voluntary acts of partial performance of the contract as tending to rebut the evidence of duress.² Where a contract is assailed on the ground that one of the parties was mentally incapacitated to make it, the inquiry for the jury is as to his mental condition at the very time of entering into the contract; but evidence of his condition both before and after that time, within reasonable limits, is proper for the consideration of the jury, as bearing upon the question of his mental condition at the time of making the contract.³ In such cases no absolute rule limiting the inquiry to fixed periods, to be applied uniformly, can be laid down.⁴

Performance of contract.—Thus the witness may be permitted to state in general terms that a contract was performed when the answer amounts to no more than a conclusion of fact, and the opposing party may bring out the particular facts on cross-examination. Hood v. Disston, 90 Ala. 377, 7 So. 732.

Terms of contract.—And a witness may be permitted to state in his own language what the contract was, provided he does not state a conclusion or the legal effect of the contract. If the opposing party wishes to draw out what was said and done by the parties at the time this may be done on cross-examination. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Reed, 84 Ala. 493, 4 So. 369.

13. EVIDENCE TO AID CONSTRUCTION — a. In General. If a written contract is ambiguous or obscure in its terms, so that the contractual intention of the parties cannot be understood from a mere inspection of the instrument, extrinsic evidence of the subject-matter of the contract, of the relations of the parties to each other, and of the facts and circumstances surrounding them when they entered into the contract may be received to enable the court to make a proper interpretation of the instrument.⁵

b. Practical Construction by Parties. And where the contract is of this character, evidence of what the parties have actually done in the partial performance of it is admissible in order to show their practical construction of it, and to enable the court to determine their intention at the time of making the contract.⁶ This rule is peculiarly applicable in the construction of ancient charters and grants.⁷ So also in interpreting a contract, a subsequent contract between the same parties respecting the same matter is admissible in evidence to show how the parties understood the first contract.⁸

c. Where Instrument Is Not Ambiguous. Where, however, there is no imperfection or ambiguity in the language of a contract, and it contains no technical terms of art, science, or trade, it will be considered as containing the entire and exact meaning of the parties. In such case the court needs the assist-

d. Witness Not Permitted to Construe Contract. Under no circumstances is a witness to be allowed to testify to his understanding of the legal effect of a contract, for it is the province of the court alone to construe and interpret contracts.¹⁰ Much less may a party testify to his secret intention in entering into a contract, for it must be interpreted as expressing the intention of both parties.¹¹

K. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence. If, in an action on a contract, the evidence is conflicting, but there is enough, if standing alone, legally to support the findings of the jury, whether for the plaintiff or the defendant, the verdict as a rule will not be disturbed on the ground that it is contrary to the weight of evidence.¹² But if the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, and the defendant does not introduce any evidence sufficient to raise a doubt, and the case is allowed to go to the jury, who render a verdict for the defendant, the case should be reversed on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.¹³ Juries can neither make contracts for parties nor mold at pleasure those which they have made for themselves. They should ascertain from the evidence, fairly and honestly, what was or must have been the contract really made by the parties, and not substitute therefor any caprice or mere will of their own.¹⁴

L. Questions of Law and Fact¹⁵ — 1. IN GENERAL. Where it is in dispute as to whether there was a breach of the contract in suit, it is a proper question for the jury.¹⁶ But it is error to submit to the jury the question as to whether there was a breach, where there is uncontradicted evidence of a breach and none of the witnesses are impeached.¹⁷ The question as to whether work has been done in accordance with the plans and specifications is for the jury.¹⁸ Where there is evidence of defects, the question whether there has been a substantial performance of the contract is for the jury to determine from the evidence and a Nonsuit, dismissal, or direction of verdict.

—If the plaintiff does not make out a prima facie case, a motion for a nonsuit or a dismissal of his complaint should be granted.

Kiely v. McMillen, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 637, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 335, 71 N. Y. St. 119. See DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT. And if he fails to make satisfactory proof of the contract sued on and the weight of evidence is clearly against him, the trial court should on motion direct a verdict for the defendant; or if, failing this by reason of the neglect of counsel to make the motion or otherwise, the case is allowed to go to the jury and the plaintiff recovers, the verdict should be set aside. Caldwell v. Willey, 16 Colo. 169, 26 Pac. 161. See TRIAL. And if this be not done the judgment may be reversed in the appellate court. Texas Trunk R. Co. v. Pannill, (Tex. App. 1891) 17 S. W. 1100. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 351. So if the plaintiff establishes his case by competent evidence and no sufficient defense is proved the court should direct a verdict for the plaintiff. Moss v. Witness Printing Co., 64 Ind. 125; Hathaway v. Sabin, 63 Vt. 527, 22 Atl. 633. See TRIAL. And if the plaintiff clearly proves his case and the jury find for the defendant or return a verdict for the plaintiff for a grossly insufficient amount, the trial court should promptly set the verdict aside. consideration of the nature and object of the work.¹⁹ Where the plaintiff sues on a special contract and a quantum meruit in separate counts, and the defendant admits the contract, it is error to submit the quantum meruit to the jury.²⁰ The reasonableness of a contract is a question for the jury where there is a dispute as to the facts; but where the facts and circumstances all appear in the testimony, and there is no conflict in it, the court may determine the issue.²¹ In an action for the price of chattels sold and delivered to the defendant, the question of acceptance of the chattels by the defendant is of fact for the jury under instructions from the court.²²

2. EXISTENCE OF CONTRACT. It is the duty of the court to determine and to instruct the jury whether or not a writing introduced in evidence is a contract which fixes the liability of the parties, for here the question involves the interpretation of the instrument, the determination of its validity as a matter of law, or both.²³ But where the existence and not the validity or construction of a contract is the point in issue and the evidence is conflicting, it is for the jury to determine whether the contract did in fact exist. It is not for the court to assume and instruct the jury, as a matter of law, that it did or did not exist;²⁴ for although it is the duty of the court to put a construction on the language of the contract when it has clearly been ascertained what the terms of it are, yet when many facts and conversations, at different times testified to by a number of witnesses, are in evidence to prove the contract, and it is a matter of controversy what the terms of it are, the question should be put to the jury as a matter for their determination, with proper instructions as to the law.²⁵ The question

Directing verdict.—Where a written instrument, clear in its terms, is introduced in evidence, and the court can see by inspection of the instrument itself that it gives no cause of action, a verdict should be directed for the defendant. *Dyer v. And the court should direct a verdict for the plaintiff if a binding contract is introduced in evidence, and the defendant offers no competent evidence in support of his defense. *Arnoux v. The existence and terms of a contract, which rests if it exists at all upon actions and oral communications of the parties, are for the jury to determine. Sines v. Superintendents of Poor, 55 Mich. 383, 21 N. W. 428; Blount v. Guthrie, 99 N. C. 93, 5 S. E. 890.

Where the question was whether there was an implied contract that a sister should be paid for board, care, and services furnished her brother, it was held one of fact to be determined by the prior or referee, and not by the court. Bliss v. Hoyt, 70 Vt. 534, 41 Atl. 1026.

25. Homans v. Lambard, 21 Me. 308; Gallagher v. Hirsh, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 467, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 609. Where the plaintiff claimed a bonus under a contract rescinding another contract, and the defendant claimed a credit for a sum paid under the prior contract, and nothing was said in the second whether or not certain letters or telegrams or both constitute a contract is one to be determined by the court, and it is error to submit such question to the jury.²⁶ But where letters introduced in evidence by the plaintiff in proof of the contract sued on do not constitute in themselves a completed contract, but merely negotiations with a view to a contract, and they are supplemented by oral testimony, it is proper to submit to the jury the question whether the contract alleged was in fact completed.²⁷

3. FRAUD AND DURESS. Where there is evidence that the defendant was induced to sign or enter into a contract by fraud and imposition, the question should be submitted to the jury.²⁸ But where the defendant introduces no evidence in support of such defense, a verdict is properly directed for the plaintiff.²⁹ On the other hand if the evidence shows conclusively that a representation was made as an inducement to enter into a contract, that it was false, and that it was relied on, the court should direct a verdict for the defendant.³⁰ Where the evidence as to duress is conflicting the question is for the jury.³¹

4. LEGALITY OF CONTRACT. Whether or not a contract, the terms of which have been ascertained, is void as in contravention of public policy is a question of law to be determined by the court.³² But if the validity of a contract depends on the determination of some question of fact, such as the intention of the parties, the matter then becomes a mixed question of law and fact, and should be submitted to the jury, under proper instructions from the court.³³ In such case, however, the only question for the jury is the truth of the alleged facts rendering the contract illegal. They should accept the law as they receive it from the court.³⁴

5. PERFORMANCE OR WAIVER OF CONDITIONS PRECEDENT. The question as to whether a condition precedent has been performed is purely one of fact to be determined by the jury under the evidence.³⁵ And the same has been held to contract as to the credit, it was held that the question was one of fact, and that a peremptory instruction to allow the credit claimed by the defendant was erroneous. Quigley v. Shedd, 104 Tenn. 560, 58 S. W. 266.

28. Thus where it appeared that the defendant could not read, and he testified that the plaintiff, in asking him to sign a written contract, told him that it correctly stated the agreement made by them, whereas the paper differed materially from the agreement, it was held error for the court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff based on such writing. *Bates v. be true of the question as to whether the performance of such condition has been waived.³⁶

6. RESPONSIBILITY FOR BREACH. If, in an action on a contract in which the defendant seeks to recoup damages resulting from the plaintiff's failure to comply with his obligations, the evidence is conflicting as to whether the damages resulted from the default of the plaintiff, of the defendant, or of both, it is for the jury to determine who was responsible for the breach.³⁷

M. Instructions to Jury³⁸ — 1. IN GENERAL. Before submitting the case to the jury, it is the duty of the court fully and clearly to state the law applicable thereto. But it is not enough for a trial judge to lay down general principles of law and leave the jury to apply them; he should go further and inform the jury what the law is as applicable to the facts in the case they are trying.³⁹ An instruction which is contradictory is certain to mislead or at least to confuse the jury, and is reversible error.⁴⁰ Instructions which are correct in law may properly be given to suit each party's theory of the case, if not misleading or actually contradictory.⁴¹ An instruction which purports to tell the jury under what conditions a recovery may be had must give all the conditions essential to a right of recovery.⁴² If a contract contains a proviso, a proposed instruction which ignores the proviso should be refused.⁴³

Illustration.—In an action on a contract, it appeared that there was a deficiency in the amount which the defendants had agreed to pay on demand as soon as a correct statement of the receipts and expenses of the business of the year, certified by the plaintiff's treasurer, should be delivered to them; that at the proper time a written statement, not certified by such treasurer, in the form of an account, charging the defendants with certain items and crediting them with other items, was presented to them, and payment was demanded; and that on receiving the statement the defendants made no objection to its form, and the only objection was to the amount charged for coal. It was held that the question of waiver by the defendants of the treasurer's certificate was properly left to the jury. Marlborough Gas Light Co. v. Neal, 166 Mass. 217, 44 N. E. 139.

Conduct of architect.—The question of whether the conduct of the architect was such as to excuse a party from obtaining a certificate is one dependent upon all the facts, and for the determination of the jury. Chicago Athletic Assoc. v. Eddy Electric Mfg. Co., 77 Ill. App. 204.

Waiver of architect's order.—Where a building contract provided that alterations should be made only in pursuance of a written order from the architect, but alterations were made in fact under the personal direction of the owner of the property, the question as to whether or not the requirement as to an architect's order had been waived was held properly submitted to the jury. Foster v. McKeown, 192 Ill. 339, 61 N. E. 514 [affirming 85 Ill. App. 449].

In an action on a contract for personal services, plaintiff alleged part performance and willingness to perform, claiming that the defendant refused to permit him to perform the services contracted for. The defendant alleged her readiness to perform, and that the plaintiff had violated the contract by refusing to work unless partially paid in advance. It was held to present a question of fact to the jury as to which party had refused to perform. Kochmann v. Baumeister, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 309, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 769.

If the plaintiff in one count seeks to recover upon a liability arising ex contractu, and in another count seeks to recover damages upon a liability imposed on the defendant by law, that is, upon a liability arising ex lege, the differing rules of law applicable to these claims should be clearly stated and explained to the jury. *Sisson v. Thus where a construction contract required the work to be done by a specified time if the weather permitted, and there was evidence that the work had been delayed by rain, an instruction that the defendant had the right to place other parties at work on that part of the road which the plaintiffs

2. RELEVANCY TO ISSUE. It is error for the court to instruct the jury upon any question which is irrelevant to the issue, if the instruction be of such a character as might mislead the jury and direct them to the consideration of an issue not raised by the pleadings and facts in evidence.⁴⁴ Thus where the existence of the alleged contract is the only point in issue, an instruction which directs the jury to determine from the evidence what the contract was is erroneous, for the double reason that there is no issue of that kind and that it is virtually allowing the jury to reform the writing.⁴⁵ Where the plaintiff alleges one contract and its breach, and the defendant denies these allegations and sets up another and wholly different contract, an instruction which authorizes a recovery for the breach of the latter contract is erroneous. The plaintiff must recover if at all upon the cause of action which he has alleged.⁴⁶

3. APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE. An instruction should not be given when there is no evidence before the jury to which it is applicable, inasmuch as it might mislead the jury and provoke a verdict without evidence to support it.⁴⁷ And the same is true where the proposed instruction is contrary to the whole trend of the evidence,⁴⁸ or where it is not based on the evidence, is argumentative, is calculated

Illustration.—Where, in an action on a contract, the petition states a cause of action for non-performance and omits the averments necessary to make it an action for rescission, it is error for the court to instruct the jury on two theories, one for damages for breach of contract, and the other for a rescission thereof and the recovery of the purchase-price, since the two remedies are inconsistent and repugnant and cannot be joined or blended. J. D. Alfree Mfg. Co. v. Grape, 59 Nebr. 777, 82 N. W. 11.

Harmless error.—Although an instruction given may have no foundation in the pleadings or in the evidence, it will be no ground of reversal, unless the appellate court can see that it misled the jury or was calculated to mislead them to the prejudice of the party complaining. Grier v. Puterbaugh, 108 Ill. 602.

Express and implied contract.—Upon this principle it is error to give a jury an instruction authorizing them to find for the plaintiff on an implied contract when he has declared on an express contract. International, etc., R. Co. v. Masterson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 644.

As to damages.—While a proposition of law relative to the measure of damages may be correct in the abstract, a refusal to charge it is not erroneous when the party requesting the charge has not given any evidence which will serve as a basis for the application of the rule. Smith v. Cowan, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 230, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 482, 73 N. Y. St. 638 [affirmed on opinion below in 157 N. Y. 714, 53 N. E. 1132].

When the evidence tends to show only a joint liability of parties sued jointly on a contract, it is error to instruct the jury that they may find a verdict against one or all. Sutherland v. Holliday, (Nebr. 1902) 90 N. W. 937.

In an action to recover on a contract to dig a well, an instruction that if the plaintiff failed to obtain the water contracted for and to bore said well to the required depth, yet if such failure was caused by the defendant's preventing the plaintiff from boring to the depth mentioned, the plaintiff could recover, was held erroneous as not justified by the evidence, where the evidence in the case showed that the digging of the well was not stopped by the defendant until after the plaintiff had abandoned the work. Schultz v. Tessman, 92 Tex. 488, 49 S. W. 1031 [reversing (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 207].

As to abandonment of contract.—An instruction that if the conduct of a contractor for the erection of a building was such as to evince an intention to abandon the contract then the owner would have the right to treat it as abandoned is erroneous, where to mislead the jury, and unduly invades the province of the jury.⁴⁹ So also the court should not give an instruction which withdraws from the consideration of the jury any evidence material to the issue made by the pleadings.⁵⁰ An instruction as to what would be the duty of a party upon a supposed contract, such as neither party claims to exist, could not fail to be confusing to the jury and should not be given.⁵¹

4. AS TO MAKING OF CONTRACT. Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether any contract was in fact made, it is proper for the court to tell the jury to look to all the probabilities, including the probability as to whether such a contract as the one sued on would have been made.⁵² No instruction is proper, however, which does not involve the necessity of the jury's finding a mutual agreement⁵³ or which prevents them from finding an agreement as warranted by the evidence.⁵⁴ Where fraud is set up in the pleadings and the evidence is conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury that the evidence is legally insufficient to establish fraud, and the contract is binding. If there is competent evidence tending to prove fraud its weight and sufficiency should be left to the jury.⁵⁵ In an action on an express contract which has been performed by the plaintiff, it is error to instruct the jury that they may consider whether the performance is beneficial to the defendant.⁵⁶ An instruction that if the writing in evidence, executed at the time of making the contract, was read over to the plaintiff, and he understood and accepted it, then the parties are bound by its terms as fixing their rights, is misleading, because the jury might infer therefrom that if the writing was not read over to the plaintiff, although understood by him, it would not have the binding force to which it would otherwise be entitled.⁵⁷ In an action to recover the price of articles manufactured for the defendant by the plaintiff, it is error to refuse an instruction, requested by the plaintiff, that a written order for the same which has been introduced in evidence is a fact tending to show the

there was evidence tending to show that the contractor had entered upon, and was engaged in, the performance of the contract at the time the owner took possession of the building and completed it. Kilgore v. Northwest Texas Baptist Educational Assoc., 90 Tex. 139, 37 S. W. 598 [reversing (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 473].

Estoppel of party requesting instruction.—A party who procures the court to give a certain instruction relative to the making of a contract cannot afterward be heard to complain of the act of the court in giving it. Sithen v. Murphy, (Ark. 1889) 12 S. W. 497. See TRIAL.

53. Walker v. Gilbert, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 80.

Acceptance of offer.—It is improper to instruct the jury that a written offer is not sufficient to establish a contract, unless it was accepted at the time of its execution and delivery, for it may have been accepted afterward. Waco Ice, etc., Co. v. Wiggins, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 58.

On a question as to whether a transaction was a bailment or a sale, a charge that the intention with which a thing is done does not always control the legal effect is not prejudicial, when followed by an explanation that the minds of the parties must meet. Crosby v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 141 N. Y. 589, 36 N. E. 332.

54. It is improper and misleading to instruct the jury that a memorandum, signed by the defendant and put in evidence by the plaintiff, is not of itself a contract; that to make it a binding contract there must have been an acceptance by the plaintiff or by someone duly authorized by him. The vice of the instruction lies in this: The paper is evidence of a contract, although not necessarily conclusive, but to tell the jury that it is no contract is to mislead them into believing that it is not even evidence of one. Rau v. Trumbull, 68 Ill. App. 490.

Bill of sale as security.—An instruction that it is competent to show that a bill of sale, although conveying an absolute title on its face, may have been given by way of security, and that it is competent to show this by parol testimony, is sufficient in the absence of a request for a further instruction that the burden of proof is on the party making such claim to overcome the contrary presumption arising from the face of the paper. Seligman v. Ten Eyek, 74 Mich. 525, 42 N. W. 134.

articles ordered to be made, and also to show the contract entered into by the parties.⁵⁸

5. AS TO CONSIDERATION. The court should instruct the jury as to the necessity for and sufficiency of the consideration.⁵⁹ If at the trial evidence is adduced tending to show that the contract in suit is founded on an illegal consideration and is therefore contrary to public policy, the court should put the question to the jury to say whether the consideration is tainted with illegality, and should instruct them that if they find it so the plaintiff cannot recover.⁶⁰ It is proper to instruct the jury that a written contract is presumed to state the true consideration, and that it devolves on the defendant to show that there was in fact no consideration.⁶¹

6. AS TO CAPACITY TO CONTRACT. Where the defense is mental incapacity to make a contract, it is proper to charge that it does not require a high degree of mental power to make a binding agreement, that one who has enough of mind and reason clearly and fully to understand the nature and consequences of his act in making a contract is to be considered competent to make a binding contract, but one who lacks that capacity is to be considered incompetent.⁶² And if fraud and imposition are also set up, it is proper to instruct the jury that if want of capacity was only partial they may nevertheless consider whether the defendant might not be more easily deceived than a person of strong mind.⁶³

7. AS TO DURESS. Where the defendant admits the execution of a written instrument, but seeks to avoid liability thereon, on the ground that it was executed under duress, the trial court should instruct the jury as to what constitutes duress.⁶⁴

8. AS TO PERFORMANCE — a. In General. Where the evidence is conflicting, the question as to whether a contract has been performed should be submitted to the jury by proper instructions.⁶⁵ The question of the performance of a contract is to be determined by the jury upon a consideration of all the evidence in the case, and an instruction limiting them to a consideration of the evidence of one party only should not be given.⁶⁶

Instructions that to impeach the contract sued on for want of mental capacity it must be shown that the defendant had such mental weakness, that he was unable to understand the terms and effect of the contract, and that although the defendant had insane delusions on some subjects, yet if they in no way related to the plaintiff or the subject-matter of the contract, and in making the contract the defendant was not influenced thereby, but was able to comprehend the effect of the contract, then he was mentally capable of making it are sufficient, although not explicitly stating that the defendant must have had sufficient mental capacity to protect his own interests in executing the contract. Sands v. Potter, 165 Ill. 397, 46 N. E. 282, 56 Am. St. Rep. 253.

64. McCormick v. Volsack, 4 S. D. 67, 55 N. W. 145, holding that an instruction that if the instrument was obtained by means of threats, coercion, or subjecting the defendant to fear, or obtained by force, threats of violence, or fear, the plaintiff could not recover, was defective and erroneous in not going further, and advising the jury as to the nature or character of the threats, coercion, or fear which would avoid apparent consent.

Pennsylvania.—Harris v. Sharpless, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 643.

Defective performance.—In case of defective performance of a contract, where it is in dispute as to which party is responsible for the defects, a proposed instruction that the plaintiff cannot recover if the work is worthless is properly refused. Birmingham Fire Brick Works v. Allen, 86 Ala. 185, 5 So. 454.

Excuse for non-performance.—On the other hand if there is nothing in the pleadings or proof tending to show that the defendant in any way interfered with the plaintiff's performance of the contract, it is error to submit that question to the jury. Livingston v. Anderson, 30 Fla. 117, 11 So. 270.

66. Conner v. Mt. Vernon Co., 25 Md. 55.

b. Substantial Performance. It is proper to instruct the jury that the plaintiff is entitled to recover if they find that he has substantially performed his contract.⁶⁷ And it has been held that such an instruction is not erroneous, although it fail to define what is meant by substantial compliance with the contract.⁶⁸ But an instruction which permits the jury to regard a substantial compliance with the provisions of a contract as equivalent to complete performance, and to award a recovery thereon for the full amount of the contract price, is erroneous. The jury should be told of the defendant's right to recoup his damages for defective performance.⁶⁹ What is substantial performance of an entire contract is a question of fact for the jury, and an instruction which removes the matter from their consideration is erroneous.⁷⁰

9. AS TO CONDITIONS PRECEDENT. If the plaintiff's right of recovery depends upon the performance of a condition, it is proper to charge the jury that if they find that the condition has not been performed, then their verdict should be for the defendant.⁷¹ Thus the complete performance of an entire contract is a condition precedent to a recovery thereon, and if there is evidence tending to show that the contract was but partially performed a charge predicated on that hypothesis should be given,⁷² and should not be refused on the ground that there is other evidence tending to show a waiver of full performance.⁷³ Where the obtaining of an architect's certificate is a condition precedent to the builder's right to pay-

St. 36; Johnson v. White, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 174. But it is error to charge in substance that if the contract has been substantially performed by the plaintiff, and the work was found at the moment of its completion to be in good working order, the plaintiff may recover, although immediate subsequent events showed that the result was not what was contemplated by the contract. Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian Pac. Nav. Co., 8 Wash. 370, 36 Pac. 260, 40 Am. St. Rep. 910, 24 L. R. A. 315.

When the contractor is sued by the owner for doing defective work, it is error to instruct the jury that if the defendant has substantially performed his contract according to the plans and specifications, the plaintiff cannot recover, even though there are trivial defects. The distinction is clear. When the contractor sues the owner, substantial performance is all he need show in order to recover on the contract, and the defendant may recoup his damages for defective performance; but when the owner sues the contractor, these very damages constitute his whole cause of action, and a party is entitled to compensation for slight injuries as well as great ones. Boteler v. Roy, 40 Mo. App. 234.

70. Pitcairn v. Philip Hiss Co., 113 Fed. 492, 51 C. C. A. 323.

In an action to recover for sinking a well on defendant's farm, which under the contract was to produce a flow of water satisfactory to the defendant, there was no error in instructing the jury to consider the condition of the parties and the surrounding circumstances, the size of the farm, its probable needs, and the ordinary uses for which it required a well, in order to determine what was in the minds of the parties and what they contemplated when the well should be put there. Richison v. Mead, 11 S. D. 639, 80 N. W. 131.

71. Van Vleet v. Hayes, 56 Ark. 128, 19 S. W. 427; Grandy v. Kittredge, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 562; A. J. Anderson Electric Co. v. Cleburne Water, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 929.

Modification of contract.—In an action for breach of a contract to deliver hay at a certain place at a certain time, where the defendant set up a subsequent modification of the contract, whereby it was agreed that the defendant should store the hay with other hay of his own and sell it together and account for the proceeds when sold, an instruction that if the jury found that at the time of the commencement of the action the defendant had not sold the hay then they should find for the defendant was held proper where there was evidence tending to support the defense, if the jury found the subsequent contract established. Greely v. Newcomb, 21 Wash. 357, 58 Pac. 216.

Compulsory payment as a condition precedent.—Where the defendant's liability depends on the plaintiff's being compelled to pay a sum of money to a certain party, it is not error to refuse plaintiff's request for an instruction to the effect that if the jury shall find that plaintiff did pay the money, then their verdict must be for plaintiff, since it permits a recovery if payment has been made voluntarily. P. Dougherty Co. v. Gring, 89 Md. 535, 43 Atl. 912.

ment, an instruction which ignores the matter of the certificate altogether is erroneous.⁷⁴ The court must instruct properly as to the necessity for such a certificate, the right to impeach a certificate, etc., according to the law and the evidence.⁷⁵

10. AS TO MEASURE OF DAMAGES. The measure of damages is a question of law, and if the court instructs the jury on the question it must do so properly and fully.⁷⁶ In an action on a contract which has been only partly performed, in a case where the plaintiff may be excused from making full performance, the jury should be instructed that the amount recoverable is the contract price less what it would cost the defendant to complete the work according to the contract.⁷⁷

75. Clapp v. Bullard, 23 Ill. App. 609; Bradner v. Roffsell, 57 N. J. L. 412, 31 Atl. 387; Chism v. Schipper, 51 N. J. L. 1, 16 Atl. 316, 14 Am. St. Rep. 668, 2 L. R. A. 544; Batchelor v. Kirkbride, 27 Fed. 899. And see IX, C, 5, g.

Conclusiveness of certificate.—An instruction that such certificate is conclusive on the owner in the absence of collusion with the builder is not erroneous, where the defendant charges such collusion, and no instruction based on the theory of independent fraud or gross negligence on the part of the architect is requested. Johnson v. White, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 174. But an instruction that certificates given to authorize partial payments during the progress of the work are conclusive against the owner so far as they cover the work done is erroneous where the contract expressly provides that they shall not be conclusive and that a final certificate must be obtained. In such case the contract must be taken as the law on the point as between the parties. Clapp v. Bullard, 23 Ill. App. 609.

Fraudulent withholding of certificate.—Where it is alleged that such certificate has been fraudulently withheld, it is proper to instruct the jury that if it was refused by the fraud of the arbiter, even without collusion with the owner, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. Chism v. Schipper, 51 N. J. L. 1, 16 Atl. 316, 14 Am. St. Rep. 668, 2 L. R. A. 544; Batchelor v. Kirkbride, 27 Fed. 899. An instruction that it would be prima facie evidence of fraud if the architect withheld his certificate without any substantial reason for so doing has been deemed open to objection, because the use of the word "substantial" tends to substitute the judgment of the jury for the decision of the architect. Bradner v. Roffsell, 57 N. J. L. 412, 31 Atl. 387.

76. Kick v. Doerste, 45 Mo. App. 134. See DAMAGES.

Contract not to reëngage in business.—In an action for breach of a contract, made on the sale of a business, not to reëngage in the business for a stipulated time, an instruction permitting a recovery of the difference between the price paid and the actual value of the property at the time purchased is erroneous, as it allows the jury to make a new contract for the parties by ascertaining the reasonable value of the property at the time of the purchase, which was not agreed on. Dose v. Tooze, 37 Oreg. 13, 60 Pac. 380.

Profits.—Where the plaintiff sought to recover damages other than profits which they would have made but for the defendant's acts in preventing completion of a contract, a charge requested by the defendant limiting plaintiff's recovery to profits only was properly refused. Wagar Lumber Co. v. Sullivan Logging Co., 120 Ala. 558, 24 So. 949.

In an action on a contract to erect an electric light plant, in which the defendant claims damages for failure to complete the same, an instruction that if the plaintiff was prevented from completing the contract by the defendant's failure or refusal to designate the places in which to put the remaining lights, then the jury could deduct the reasonable cost of putting up and wiring in such remaining lights; and any diminution in the price of the plant, if there was such diminution, is an instruction for a double recovery of damages and is erroneous. A. J. Anderson Electric Co. v. Cleburne Water, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 929.

Logging contract.—Where the plaintiffs had not fulfilled a logging contract declaring that ten cents per thousand feet should be retained until full completion as a reserve for faithful performance, a charge requiring payment of the reserve fund to the plaintiffs, although the jury should find that they had wholly abandoned the contract without justification, was held error. Wagar Lumber Co. v. Sullivan Logging Co., 120 Ala. 558, 24 So. 949.

Contract to furnish water to city.—In an action to recover damages sustained by a city, by failure of a contractor to furnish a stipulated number of gallons of water within a limited space of time, an instruction directing the jury, if they found for the plaintiff, to return a verdict for the sum of such payments as had been made to the contractor for supplying boilers, engine, pipeline, and machinery upon estimates as the work progressed, was erroneous where by the terms of the contract there had been recognized no such contingency as the return of such payments to the city in any event. Godfrey v. Beatrice, 51 Nebr. 272, 70 N. W. 914.

77. Veazie v. Hosmer, 11 Gray (Mass.) 396; Gleason v. Smith, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 484, 57 Am. Dec. 62; Johnson v. Bowman, 26 Nebr. 745, 42 N. W. 754. But a refusal to give such instruction is not reversible error, when no evidence of the defendant's damages has been introduced. Smith v. Cowan, 3 N. Y.

11. AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT — a. Of Written Contract — (i) IN GENERAL. The construction of all written instruments belongs to the court alone, whose duty it is to construe all such instruments as soon as the true meaning of the words in which they are couched and the surrounding circumstances if any have been ascertained as facts by the jury; and it is the duty of the jury to take the construction from the court, either absolutely, if there be no words to be construed as words of art or phrases used in commerce, and no surrounding circumstances to be ascertained, or conditionally, when those words or circumstances are necessarily referred to them.⁷⁸ Where a part only of a complete contract has been reduced to writing and parol evidence is introduced to prove the rest of it, the court may construe the writing and with proper instructions leave it to the jury to determine from the evidence what the additional terms of the contract are.⁷⁹ But where the whole contract is in writing, whether on one paper or many, and there is no ambiguity in its terms, its construction is a matter of law and should not be left to the jury.⁸⁰

(ii) AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT. Where the meaning of a contract is not obvious from an inspection of the instrument itself, but its construction depends upon extrinsic facts to be found by the jury, such as technical words of art, science, or trade, and the surrounding circumstances, the facts may be found by a special verdict, and the court may then interpret the writing in the light of such find-

Understanding of parties.—The construction of a written agreement is a question of law for the court, and therefore ordinarily it is incompetent to prove or to submit to the jury what either party to a written contract considered its meaning or its legal effect. Anderson v. Grand Forks First Nat. Bank, 6 N. D. 497, 72 N. W. 916.

ing.⁸¹ But according to the usual practice it is considered a proper case for a hypothetical charge in which the jury should be told what would be the true construction of the instrument upon the different states of fact which might be found by them, and they are then bound to take the particular construction applicable to the state of fact which they find.⁸² In some of the cases it appears to be considered that the latter practice is equivalent to the submission of the whole case to the jury as matter of fact; or as is said an admixture of parol with written evidence draws the whole to the jury.⁸³ But strictly speaking the interpretation of the instrument is not submitted to the jury. The court may

Whether instruction leaves construction to jury.—In an action on a contract which provided for payments in instalments as the work progressed, a charge that if by the terms of the contract defendant agreed to pay a certain sum and neglected to make such payments at the time plaintiff was entitled thereto, plaintiff was justified in abandoning the contract, was not objectionable as authorizing the jury to construe the contract. *Keeler v. Building and loan contract.—In an action on a written contract which defendant building and loan association claimed was a contract for an unlimited number of payments, but which plaintiff asserted was for a specified number of payments, a charge that it was for the jury to find whether defendant had induced plaintiff to believe that it was a contract for a limited number of payments, and that if they found that representations had been made which induced such belief defendant was estopped to assert that the contract was other than as represented and must be so construed, did not erroneously submit the construction of a written contract to the jury. *Williamson v. Where a written contract refers to plans, specifications, drawings, and a bill of items, and it appears upon inspection that the bill of items is contradictory of the specifications and drawings, parol testimony is admissible to determine which paper was intended by the parties to govern, and the question is one of fact for the jury, and not one of construction of written terms of the contract. Kendig v. Roberts, 187 Pa. St. 339, 40 Atl. 1022.

first inform the jury as to the law, or the jury may first inform the court as to the facts, as may be the more practicable course.⁸⁴ And it would seem that the submission of the case to the jury to find the facts, with proper instructions as to the various aspects in which they may present themselves, gives to the court the construction of the contract as completely as if the jury found the facts specially and the court afterward interpreted the contract in view of them as found.⁸⁵

b. Of Oral Contract. When there is no dispute as to the terms of an oral contract, its construction is for the court, for it is as much the duty of the court to interpret oral contracts as written ones.⁸⁶ But when the terms of the contract are controverted, or it is susceptible of more than one meaning, it should be submitted to the jury to ascertain its terms and meaning with a hypothetical instruction as to the law.⁸⁷

I. DEFINITION.

Contribution has been defined to be a payment made by each, or by any, of several having a common interest of liability of his share in the loss sufferred, or in the money necessarily paid by one of the parties in behalf of the others.¹

II. BETWEEN PERSONS LIABLE EX CONTRACTU.

A. Basis of Right and Obligation — 1. IN GENERAL. The right to contribution has its foundation in, and is controlled by, principles of equity and natural justice and does not arise from contract;² but, although the doctrine so originated, it is now almost universally enforced in courts of law on the theory of an implied contract of contribution existing between parties jointly liable ex contractu.³

2. COMMON LIABILITY — a. In General — (1) NECESSITY OF. This principle

Compare Re Bentinck, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 71. In this case a father, on the marriage of his son, entered, together with his son, into a joint and several covenant with the trustees of the marriage settlement to pay a certain sum of money six months after his death, and had specifically charged some of his own property with payment of the same. The son, at the date of the marriage, was possessed of a reversionary interest only which he brought into the settlement. The father having died insolvent, the security had to be realized and the court declined to infer, in the absence of express contract, an intention on the part of the father to reserve a right to his executors to sue his son for contribution. See also Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves.

of equity can apply only in cases where the situations of the parties are equal; for equality among persons whose situations are not equal is not equitable.⁴

(ii) WHAT CONSTITUTES. The situations of the parties are equal when the parties are under a common burden or liability,⁵ or where all are bound for the same debt, whether they are jointly or severally bound, whether by the same or different instruments,⁶ or whether they knew of each other's engagements or not.⁷

(iii) EFFECT OF DISCHARGE OF ONE COÖBLIGOR. As a general rule the discharge or release of the direct liability of one coöbligor to the obligee will not avail him as a discharge from his liability for contribution to the other coöbligors unless the discharge be of a character to release the others also,⁸ but this is not true of a discharge under the bankruptcy laws,⁹ and, by the weight of authority, one who has been compelled by suit to pay the debt cannot obtain contribution from his coöbligor as to whom the cause of action was barred at the date of the judgment.¹⁰

to return the proceeds each to the several makers, but fraudulently pledged all the notes as security for a debt of his own, and the pledgee, who was a bona fide holder for value without notice, collected sufficient of the notes to pay the debt, all those whose notes were so pledged stood on the same footing, and those whose notes were paid in whole or in part were held entitled to contribution from the others, regardless of the time when the several notes matured. *McBride v. b. Of Joint Debtors—(i) IN GENERAL. Every joint debtor who has been compelled to pay more than his share of the common debt has the right of contribution from each of his codebtors.¹¹

(ii) COÖBLIGORS ON NOTES AND BONDS. Where one of the makers of a promissory note¹² or bond¹³ pays it,¹⁴ he may have contribution from his coöbligors, and the fact that one obligor pays a certain sum in consideration of his full discharge does not bar him from his right of contribution from each of his coöbligors for his share of the excess so paid,¹⁵ but there is no equity of contribution where a payment was really in discharge of a valid claim of a co-promisor,¹⁶

Where an award directs two persons to pay each a certain sum of money to a builder and one is obliged to pay the whole amount on account of the refusal of the other to pay a share, the person so paying can compel contribution from the other. Allen v. Coy, 7 U. C. Q. B. 419.

E. 104, where it was contended that, where defendant paid his share of a joint note and the balance of the note was paid by a negotiable promissory note given by the other makers of the original note, one of the makers of the second note, who was obliged to pay the whole amount of it on account of the insolvency of his co-promisors, could not compel contribution from the defendant, but where the court held defendant liable to contribution on the implied contract which existed between the makers of the original note.

16. One who purchased certain lots, jointly with defendant, executing his notes with her in solido for the price, and who afterward paid the notes at maturity, cannot recover from the latter her proportion of the notes so paid, where the evidence shows that defendant had been seduced by plaintiff when she or where the consideration for which the co-promisor signs the note or the bond fails.¹⁷

(III) JUDGMENT DEBTORS—(A) For Damages. Where one of several co-defendants has been compelled to pay the amount of a judgment or decree founded on contract, he may compel contribution from the others,¹⁸ and the fact that judgment was taken against only one of several persons jointly liable does not affect the right of contribution.¹⁹

(B) For Costs. As the costs are incident to the debt, he may have contribution against the other judgment debtors for the payment of the costs of the judgment,²⁰ but this right is not extended to the expenses he incurs in defending the suit unless the parties between whom contribution is sought agreed to bear expenses jointly.²¹ Where judgment is recovered against one of several coobligors, a judgment debtor is not entitled to contribution from his coobligors for was his house servant, and that she was living in concubinage with him when he took up the notes at their maturity and paid her portion of the notes in reparation of the wrong he had done her. Labenelle v. Deconet, 2 La. Ann. 545.

17. Thus where a man bought land and persuaded his brother to execute a joint note with him, promising as a consideration to convey to the brother an undivided half interest in the land, and through various intermediate conveyances and mortgages the brother received no benefit from the deed given him, no contribution can be enforced where his brother and grantor had to pay a judgment on their joint note. *Hunt v. In Minnesota, under Gen. Stat. (1878), c. 66, § 330, one of several debtors, against whom a joint judgment is rendered, who pays more than his proportion, files notice of his payment, and claims contribution, is ipso facto subrogated to the right of the judgment creditor in the judgment, and he may issue execution thereon to enforce contribution on the other judgment debtors. Ankeny v. Mofett, 37 Minn. 109, 33 N. W. 320.

Satisfaction of the execution by a levy upon the lands of the debtor's grantee, to whom the debtor conveyed after the land was attached on mesne process, and before judgment, is not a satisfaction by the execution debtor, which entitles him to maintain an action of contribution against his co-defendants, for the satisfaction in such a case is from the grantee of the complainant and not from him. *Mussey v. 21. Hayes v. Morrison, 38 N. H. 90. *Compare Security Ins. Co. v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. costs, for in such a case it is not considered that he has discharged a common burden.²²

c. Of Land. Where land is charged with a burden, each part should bear no more than its due proportion of the charge, and where the owner of any part of such land is compelled to pay more than his proportion of the charge, equity will enforce contribution against the owners of the other parts.²³

d. Of Principals. Although the doctrine of contribution is most frequently invoked for adjusting the equities between cosureties it is equally applicable between those jointly bound on their own account.²⁴

3. PAYMENT — a. Necessity of — (1) IN GENERAL. The right to contribution is inchoate from the date of the creation of the relation between the parties,²⁵ but is not complete, so as to be enforceable, until there has been an actual payment in whole or in part of the common obligation or until something is done equivalent to a discharge thereof.²⁶

Dower.—The principle is applicable to dower as well as to other encumbrances. Eliaison v. Eliason, 3 Del. Ch. 260. See also U. S. Bank v. Delorac, Wright (Ohio) 285, where several creditors levied execution upon separate parcels of a debtor's real estate and after the debtor's death his widow's dower was set off in only one of these parcels. The proceeds of each lot, upon the sale of the land, was paid to each creditor who had levied upon it, and the creditor who had levied upon the tract out of which the dower had been set off was held entitled to contribution from the other creditors.

Inverse order of alienation.—The estates of different grantees, who have purchased different parcels of encumbered property at different times, are liable to contribute ratably, not in the inverse order of alienation, to the payment of a prior judgment which was held to be a lien upon their whole original tract.

An execution on a judgment obtained against plaintiff and defendant jointly furnishes no ground of action unless the execution is satisfied. Kirkpatrick v. Murphy, 3 N. J. L. 951.

The garnishing by the creditor of a debt due to one of two joint contractors against whom judgment has been rendered on the joint claim is, to all intents and purposes, a satisfaction of the creditor's judgment and gives the judgment debtor whose debt has been so garnished a right at once to sue his coobligor for contribution. Gillilan v. Nixon, 26 Ill. 50.

Where a negotiable note is accepted in payment of the debt, he who executes the note has the right of contribution against his coobligors. Owen v. McGehee, 61 Ala. 440; Greene v. Anderson, 102 Ky. 216, 43 S. W. 195; 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1187; Chandler v. Brainard, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 285.

Bill of exchange.—Where a vessel was captured and one of the parties interested agreed with the captors, in order to obtain must be compulsory in the sense that the party paying was under legal obligation to pay,²⁷ but according to the weight of authority it is not necessary to make the payment involuntary that suit should have been instituted against the person seeking contribution²⁸ or that a levy should have been made on his goods.²⁹ It is not necessary that the payment should have been made at the request of the coobligor,³⁰ but it may even be made against his protest,³¹ and a payment is not voluntary because it was made before the obligation matured.³² In the absence of agreement a premature payment does not, however, hasten the right, and contribution cannot be enforced until the debt falls due.³³

b. Amount of. It is not necessary that the entire debt should have been paid,³⁴ but the payment must have been for more than the share of the person seeking contribution.³⁵

B. Nature of Right and Obligation. The right of action to enforce contribution may be assigned.³⁶ Where an obligor has a right of contribution the release of the vessel and cargo, to pay a sum of money as a ransom and thereupon drew a bill of exchange which they accepted and then released the vessel, it was held that an action for contribution against the other parties concerned could not be maintained until plaintiff had paid the bill or otherwise canceled it. Douglas v. Moody, 9 Mass. 548.

There was a legal obligation to pay where a clause of a contract for the sale of land provided that unless a balance of the sum due on the contract was paid within a certain time the contract should be null and void, the clause being for the protection of the vendor and not a release of the vendees from their covenants. Finlay v. Stewart, 56 Pa. St. 183.

Claim barred by laches.—Where a judgment was recovered against one coobligor which was suffered to lie dormant sixteen years and was then revived and afterward paid, thirty-eight years after the note became payable, it was held that the lapse of time was a bar to a recovery by the holder of the note and that defendant in such an action having paid the judgment could not compel the coobligor to contribute. Williamson v. Collins, 17 Ohio 354; Williamson v. Rees, 15 Ohio 572. See also Doughty v. Bacot, 2 Desauss. (S. C.) 546, where the obligor on a bond did not seek contribution from his coobligors for twenty years, and contribution was not enforced, particularly as the circumstances in the case raised the presumption that the alleged coobligor was not a principal but merely a surety. Mere passiveness in asserting his rights, unless the lapse of time works a bar, will not, however, prevent a person who has discharged a common obligation from enforcing contribution from his coobligors. Owen v. McGehee, 61 Ala. 440.

Where a joint debt which has become barred by the statute of limitations is paid by one of the debtors, the general rule is that he has no right of contribution from his co-debtors. *Buck v. against several coöbligors, their obligation to contribute is not a joint, but a several, one.³⁷

C. Measure of Contribution — 1. DUE TO OBLIGOR WHO HAS PAID. One who has discharged a common liability can recover from his coöbligors only for the excess he has paid over his share,³⁸ and the payment can be enforced only in the same currency as that in which the debt existed.³⁹

Prudence in discharging liability.—A plaintiff who sues for contribution from a person jointly liable for the cost of rebuilding a dam is entitled to recover in proportion to the amount actually expended in a prudent and diligent manner in the work of rebuilding, even though a man experienced in such work might under favorable circumstances have built the dam at a less cost. Webb v. Laird, 62 Vt. 448, 20 Atl. 599, 22 Am. Dec. 121.

Interest on the amount which a stockholder was compelled to pay beyond his share of a corporate debt on which another stockholder was equally liable was held to be recoverable in an action for contribution. Allen v. Fairbanks, 45 Fed. 445.

Where one joint obligor releases one of the others and receives from him money and other property equal in value to the other's proportion of the common liability, it will be presumed that the money and property were received in consideration of assuming the other's liability and he will be charged with a two-thirds proportion in adjusting the equities between himself and the remaining obligor. In re Wheeler, 1 Md. Ch. 80.

39. Thus where one of two obligors is entitled to satisfy the judgment in depreciated bank-notes he cannot recover contribution for the debt in specie from his co-defendant, even though he himself pays it in specie. Walker v. Municipality No. 1, 5 La. Ann. 10. Conversely where an obligor on a bond satisfied the bond in currency which was depreciated at the time, it was held that he was entitled to enforce contribution in the same currency, although in the meantime it had appreciated. Klein v. Mather, 7 Ill. 317.

40. Iowa.—Hosmer v. Burke, 26 Iowa 353, where by a mistake in reckoning the amount due upon a certain note the judgment was one thousand dollars less than the real amount due and a defendant, one of the joint makers, paid that amount upon correction of the mistake and the other joint maker paid the amount of the judgment, it was held, in an action by the latter for contribution from the former, that defendant was entitled to have the thousand dollars paid by him taken into consideration in determining the amount which he was to contribute. Kentucky.—*Kincaid v. debtors⁴¹ and to those within the jurisdiction of the court called upon to enforce contribution.⁴²

D. Action to Enforce Contribution — 1. FORM OF ACTION. Although the doctrine of contribution originated in equity⁴³ and courts of equity still have jurisdiction,⁴⁴ especially where a multiplicity of suits can be prevented,⁴⁵ courts of law take jurisdiction of the action and enforce the right by assumpsit,⁴⁶

Pennsylvania.—Selinsgrove First Nat. Bank v. Eckbert, 3 Walk. 41; Kalbach's Estate, 2 Woodw. 415 (where the court refused to recognize the distinction made in England between the measure of contribution in a proceeding at law and one in equity and said that the equitable doctrine was adopted).

Vermont.—Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59, 46 Am. Dec. 177; Marsh v. Harrington, 18 Vt. 150.

See also infra, II, D, 4, b; and 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contribution," § 13.

Common-law and equity rules distinguished.—The rule stated in the text was the rule of the courts of equity (see Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59, 46 Am. Dec. 177; Deering v. Winchelsea, 2 B. & P. 270, 1 Cox Ch. 318, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 114; 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 496), but at common law contribution could be enforced only for the aliquot share of each reckoned as if all were solvent (Parker v. Ellis, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 224; Browne v. Lee, 6 B. & Cr. 689, 9 D. & R. 701, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 276, 13 E. C. L. 310; Deering v. Winchelsea, 2 B. & P. 270, 1 Cox Ch. 318, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 114; Cowell v. Edwards, 2 B. & P. 268; Kemp v. Finden, 12 M. & W. 421, 8 Jur. 65, 13 L. J. Exch. 137; Toussiant v. Martinant, 2 T. R. 100; 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 496).

Mere refusal of one defendant to pay the judgment against him is not sufficient to compel the others to contribute beyond their proportion. The remedies against a person so refusing to pay his proportion should be exhausted before the others are bound to contribute beyond their share. It is only the insolvency of such a person that will compel the others to contribute to the amount he should pay. Faires v. Cockerill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 669.

Use of judgment to enforce contribution.—A joint obligor who has paid the judgment of the creditors and taken an assignment himself may use such judgment to compel contribution from his coobligors so far as it clearly and certainly appears what his co-debtors ought to contribute. Wheeler's Estate, 1 Md. Ch. 80; Scribner v. Hickok, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 530. See, generally, SUBROGATION.

Notice.—Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 709, provides that where one of several persons liable on a judgment pays more than his proportion he may compel contribution from the others, and that in such case he is entitled to the benefit of the judgment to enforce contribution or repayment "if, within ten days after his payment, he file with the Clerk of the Court where the judgment was rendered, notice of his payment and claim to contribution or repayment. Upon a filing of such notice, the Clerk must make an entry thereof in the margin of the docket." Under this provision it has been held that, although the other defendants are entitled to notice of motion for execution upon the judgment, the provision of the code does not require that they should be served with notice within ten days; that the notice is required to be filed with the clerk merely to enable him to make the entry on the docket, for without such notice the clerk would have neither the authority nor the ability to make the proper docket entry. debt,⁴⁷ or covenant.⁴⁸ Assumpsit lies on the theory of an implied promise of each obligor to contribute to make up the common loss.

2. LIMITATIONS. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a claim for contribution until plaintiff has discharged the common debt⁴⁹ or has paid more than his share of it,⁵⁰ and, even though the debt was paid before then, will not begin to run before the day of the maturity of the debt.⁵¹ Where there is a question of a settlement of an account, the statute does not begin to run until the account is settled.⁵² Since the right of contribution is based upon an implied contract,⁵³ that part of the statute which relates to unwritten contracts is applicable to it.⁵⁴

3. DEFENSES. It is a good defense to an action for contribution that plaintiff, who has been intrusted with common funds or with the management of a suit, Compare Nailor v. Stanley, 19 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 450, 13 Am. Dec. 691, holding that, where land subject to a judgment lien is sold in separate successive parcels, the owners of the parcels out of which the judgment had been satisfied cannot maintain assumpsit against the others, and intimating that if any action may be maintained at common law it can only be by a proceeding in rem and a judgment de terris as in the case of a legacy charged on land.

47. Hickman v. Searce, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 47, where two persons sold land and jointly covenanted to warrant and defend the title, the vendee was evicted by title paramount and recovered a joint judgment against them, and it was held that the one who had paid the whole judgment could maintain an action of debt to recover from the coobligor his proportion of the money paid, since the sum sued for is certain by operation of law.

48. Thus where an award directs two parties to pay each a certain sum of money to a builder and one is obliged to pay the whole on account of the refusal of the other to pay his share, the one who has paid can compel contribution by suing the other in covenant for non-performance of their award. Allen v. Coy, 7 U. C. Q. B. 419.

St. 11, 49 Atl. 311, holding that where, under the lien creditor's act, two judgment creditors purchased land of the debtor at a sheriff's sale as equal tenants in common, paying therefor by receipts on their judgments, but one paid more than half the purchase-price, the statute began to run against the right of action for contribution upon the delivery of the sheriff's deed.

Where plaintiff seeks contribution for the discharge of a judgment, the statute runs from the time when the judgment was paid. Singleton v. Townsend, 45 Mo. 379; Singleton v. Moore, Rice Eq. (S. C.) 110 (where two judgments were recovered which the claimant and his ancestor paid at different times, and it was held that the statute did not begin to run until the payment of the latter judgment and that it made no difference if the person of whose estate contribution is claimed is dead and that his distributees have been in possession for more than twenty years).

51. Truss v. Miller, 116 Ala. 494, 22 So. 863. See also Mateer v. Cockrill, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 45 S. W. 751, where certain members of a committee, which guaranteed the payment of a certain bonus and the granting of a free right of way to be paid for by individual subscriptions of those to be benefited by the construction of a railroad, advanced certain sums voluntarily and assumed personal liability in excess of their respective subscriptions, and it was held that the statute did not begin to run against their right of contribution from their co-guarantors until the road was constructed, the company settled with, and an opportunity had to fully adjust the equities between the guarantors.

52. Thus where one of several co-proprietors is managing property and discharging the obligation for which all are bound, the statute does not begin to run as long as his administration is unsettled. De Lallande v. De Lallande, 10 La. Ann. 220. See also Pendleton v. Lomax, Wythe (Va.) 4.

has omitted to apply the funds⁵⁵ or failed to conduct the suit⁵⁶ according to the agreement, but it is no defense that defendant did not request plaintiff to pay the common debt or that plaintiff's motive in paying was to save himself from loss,⁵⁷ that plaintiff had not paid more on the joint undertaking than he had agreed to pay,⁵⁸ or that one of the obligors had been released.⁵⁹

4. PARTIES — a. Plaintiff. At common law the several persons who have discharged the common obligation cannot sue jointly one who has not paid his share. Each must sue separately for his portion,⁶⁰ unless they can sue on a joint promise as well as a joint consideration,⁶¹ and each plaintiff must sue in his own name.⁶² An objection to a misjoinder of parties plaintiff or causes of action taken after the judgment is too late where no prejudice has resulted from such misjoinder.⁶³

b. Defendant. In a suit for contribution in equity or under the code practice brought by the obligor who has discharged the debt all the other obligors should be made defendants,⁶⁴ except such as are insolvent,⁶⁵ or are without the jurisdiction,⁶⁶ as well as any person whose claim may affect the measure of contribution;⁶⁷ but at common law he was obliged to sue his coobligors for their proportions separately.⁶⁸ The obligee is not a necessary party.⁶⁹

5. PLEADING. An allegation that plaintiff has "purchased" a share in the property under a common burden is sufficient to show that he owned an interest in it.⁷⁰ In an action by a joint judgment debtor for contribution against his codebtor an affidavit of defense which shows bad faith on the part of plaintiff in defending the original suit is sufficient.⁷¹

6. EVIDENCE. A judgment against several is prima facie evidence, in an action for contribution, of their joint liability,⁷² is admissible to show the amount that plaintiff was compelled to pay,⁷³ and the regularity of the judgment cannot be impeached.⁷⁴ In an action by one obligor on a bond against his coobligor for contribution, parol evidence is admissible to show for what proportion of the liability each one is bound.⁷⁵ Possession of a bond⁷⁶ or note⁷⁷ after its maturity by one of the obligors is not prima facie evidence that he has paid it, except where a receipt of payment is indorsed upon it by the holder.⁷⁸ One of two co-grantors who appears jointly bound in a deed may show in a suit by the other for contribution that their warranty was not joint but that each warranted for a separate portion of the land.⁷⁹

7. JUDGMENT. A party suing for contribution against several coobligors is not entitled to a judgment in solido against all.⁸⁰

E. Loss of Right. The right to contribution may be destroyed by a subsequent contract of the parties, or by the fault of the party who causes the loss toward which he seeks contribution from his coobligor.⁸¹

III. BETWEEN PERSONS LIABLE EX DELICTO.

A. The Rule Against Contribution — 1. IN GENERAL. Where one of several wrong-doers has been compelled to pay the damages for the wrong committed, the general rule is that he cannot compel contribution from the others who participated in the commission of the wrong.⁸²

Where public contractors attempted to commit a fraud on the government, but being frustrated suffered loss, the court refused to entertain a bill by one of the contractors against another, for contribution for his loss. The court said "to state such a case is to decide it." The courts of justice

2. REASON OF RULE. The rule exists, not because contribution in such a case is inequitable,⁸³ but because the law will not raise an implied promise to contribute between wrong-doers,⁸⁴ for the implied promise rests upon equitable grounds,⁸⁵ and no equities arise from a wrong to aid a participant in a wrong.⁸⁶ The court will leave a person who asks its assistance in such a case in the position where it finds him.⁸⁷

3. TO WHAT CASES APPLICABLE — a. In General. The principle is confined to those cases where the illegal transaction is itself the basis of the claim and does not apply where the transaction is separable and collateral to the claim.⁸⁸ It does not apply to the counsel fees which one of the wrong-doers has paid in defending the joint action for trespass quare clausum fregit.⁸⁹

b. Exceptions — (1) ACTIVE WRONG-DOERS WITHOUT WRONGFUL INTENT — (A) In General. Even though a person has actually participated in the wrong, the rule that wrong-doers cannot have redress or contribution against each other is confined to cases where the person seeking redress must be presumed to have known that he was doing a wrongful act.⁹⁰ will not lend their aid to equalize burdens or profits in such a case and leave the parties in statu quo. Bartle v. Nutt, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 184, 188, 7 L. ed. 825.

Where by statute a right of action for damages caused by an intoxicated person is given to certain persons against any one who sells the liquor from which intoxication results, and against the owner of the building where the liquor is sold, the latter, when he has paid a joint judgment recovered against the saloon-keeper and himself, is not entitled to contribution from the saloon-keeper. Zigler v. Rommel, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 472, 30 Cinc. L. Bul. 115. See also Johnson v. Torpy, 35 Nebr. 604, 53 N. W. 575, 37 Am. St. Rep. 447, where a saloon-keeper was held not entitled to contribution from another saloon-keeper where both had sold liquor from which damage resulted.

84. Nichols v. Nowling, 82 Ind. 488 (and if a liability can be created by express promise the promise must rest upon some other consideration than the fact of the tort and the relation of the accused parties to each other in the transaction); Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174 (and it will not enforce an express promise therefor).

But when a judgment rendered against several wrong-doers is replevied, it is thereby satisfied, and the general rule that there is no contribution between wrong-doers does not apply, for the legal responsibilities of the parties as among themselves are essentially changed, the transaction then takes upon itself the character of a contract and the usual implied promise of contribution arises for the benefit of the one who paid it. Minnis v. Johnson, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 171.

Unless the wrong was joint, there could be no contribution in any event; thus where two railroads are sued by a passenger for injuries caused by a collision between the trains, neither company is entitled to judgment over against the other in any event, since plaintiff can obtain judgment against either defendant by showing that its negligence contributed to the accident, and if defendants were jointly negligent, there is no contribution between them, each being an independent agent. Missouri, etc., R. Hoey, 19 Wkly. (iii) TECHNICAL WRONG-DOERS. Another exception, as well settled as the rule itself, is, that one who is only technically a joint wrong-doer and has not actually joined in the wrong can, upon being compelled to pay damages for the wrong, exact indemnity from the actual tort-feasor,⁹⁶ but it must clearly appear that the party seeking redress did not contribute to the injury.⁹⁷

B. Basis of Right Where It Exists. The right of contribution between wrong-doers, so far as it is allowed, exists only where the parties have committed a joint wrong and are under a common liability;⁹⁸ but a discharge of the common liability by payment by one of the joint wrong-doers entitles him to contribution from others and a suit is not necessary to determine the liability of the amount thereof.⁹⁹

C. Action to Enforce Contribution — 1. FORM OF ACTION. Where the action

Where the officers of a corporation neglected to file certain certificates as required by statute and they all, by the provision of the statute, became liable personally to the creditor of the corporation for the debt of the corporation due him, it was held that the rule against contribution between tort-feasors did not apply as against the one who paid the debt. Nickerson v. Wheeler, 118 Mass. 295. Contra, Andrews v. Murray, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 354.

96. Connecticut.—Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455, where a suit for contribution was brought by plaintiff, who had been obliged to pay the whole of a judgment recovered against himself and others who were jointly interested in the running of a stage, for injuries caused to a traveler upon the road by the negligence of one of defendants who was driving, and the court held that the rule that there can be no contribution among wrong-doers did not apply in the absence of anything to show that plaintiff was actually connected with the wrong for which the judgment was rendered.

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contribution," § 8.

of his premises may have his remedy over against the person who was actively at fault in causing the condition of the premises. Pfau v. Williamson, 63 Ill. 16; Westfield Gas, etc. Co. v. Noblesville, etc., Gravel Road Co., 13 Ind. App. 481, 41 N. E. 955, 55 Am. St. Rep. 244; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co., 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324; Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Wheeler, 31 Minn. 121, 16 N. W. 698. So where the tenant on a sewage farm owned by a city failed to use all the sewage discharged from the city, and the sewage flowed beyond the farm and damaged plaintiff's land, and the facts pleaded in the suit by plaintiff showed that the injury was caused by the active interference of the tenants in violation of their duty to refrain from such interference with arrangements made by the city for the disposition of the sewage, it was held that the city could be indemnified against the tenants. San Antonio v. Smith, 94 Tex. 266, 59 S. W. 1109 [reversing (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 881].

97. Thus where a city has been compelled to pay damages for personal injuries, or on account of the negligent construction of a cross walk and the failure to have the street lamp in the vicinity burning, and it did not clearly appear upon the trial that the failure to light the lamp was the sole cause of the injury, the city was not entitled to contribution from the gas company whose duty it was to light the lamp. Denison v. Sanford, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 661, 21 S. W. 784. So a person who maintains in his sidewalk a hatchway unsafe for travelers cannot recover indemnity for the damages paid to a traveler who has been injured by the hatchway from a person who takes and leaves the cover off. *Churchill v. 2. DEFENSES. Where a joint judgment was recovered against a master and his servant for the negligence of the latter a servant cannot defend in an action for contribution by the master who paid the judgment, on the technical ground that a joint action could not be maintained against him and the master.¹⁰²

3. PLEADING. In an action for contribution for the payment of a judgment for a joint wrong the complaint must aver the facts on which the judgment rests.¹⁰³

4. EVIDENCE. Plaintiff must make out a state of facts that would hold defendant is liable in the first instance.¹⁰⁴ A recovery against a party in trover for a joint wrong prima facie, if not conclusively, places him in pari delicto, so that he can have no contribution unless he proves his innocence of the wrong.¹⁰⁵

100. Thus where one of two joint owners of a steamboat paid a judgment for a marine tort of the vessel, his action for contribution is properly brought at law instead of in equity, for the action had nothing to do with the partnership business of the boat. Power v. Rees, 189 Pa. St. 496, 42 Atl. 26.

101. Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455.

102. Assuming it to be true that a joint action could not be maintained this contention does not aid defendant in his suit if he submitted to a joint judgment in the original suit without raising the question. Since it clearly appeared that defendant's negligence caused the injury and that he was therefore legally responsible for the consequences, it was held that the form of the judgment against the parties could not vary the legal and equitable rights as between themselves. Bailey v. Bussing, 37 Conn. 349.

103. Bailey v. Bussing, 29 Conn. 1, holding that a mere statement of the existence of a judgment together with an allegation that defendant was bound to pay his share is only a statement of a legal inference which is a mere matter of law.

The complaint must show by proper averment the nature of the wrong for which the judgment was obtained, for only in this way can plaintiff avail himself of the exceptions to the general rule against contribution between joint wrong-doers. Hunt v. Lane, 9 Ind. 248.

These definitions are in pari materia, and as to both it has been held that they do not include the case of a mere debtor who is a stranger to the company, but contemplates only one who is liable to contribute in the character of a partner or member. The Dominion Act by its internal evidence shews that while a contributory is regarded as a debtor, it is not every debtor that is to be classed as a contributory"; *Barned's Banking Co. v. "Charge and control."—In Caron v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 164 Mass. 523, 527, 42 N. E. 112 [cited in Fairman v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (Mass. 1897) 47 N. E. 613, 617], it is said: "In Gibbs v. Great Western R. Co., 11 Q. B. D. 22, Field, J., expresses a doubt whether the words 'charge' and 'control' are intended to mean different things. But in the same case in the Court of Appeal they seem to have been regarded as meaning different things (Gibbs v. Great Western R. Co., 12 Q. B. D. 208, 48 J. P. 230, 53 L. J. Q. B. 543, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 7, 32 Wkly. Rep. 329), though the point was not decided; and in Roberts & Wallace, Employers' Liability, (3d ed.) 293, 294, that view is adopted. On the other hand, the implication of our own decisions, so far as they can be said to have given rise to one, is that they are to be regarded, not perhaps as synonymous, but as explanatory of each other, and as used together for the purpose of describing more fully one and the same thing; . . . and we think that this is the better construction. If 'control' is one thing and 'charge' is another, then, inasmuch as to some extent every brakeman upon a train would have 'control' of it, every employee injured by an accident resulting from the carelessness of a brakeman would have a right of action against the corporation which employed him. . . . We think, therefore, that by the words 'any person . . . who has the charge or control' is meant a person who, for the time being at least, has immediate authority to direct the movements and management of the train as a whole, and of the men engaged upon it." And see Thyng v. Fitchburg R. Co., 156 Mass. 13, 18, 30 N. E. 169, 32 Am. St. Rep. 425. Where the statute provided that the county commissioners should "have charge and control over the property owned by the county," it was said that the words "charge and control over the public roads and bridges" convey a power as broad as that "to prevent and remove nuisances," and necessarily imposes as high an obligation. Anne Arundel County v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 478, 83 Am. Dec. 577.

"Control" and "controller."—Where the will provided that the wife should "be the sole controller of all my real estate," etc., and "I make my wife sole controller just the same as if I was alive," the court said: "These latter words do not imply that the wife had control over the property of the testator during his life, but that, after his death, she should have the management of it, as he had, in his life time. Nor do the words, 'control' and 'controller' imply the power in her to make absolute disposition of the property and use and enjoy it as her own, but to have management and authority over it." Wolfe v. Loeb, 98 Ala. 426, 432, 13 So. 744.

"Control and direction" as used in a will see Rock River Paper Co. v. Fisk, 47 Mich. 211, 219, 10 N. W. 344.

"Control" and "management."—Where a will gave to a son, when he reached the age of majority, etc., power to control and manage certain property, it was said: "The 'control and management' of the property which the will gives him, manifestly does not include power of disposal. It gives him the use, possession, superintendence and direction of the property and the power of exercising a general restraint over the same until the happening of the event that will determine who takes the property in fee simple absolute." Randall v. Josselyn, 59 Vt. 557, 561, 10 Atl. 577. And see Blanton v. Mayes, 58 Tex. 422, 429 [quoted in Anderson v. Stockdale, 62 Tex. 54, 61], where a will gave the executors power to "manage" and

"control" the estate until the majority of the heirs, etc., and the court said: "The terms 'manage' and 'control,' standing alone and unaided by other considerations, could not be considered as conferring a power to sell." In Hanrahan v. State, 57 Ind. 527, 528, defendant was indicted under the act of March 8, 1873, in relation to keepers of billiard tables, for permitting minors to congregate there, etc. The court said: "We do not think that the words, 'having the control and management of said saloon in which were kept billiard tables,' as averred in the indictment, are equivalent to the words, 'having the care, management, or control of any billiard table,' as used in the statute."

"Control" by married woman.—The words of the statute, which provide that a married woman "shall have the sole and exclusive control" of her separate estate, are held to confer upon her power to sell her separate property without her husband joining, and without doing so in writing, as to her personal property. The court said: "To hold that she may make a simple contract of sale of her separate property seems a necessary incident to the 'control' of her property." Stiles v. Lord, (Ariz. 1886) 11 Pac. 314, 316.

"Control during natural life."—Where a will bequeathed real and personal property to a woman "to be at her control during her natural life," the court said: "The word, 'control,' cannot mean that she shall have an absolute fee simple, the power of sale, so as to pass a fee during her natural life." Porter v. Thomas, 23 Ga. 467, 472.

"Control" of insured property.—In Soli v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Minn. 24, 26, 27, 52 N. W. 979, the provision of the statute was that "such property shall be insured only when it is under the immediate control of the insured," etc. The court said: "The word 'control,' of simple and well-understood import, is inadequate to express the condition or fact of the property insured being at, or in the immediate vicinity of, the place of residence of the assured. It might be under his immediate control, although it were situated on a part of his farm most remote from his residence and his ordinary farm buildings."

The "control" of the examination of teachers conferred by Cal. Const. art. 9, § 7, upon the county superintendents and the county boards of education, "does not necessarily imply that the legislature may not prescribe the rules by which the qualifications of teachers shall be determined, nor what shall entitle one to a certificate." Mitchell v. Winnek, 117 Cal. 520, 523, 49 Pac. 579. And see Board of School Trustees v. Sherman, 91 Tex. 188, 193, 42 S. W. 546, where it is said: "The word 'control,' as used in the various laws relating to public free schools, would clearly include the fixing of the salary of the superintendent, for it is the word used in passing them under the dominion of the cities, and seems to be used in a very comprehensive sense."

The word is not derived from compte, or account, an account, but from contre, against, and rotulator, or rouleur, an enroller; making its true signification to be the keeper of the counter-roll, that is, a roll intended as a check upon another officer's roll or account. For instance, in Alabama, Connecticut, and Texas, he is styled 'controller of public account;' in Arkansas, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, and Ohio, he is styled 'auditor;' in Georgia, 'controller-general;' in Michigan, 'auditor-general;' in Iowa, Missouri, and Rhode Island, 'auditor of state,' or 'state auditor;' in Illinois, Kentucky, Mississippi, Oregon, and Virginia, 'auditor of public accounts;' in California, New York, and Nevada, 'controller.' This, then, being the received use in the states of this Union of these official names, it follows that the constitutional convention of Nevada thus used the term 'controller,' unless the instrument itself negatives such presumption."

Corresponds to "right of property."—In Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 187, 20 Am. Rep. 194, the court in construing the act of 1692, which required that "the fault be found by the verdict of twelve men" before any person's "right of property" should be determined "by any of the aforesaid courts," of which the quarter sessions was one, said: "'Right of property' there spoken of corresponds to 'deprived of his property' in art. 15 of the bill of rights, and 'controversies concerning property' in art. 20."

"Controversies between two or more states," "all controversies of a civil nature, where a state is a party," are broad, comprehensive terms, by no obvious meaning or necessary implication excluding those which relate to the title, boundary, jurisdiction, or sovereignty of a state. *Rhode Island v. To constitute a controversy in an action at law there must be an allegation on one side and a denial on the other, making an issue of fact or an issue of law. Gudger v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 21 Fed. 81, 83.

Applied to removal of causes.—Where a statute provided that "when, in any suit, . . . there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different states, and which can be fully determined as between them," etc., the court said: "It does not say an actual controversy, which would exclude merely nominal parties, nor the principal controversy, which would devolve upon the court the duty of determining between them which should be considered the main and which the subordinate controversy; but the language is 'a controversy,' which means any actual controversy in which both parties have an interest." Sheldon v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 1 Fed. 789, 794, 9 Biss. 307.

The term includes a contest in a probate court that may be removed from the state to the federal courts under the provisions of the act of congress of March 3, 1875. Craigie v. McArthur, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,341, 4 Dill. 474.

"A separate controversy" is not identical in signification with "a separable cause of action." Gudger v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 21 Fed. 81, 83 [citing Boyd v. Gill, 19 Fed. 145, 21 Blatchf. 543], construing the act of congress of March 3, 1875, relating to removal of causes.

"Controversy or disagreement."—N. Y. Laws (1862), p. 743, c. 412, authorized the justices of the supreme court to refer controversies arising between receivers and members of mutual insurance companies. The words "controversy or disagreement" as used in that act, include actions regularly commenced by summons and complaint, and in which an answer has been put in. Sands v. Harvey, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Compared with and distinguished from "case."—In Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 167, 177, 9 S. Ct. 566, 32 L. ed. 895, 897, the court in construing the words "cases and controversies," used in the judiciary article of the constitution defining the limits of the judicial power of the United States, said: "By those terms are intended the claims or contentions of litigants brought before the courts for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs." See also Home Ins. Co. v. North Western Packet Co., 32 Iowa 223, 238, 7 Am. Rep. 183, where the court in construing U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, said: "The use of the word 'controversies' in the latter part of the section, in the place of the term 'cases,' before used, cannot fail to attract observation. It is broader in its meaning than the term it supersedes, especially as that term is qualified, when first and last used, in the section under consideration. It is not improbable that it is used for this reason. This appears quite reasonable, when we consider that, in some controversies in which jurisdiction is conferred, 'cases' or actions could not have been prosecuted before the constitution in any forum, as controversies between States, and actions against a State by citizens of another State, or by a foreign state, citizens or subjects, of which jurisdiction has been taken away by an amendment. As no actions could then be prosecuted in such instances, it may have been thought that no power would have been conferred if the word 'cases' had been used. But, for whatever reason the word 'controversies' is used, it appears to us to be of more general and extensive import, so far as it relates to the occasion for the exercise of power, than the other word 'cases' used for the same purpose." "Controversy" differs from "case," which includes all suits, criminal as well as civil; whereas controversy is a civil and not a criminal proceeding. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 419, 431, 432, 1 L. ed. 440; Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Matthews v. Noble, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 674, 675, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 190]. And see 6 Cyc. 679, note 20.

Facts are "controverted," within the meaning of the statute, whenever they tend, either as evidentiary or subordinate facts or as the ultimate fact, to sustain the issue made by the pleading in the cause. La Salle County v. Milligan, 143 Ill. 321, 329, 32 N. E. 196, construing Ill. Rev. Stat. c. 110, § 89, par. 90. And see American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Chicago Nat. Bank, 131 Ill. 547, 550, 22 N. E. 523, where it is said: "The expressions, 'any controverted questions of fact,' and 'all matters of fact in controversy,' found in the statute, are broad enough to include, and have frequently been decided by this court to include, both evidentiary or subordinate facts and the principal or ultimate facts in issue."

Used in connection with "denial."—In Mattison v. Smith, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 288, 292, it is said: "The word 'controverted,' in connection with the word 'denial,' whether the denial be general or specific, requires that the answer should, by its words, so describe the allegations of the complaint controverted, that any person of intelligence, though not a lawyer, can identify them."

"Convenience of the public."—An opportunity to purchase a thousand-mile ticket for less than the standard rate is not a "convenience," within the rule that the legislature may make regulations of the business of carriers to provide for the safety, health, and convenience of the public. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 19 S. Ct. 565, 43 L. ed. 858.

May imply a reasonable time.—In Chichester v. Vass, 1 Munf. (Va.) 98, 117, 4 Am. Dec. 531, a father agreed that he would do equal justice to all his daughters, as fast as it was in his power with "convenience;" the true meaning of which was, that he would do it in a reasonable time, taking into consideration the circumstances of his estate.

May include outbuildings, a well, etc.—Where trustees under a turnpike act were authorized to make turnpikes, with such suitable outbuildings and "conveniences" as they thought necessary on the intended line of road, it was held that a well sunk for the convenience of a toll-house, was within the scope and authority of the trustees. Newman v. Browne, 53 Fed. 394, 396. In Olsen v. Hunter-Benn, 54 Fed.

530, 531, a provision in a charter-party requiring that the ship "should, with all convenient speed," proceed, was construed as equivalent to a stipulation that she should proceed without unnecessary delay. In Tarabochia v. Hickie, 1 Hurl. & N. 183, 185, 26 L. J. Exch. 26, a stipulation in a charter-party that the vessel should sail with all convenient speed, was considered, and it was said that this stipulation was not a condition precedent to the charterer's obligation to load. The court said: "There can be no doubt about a particular day; but what is a 'convenient speed' or a 'reasonable time' must always be a subject of contention."

Convenient court-house.—A statute which empowers the boards of supervisors to acquire so much ground as may be necessary and convenient for the building and the use of the court-house, and requires the erection and keeping in repair in each county of a "good and convenient court-house," will authorize the setting of shade trees in such grounds connected with the court-house. *Allgood v. "Convenient certainty" in pleading.—Where, in an action of ejectment, the statute requires that "the premises claimed shall be described in the declaration with convenient certainty" the court said: "The statute having prescribed everything required to be inserted in a declaration in ejectment, and having gone further and stated the manner in which the premises claimed are to be described, we are not justified, when determining what is convenient certainty, in applying the strict rules of the common law special pleading; but the certainty must be such as in the usual sense of the word is convenient." *Kemble v. Applied to homestead act.—In Jacobs v. Figard, 25 Pa. St. 45, 47, the court in construing a homestead act and the duty of a settler to return thereto with due diligence, said: "If he should be compelled to quit his residence on the land by any extraordinary or occasional occurrence, he must return as early as convenient, or it will be deemed an abandonment; Pfouts v. Steel, 2 Watts (Pa.) 409. He must not 'substitute claim for residence, and convenience for prosecution of the title;' McDonald v. Mulhollan, 5 Watts (Pa.) 173. By returning 'as early as convenient,' the law means as early as he reasonably can."

"Convenient" time of payment.—Where part payment of a note was made before it was legally demandable, in consideration that the time for the payment of the balance of the note should be extended until it should be convenient for the maker to pay it, the court said: "The effect of that agreement was, to postpone the time for the payment of the balance after the note should become due by its terms, for such a period as under all the circumstances of the case should be reasonable." Newsam v. Finch, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 175, 177. And see Howe v. Woodruff, 21 Wend. (N. ulation is, I think, that the act shall be done within a reasonable time. It cannot mean that the thing shall be done on the demand of the party, for then he might demand immediately, and before a proper time had elapsed. 'Convenient,' as here used, must mean such a time for doing the act, as under all the circumstances of the case should be reasonable." And see also Works v. Hershey, 35 Iowa 340, 343; Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa 457, 83 Am. Dec. 425.

Applied to a change of venue.—Construing the statute providing for change of venue in a suit by or against a corporation which concludes: "The court shall change the venue to the adjoining county most convenient for any kind of performance; suitable for a required purpose; easily used; serviceable.⁸⁸

both parties," the court said: "There is no doubt that using the words in the signification of physical ease, Lebanon, the county seat of Warren county, and the residence of the plaintiff, would be most convenient for her, and no less convenient for the defendant and its counsel, than the county seats of either Butler or Clermont counties; but I find that the meaning of the word is not confined to physical ease, and it would even seem that this is its secondary rather than its primary meaning. The ideas of 'suitable,' 'becoming,' 'appropriate,' 'fit or adapted to an end,' are equally prominent in the meaning of this word. The end sought to be obtained by the enactment of this statute, is to do exact justice between the parties and place the venue of trial where it will be absolutely fair as between them." Wilson v. Cincinnati St. R. Co., 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 640, 641.

Applied to sale by assignee.—Where a provision in a voluntary assignment directed that the assignee "shall, as soon as conveniently may be," sell, etc., the court said: "This, then, required the assignee to make sale in a fit, suitable, or proper manner. In doing so, it is required to be done at a suitable time, for a proper price, after giving a fit opportunity for competition, all adapted to the interest of the parties, the nature of the property, and to effectuate the objects of the trust. By applying the secondary meaning of the word, it might be held to apply to the mere convenience of the assignee, but the rules of construction require that the intention of the parties must be ascertained from the instrument itself." Finlay v. Dickerson, 29 Ill. 9, 20. And see McClung v. Bergfeld, 4 Minn. 148, where an assignment for the benefit of creditors, provided that the assignee "shall and do, as soon as convenient, sell and dispose of," the lands, goods, etc., and it was said: "... and in this sense" the word "convenient" "is used in this assignment; as directing the assignee to sell and dispose of the property in such time as it is fit, suitable, or proper for him to do, under all the circumstances, or as soon as it can be done without difficulty. In other words, as soon as he reasonably can do so."

"Convenient newspaper."—In Berkson v. Anderson, 115 Iowa 674, 677, 87 N. W. 402, a statute provided that a notice of incorporation must be published in some newspaper as convenient as practicable to the principal place of business of the corporation. The court said: "The requirement that the notice be published in some newspaper as 'convenient as practicable to the principal place of business' of the corporation means that it shall be published in the nearest or 'most handy' paper suitable therefor."

"Convenient place."—A place where the works of one person are carried on which occasion an actionable injury to the property of another, is not within the meaning of the law a "convenient" place. St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 11 H. L. Cas. 642 [quoted in Hastings v. Summerfeldt, 30 Ont. 577, 581]. And see Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 73 Md. 268, 278, 20 Atl. 900, 25 Am. St. Rep. 595, 9 L. R. A. 737 [quoting Tipping v. St. Helen's Smelting Co., 4 B. & S. 608, 116 E. C. L. 608], where "proper and convenient" and "suitable and convenient" are considered and compared.

88. Standard Dict. [quoted in Wilson v. Cincinnati St. R. Co., 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 640, 641].

"Convenient" in respect to bridge or ferry.—Under authority given by charter to a railroad company to cross a river by bridge or ferry as may be most convenient, the convenience of both the navigation of the river and the railroad interest is to be regarded. McMahon v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 49.

"Necessary or convenient" to railroad construction.—Where a statute authorized a corporation to purchase, receive, and hold such real estate as may be necessary or convenient to locate and maintain a railroad, the court said: "Such lands, therefore, as were 'necessary or convenient' for the location of the railroad and all its appurtenances they had the right by their charter to purchase or take in order to locate, construct, maintain, complete and operate a railroad between the points designated." Boston, etc., Air Line R. Co. v. Coffin, 50 Conn. 150, 154.

89. Hastings v. Summerfeldt, 30 Ont. 577, 580 [quoting Mark xiv, 11, where it is said: "And he sought how he might conveniently betray him"]. And see Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. Jr. 387, 391, construing "conveniently" as used in a will.

Applied to electoral ballot.—Where a statute provided that when a person "has inadvertently dealt with his ballot in such a manner that it cannot conveniently be used as a ballot paper," etc., the same may be canceled, the court said: "'Conveniently' in the section means 'conveniently for the voter and for his wish, purpose, and intention in voting.'" Hastings v. Summerfeldt, 30 Ont. 577, 580.

Applied to railroad construction.—Where a charter authorized a railroad company "as soon as it conveniently can, to locate and construct a railroad," and "to make, construct, and erect . . . appendages necessary for the convenience of said company for the use of said railroad," the court said: "This grant of power unquestionably carries with it the right to construct turnouts, sidings, . . . and appendages usual in the convenient operation of a railroad. . . . Switches, sidings, turnouts, and buildings for fuel, . . . are essential to the operation of the road. . . . The expression 'as soon as they can conveniently locate and construct' is not a limitation upon the power to compel the company to exercise by the exercise of reasonable diligence — so used with respect to the performance of services enjoined upon an officer by law.⁹⁰

CONVENIENT USE. The fit, appropriate, advantageous use.⁹¹

CONVENIRE. In the civil and old English law, to sue; to prosecute; to covenant.⁹²

CONVENIT. In civil and old English law, it is agreed; it was agreed.⁹³

CONVENT or COVENT. The fraternity of a religious house, as an abbey or priory.⁹⁴

CONVENTIO or CONVENCIO. In canon law, the act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.⁹⁵ In the civil law, a COMPACT, q. v., AGREEMENT, q. v., or CONVENTION, q. v.; an agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. In contracts, an AGREEMENT, q. v.; a covenant.⁹⁶

CONVENTIO DUPLICATA. An agreement executed in duplicate, or in two parts.⁹⁷

CONVENTION. A somewhat general term, inclusive of agreements, compacts, and mutual engagements of various kinds.⁹⁸ In Roman law, an agreement its whole authority in the very beginning, when the demands of business are few." Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Pa. St. 103.

"Conveniently found."—Where a statute provided for the appointment of a special constable "whenever no qualified constable can conveniently be found in the township," it was said that these words "must be construed to have a restricted significance" and "the convenience must be a legal one." Cunningham v. Bostwick, 7 Colo. App. 169, 43 Pac. 151, 153. The person having a warrant is directed by a statute "to call upon the persons so assessed, or their agents, if they can be conveniently found, and demand payment of the amount assessed to each," etc. Construing this provision, the court said: "The word 'conveniently' in the section requiring the contractor to call on the person assessed, if he can conveniently be found, and demand payment, is very unusual in such a connection, though the proper interpretation may not be doubtful. It certainly does not mean that he should call on the owner of the lot if it suits his convenience. It may, in one sense, be inconvenient for him to leave his residence, or to pass along a single block, or to enter the lot owner's place of business to demand payment; but that interpretation would make the requirement a useless and absurd one." Guerin v. Reese, 33 Cal. 292, 297.

91. Vermilya v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 606, 609, 24 N. W. 234, 55 Am. Rep. 279, construing Iowa Code, § 1241, which provides that a railway corporation "may take and hold . . . so much real estate as may be necessary for the location, construction, and convenient use of its railway," etc. The court said: "The adjective 'convenient' does not limit the name 'use' so as to make it apply to the actual running of trains upon the tracks. That is done by virtue of the meaning of the word itself. The use of a thing is not the use of an appurtenance thereto. The use of a thing may be convenient, and the use of its appurtenances may be convenient."

96. Black L. Dict. The term included the two leading divisions of contracts (contractus) and pacts (pacta). Burrill L. Dict. [citing Heineccii El. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 784].

Conventio is a general term (nomen generalissimum), which comprehends all sorts, treaties, pacts, agreements. The consent of two or more persons to form with each other an engagement or to dissolve or change one which they had previously made. Adams Gloss.

Conventio was transferred from the civil law, and includes, in English law, a covenant, that is, the agreement or consent of two or more by deed in writing, sealed and delivered, whereby either or one of the parties promises to the other that something is or shall be done. A species of express contract contained in a deed, to do a direct act or to omit one. Adams Gloss [citing 3 Bl. Comm. 355].

97. Burrill L. Dict.

There are three species of conventions or agreements; for they arise either out of a public or out of a private cause; out of a private cause [that is peculiar to one's self], or from usages prescribed by law, or from the law of nations. A public convention or agreement is that which arises for peace, whenever the leaders of war make some bargain or stipulation between themselves. Adams Gloss.

The term is chiefly used, however, of those entered into between sovereign powers; as the postal conventions between the United States and foreign nations. Abbott L. Dict.

"Treaty or convention."—Where a statute provided that no purchase, grant, lease, between parties; a pact.⁹⁹ In legislation, an assembly of delegates or representatives chosen by the people for special and extraordinary legislative purposes, such as the framing or revision of a state constitution; also an assembly of delegates chosen by a political party, or by the party organization in a larger or smaller territory, to nominate candidates for an approaching election.¹ In English law, an extraordinary assembly of the Houses of Lords and Commons, without the assent or summons of the sovereign;² a parliament assembled, but in which no act is passed, or bill signed;³ also the name of an old writ that lay for a breach of a covenant.⁴ (Convention: To Frame, Amend, or Revise Constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. To Nominate Candidates For Office, see ELECTIONS.)

CONVENTIONAL. That which is produced by, or depends upon the agreement or mutual arrangement of parties.⁵ (Conventional: Community, see HUSBAND AND WIFE. Estate, see ESTATES. Mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES; MORTGAGES. Subrogation, see SUBROGATION.)

CONVENTIONAL, OR CUSTOMARY INTEREST. As established by the Spanish law, that rate of interest which is the rate general, and usual by custom, at a given time, in a given place; and which may be greater or less than legal interest.⁶ (See, generally, INTEREST; USURY.)

CONVENTION OF DELEGATES. A representation of some political party.⁷

etc., of Indian lands should be valid "unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the constitution," the court said: "'Treaty or convention' are the significant words in the sentence. They generally mean compacts between states and organized communities, or their representatives. This is the ordinary signification of those words,—the first meaning which is suggested by their use. This is not doubted as to the word 'treaty,' and is scarcely admissible of doubt as to the word 'convention,' when used, as here, in connection with the word 'treaty,' and that the two words are here used in that sense is made more obvious by the words which follow, 'entered into pursuant to the constitution.'" U. S. v. Hunter, 21 Fed. 615, 616, construing U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2116.

Conventions with foreign countries as to the extradition of fugitive offenders see EXTRADITION.

Executed treaties.—When contracts between nations are performed by a single act, and their execution is at an end at once, they are not called treaties, but agreements, conventions, or pactions. 1 Bouvier Inst. 100.

A convention was a mutual engagement between two persons, possessing all the subjective requisites of a contract, but which did not give rise to an action, nor receive the sanction of the law, as bearing an "obligation," until the objective requisite of a solemn ceremonial (such as stipulatio) was supplied. In other words, convention was the informal agreement of the parties, which formed the basis of a contract, and which became a contract when the external formalities were superimposed. Black L. Dict. [citing Maine Anc. L. 313].

"The division of conventions into contracts and pacts was important in the Roman law. The former were such conventions as already, by the older civil law, founded an obligation and action; all the other conventions were termed 'pacts.' These generally did not produce an actionable obligation. Actionability was subsequently given to several pacts, whereby they received the same power and efficacy that contracts received." Mackeldey Rom. L. § 395 [quoted in Black L. Dict.].

Weir*, 5 Wash. 82, 85, 31 Pac. 417 [quoted in State v. Hogan, 24 Mont. 383, 62 Pac. 583, 586], where it is said: "The plain intent of said section, when examined in the light of all the other sections upon the subject, makes it perfectly clear that the primary meeting or convention must be by or on behalf of the entire body of voters of the respective party who are to be allowed to vote at the election of the officers therein nominated."

Canada.—Belcher v. Cook, 4 U. C. Q. B. 401, 412.

If a debtor can make a better bargain, or one more suited to his interest, by making his election in the contract, what is there to forbid him? He does no violence to the law, but he only makes the choice which the law gives him. It is, therefore, not in derogation of law, but simply the exercise of a privilege, and the maxim of the law itself is that conventio vincit legem. Shollenberger v. Brinton, 52 Pa. St. 10, 96.

This maxim does not apply, to prevent the application of the general rule of law. Broom Leg. Max. But see Loeb v. Hellman, 83 N. Y. 601, 603, where it is said: "Though the law thus declares the rule, the contract of the parties may vary it."

Waiver of a benefit.—"Nothing is more reasonable in itself, or better fortified by authority, than that any person may by contract waive a benefit to which he would otherwise be entitled. 'Conventio vincit legem,' is a maxim of great antiquity and general application. On grounds of public policy, this, in common with every other natural right, may be taken away by the legislature, unless the power to do so is forbidden by the Constitution." Shoenberger v. Watts, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 51, 59, 19 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 244, 309, dissenting opinion.

Between husband and wife.—Where a statute provided that a party to a libel for divorce cannot testify to private conversations between the parties while living together as husband and wife, the court said that the word "conversation" in the statute does not include all language between husband and wife. Fuller v. Fuller, (Mass. 1900) 58 N. E. 588, 589 [citing French v. French, 14 Gray (Mass.) 186, 188].

Restricted to spoken words.—Where a statute excluded, in an action, evidence therein of or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane party or person, relative to any matter at issue between the parties, the court said: "The language of the act, 'any conversation with, or admission of,' refers, strictly, only to spoken words." Chadwick v. Cornish, 26 Minn. 28, 31, 1 N. W. 55, construing Minn. Laws (1877), c. 40.

16. In re Fenton, 97 Iowa 192, 200, 66 N. W. 99, where it is said: "And that is evidently the import of the word in the question."

veyed by its use, is an oral discourse, or talk, in which two or more participated, while the word 'admission' is applicable to a statement or declaration made by one person alone. The two words together seem to embrace every form of oral statement contemplated by this exception, while either, alone, might not be broad enough to do so." Jackson v. Ely, 57 Ohio St. 450, 462, 49 N. E. 792.

17. Bradshaw v. People, 153 Ill. 156, 160, 38 N. E. 652, construing a statute relating to the abduction of a female of "chaste life and conversation," and holding that "chaste life and conversation" mean the same as a "chaste life and previous character."

I. DEFINITION.

In equity conversion is the exchange of property from real to personal or from personal to real, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, such as to give effect to directions in a will or settlement or to stipulations in a contract, although no such change has actually taken place.¹

II. NATURE AND APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE IN GENERAL.

A. Basis of Doctrine. The doctrine of conversion is based on the principle that equity regards things directed or agreed to be done as having been actually performed, where nothing has intervened which ought to prevent a performance.²

B. Application of Doctrine—1. IN GENERAL. Hence money directed to be employed in the purchase of land and land directed to be sold and converted into money are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted, and this in whatever manner the direction is given, whether by will, contract, marriage settlement, or otherwise.³

purposes, real estate is considered as personal, and personal estate as real, and transmissible and descendible as such." Haward v. Peavey, 128 Ill. 430, 435, 21 N. E. 503, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120; Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 1159 [quoted with approval in Allen v. Watts, 98 Ala. 384, 11 So. 646].

"The transformation of one species of property into another, as money into land or land into money; or, more particularly, a fiction of law, by which equity assumes that such a transformation has taken place (contrary to the fact) when it is rendered necessary by the equities of the case,—as to carry into effect the directions of a will or settlement,—and by which the property so dealt with becomes invested with the properties and attributes of that into which it is supposed to have been converted." Black L. Dict.

"An equitable conversion arises where owing to the binding directions of a will it becomes proper and legal for a court to treat real estate as having been converted into personal property although there has been no actual exchange." In re McKay, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 78, 80, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 845 [overruling 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 590, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 1069].

Ashburner*, 1 Bro. Ch. 497, 499, 28 Eng. Reprint 1259, observed "that nothing was better established than this principle, that money directed to be employed in the purchase of land, and land directed to be sold and turned into money, are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted; and this in whatever manner the direction is given: whether by will, by way of contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise, and whether the money is actually deposited or only covenanted to be paid, whether the land is actually conveyed or only agreed to be conveyed. The owner of the fund or the contracting parties may make land money, or money land. . . . The cases establish this rule universally."

"No rule is better settled, than that money directed to be employed in the purchase of land and land directed to be sold and converted into money, are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted, and this in whatever manner the direction is given, whether by

2. APPLICABLE ONLY IN EQUITY. The doctrine of conversion is an equitable doctrine only and has no application in law.⁴

3. MODE OF DIRECTION—a. Must Be by Legal Instrument. A direction, however, to have the effect of an equitable conversion must be given in a legal way, as by will, deed, or judgment of a court, and the mere naked intention of a party verbally expressed is not sufficient, unless in the case of a nuncupative will.⁵

b. Instrument Must Express Unequivocal Intention. And the direction, where given by deed or will, must be positive, and may be implied as well as express; but when implied an equitable conversion is justified only when the design and purpose of the maker of the instrument is unequivocal, and the implication so strong as to leave no substantial doubt.⁶

III. BY DEED OR OTHER INSTRUMENT INTER VIVOS.

A. In General. The doctrine of equitable conversion is applicable to a disposition of property made by deed or other instrument inter vivos.⁷

B. Contract to Convey Land—1. GENERAL RULE. Where the owner of real estate enters into a contract for the sale of such real estate, the nature of his estate is changed, the realty being converted into personalty.⁸

will, contract, marriage settlement, or otherwise." Collins v. Champ, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 118, 122, 61 Am. Dec. 179; Loughborough v. Loughborough, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 549.

In distributing real and personal estate respectively, the law does not look to the funds from which it was obtained, but to its character at the time when the right to distribution accrues. If at any time a sum of money stands in the place of land, by an actual disposition to that effect not yet executed, he who would be entitled to the land shall have the money; and so conversely, where land is directed to be sold and converted into money by a disposition not executed. *Emerson v. Rep. 553, Sharswood, J., said: "Conversion is altogether a doctrine of equity. In law it has no being. It is admitted only for the accomplishment of equitable results. It may be termed an equitable fiction, and the legal maxim in fitione juris semper subsistit æquitas has redoubled force in application to it. It follows of necessity, that it is limited to its end. . . . When the purpose of conversion is attained, conversion ends." See also Wentz's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 541, 17 Atl. 875.

2. CONTRACT MUST BE ENFORCEABLE. In order, however, to work such a conversion, the contract must be valid and binding, free from all inequitable imperfections, and such as a court of equity will specifically enforce against an unwilling purchaser.⁹

3. WHERE CONTRACT IS RESCINDED. In some jurisdictions it is held that this conversion takes place notwithstanding that it may afterward be defeated by the non-payment of the purchase-money.¹⁰ While in other jurisdictions it is held that there is an equitable conversion prior to the default, subject to being reconverted upon the default happening.¹¹

4. SUBJECT TO CONTINGENCY. Even where the conversion is subject to the happening of a contingency, the property will be taken to be as of the nature it was intended to be upon the happening of the contingency.¹²

Agreement to purchase partnership real estate.—An agreement between two parties in the articles that at the end of three months after the death of either a valuation of all of their firm assets, including real estate, should be made according to the amount of capital invested, and that the survivor should have one year thereafter to take and pay the value of such share to the legal representative of decedent, constitutes an equitable conversion of the realty. Maddock v. Astbury, 32 N. J. Eq. 181.

Condition precedent.—Provisions in a contract for the sale of real estate making performance on the part of the vendee of his contract to pay a portion of the purchase-money and to secure the balance by mortgage on the premises a condition precedent to a conveyance by the vendor do not take the case out of the general rule. Williams v. Haddock, 145 N. Y. 144, 39 N. E. 825.

Upon the decease of the vendor, his interest in the contract is personal property and goes to his personal representatives. It will pass by assignment, with or without seal, like a bond and mortgage, and it may be sold as personal property by his executor or administrator. Moore v. Burrows, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 173. Where an administrator, under a decree of court, conveys property contracted to be sold by his intestate, the price of the land which is received by the administrator is personality of the decedent. In re Drenkle, 3 Pa. St. 377.

An oral agreement to sell land, coupled with the receipt of part of the purchase-money, and the occupancy of the land by the vendee, is not an actual conversion of the land, as the contract of sale could not be enforced. Mills v. Harris, 104 N. C. 626, 10 S. E. 704.

10. Leiper's Appeal, 35 Pa. St. 420, 78 Am. Dec. 347; Longwell v. Bentley, 23 Pa. St. 99; Rose v. Jessup, 19 Pa. St. 280; Maffet's Estate, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 184.

Extent of this rule.—This rule has been applied even where the court has refused to compel the vendee to carry out the contract because of laches on the part of the heir whereby its execution had become inequitable (Keep v. Miller, 42 N. J. Eq. 100, 6 Atl. 495); and also where the contract was valid at the date of the death of the vendor, but the vendee lost his right to a specific performance by subsequent laches (Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 6).

12. Longwell v. Bentley, 23 Pa. St. 99; Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox Ch. 167, 1 Rev. Rep. 10, 29 Eng. Reprint 1111.

Where it was stipulated in an antenuptial contract that, in case of the death of the wife without leaving children, her husband surviving, the real estate of which she should die possessed should be immediately sold and the proceeds remitted to her husband, it was held that the provision operated as a grant to the husband, contingent upon the death of the wife, to which effect was to be given upon the principle of equitable conversion. De Barante v. Gott, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 492.

5. SUBJECT TO ELECTION OF VENDEE. Where real estate is contracted to be sold, equity considers it as converted into personalty, even though the election to purchase rests merely with the purchaser.¹³

6. EFFECT ON ANTECEDENT WILL. A contract by a testator, made after his will, for the sale of lands thereby devised, is a revocation of such devise in equity, and thereby converts such realty into personalty.¹⁴

7. EFFECT ON SUBSEQUENT WILL. Where, however, a testator devises land, legal title to which is in him but which he has sold, giving to the purchaser a bond for a deed therefor, the purchase-money when paid by the purchaser will belong to the devisee.¹⁵

C. Lease With Option to Purchase. Upon exercising the option, the equitable doctrine of constructive conversion of real into personal property is applicable to leases in which an option to purchase the demised premises is granted to the lessee.¹⁶

D. Deed of Trust — 1. IN GENERAL. Whenever the language of a deed of trust expresses the intention of its author, that real estate shall be sold and converted into money, the estate thus conveyed and impressed with the character of personalty will, as to the claimant after the death of the maker of the deed, retain that character and be regarded as personal estate.¹⁷

2. DIRECTION MUST BE MANDATORY. In order, however, to effect a conversion by a deed of trust with power to sell, the direction to the trustee must be mandatory and not discretionary.¹⁸

3. WHERE CONVERSION DEPENDS ON CONTINGENCY. Where land is not converted out and out, and at all events, by a deed of trust, into personal estate, but on the contrary, its conversion depends on a condition, it will not be considered in equity as personal estate.¹⁹

E. Time of Conversion — 1. CONTRACT AND DEED OF TRUST. As a general rule an estate under contract of sale is regarded as converted into personalty from the date of the execution of the contract,²⁰ and an estate conveyed by a deed of trust with absolute directions for its sale is regarded as converted into personalty from the date of the delivery of the deed;²¹ but this rule as to when conversion under a power of sale takes effect does not apply where such power is postponed to the death of the grantor.²²

2. LEASE WITH OPTION TO PURCHASE. In the United States it seems that where the lessee of an estate with the option of purchasing the estate exercises such option after the death of the lessor, who is the owner in fee, the conversion of the realty into personalty will take place at the time of exercising the option and will not relate back to the time of the execution of the lease.²³ In England, however, it has been held that in such a case the option when exercised after the death of the owner of the estate will, at any rate as between the real and personal representatives, have a retroactive operation, and the conversion will be deemed to have taken place at the time when the agreement granting the option was entered into.²⁴

F. Personalty Into Realty — 1. CONTRACTED TO BE INVESTED IN LAND. If one covenants to lay out a sum of money in the purchase of land generally and devises his real estate before he has made the purchase, the money agreed to be laid out will pass to the devisee as representing land.²⁵ Or in such a case if he should die

St. 131; Wheless v. Wheless, 92 Tenn. 293, 21 S. W. 595. To constitute a conversion of real estate into personal, in the absence of an actual sale, it must be the duty of and obligatory upon the trustees to sell in any event. White v. Howard, 46 N. Y. 144.

19. Lynn v. Gephart, 27 Md. 547; Neely v. Grantham, 58 Pa. St. 433; Evans v. Kingsberry, 2 Rand. (Va.) 120, 14 Am. Dec. 779. The fact that a deed of trust contemplates that the beneficiaries shall at some time give the trustees direction to sell the land does not constitute them trustees or make the obligation of the real trustees to sell imperative. Wheless v. Wheless, 92 Tenn. 293, 21 S. W. 595.

20. Keep v. Miller, 42 N. J. Eq. 100, 6 Atl. 495; Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354; Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. St. 112, 53 Am. Dec. 526.

Unless the conversion is expressly directed to be made at a specified time in the future, or upon the happening of some particular event, the conversion takes place, in deeds and other instruments inter vivos, as from the date of their execution. Wheless v. Wheless, 92 Tenn. 293, 21 S. W. 595.

21. Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. Jr. 129, 7 Rev. Rep. 359.

The application of the doctrine of equitable conversion differs in the case of a deed from that of a will in this particular: The will speaks from the death, the deed from the delivery. If the maker of the deed impress upon his real estate the character of personalty, that for the purposes of distribution after his death makes it personal and not real estate from the delivery of the deed, the property is converted in the lifetime of the author of the deed, whereas, in the case of a will, the conversion does not take place until the death of the testator. Loughborough v. Loughborough, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 549.

Where a deed of trust directs that land shall be sold on a certain condition, it is not thereby converted into personal estate, but only after a valid sale is made are the surplus proceeds treated as personalty. Evans v. Kingsberry, 2 Rand. (Va.) 120, 14 Am. Dec. 779.

intestate before the purchase was complete, and the vendor should rescind the contract under a power reserved by him, the money agreed to be laid out in real estate would pass to his real instead of his personal representative.²⁶

2. INVESTED BY ADMINISTRATOR. An interest in real estate, bought by an administrator to save a debt due the estate, is to be treated as personalty and not as real estate in making distribution of the estate.²⁷

3. UNDER MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT — a. In General. When money is agreed and directed in marriage articles to be laid out in lands, such money will in equity be treated as realty from the date of the execution of such instrument.²⁸

b. Dependent on Option of Beneficiary. Where, however, the conversion depends on the option or request of the beneficiary, no conversion takes place.²⁹

IV. BY WILL.

A. Realty Into Personalty — 1. RULE STATED. It is a well settled rule in chancery, in the construction of wills as well as of other instruments, that when land is directed to be sold and turned into money, courts of equity in dealing with the subject will consider it as personalty.³⁰

Partnership property.—Where partnership real estate, which in law is regarded as personalty (see, generally, PARTNERSHIP), is conveyed by a deed of trust to one of the partners in trust for all the partners, specifying the proportion of said real estate belonging to each partner, by such conveyance the beneficiaries are invested with an equitable estate of inheritance, and the estate is thereby changed from its character as personalty to that of realty. Nicoll v. Mason, 49 Ill. 358; Nicoll v. Ogden, 29 Ill. 323, 81 Am. Dec. 311.

26. An intestate was, at the time of his death, under a contract to purchase realty, which the vendor might have specifically enforced, but which he afterward rescinded under a power thereby reserved to him. It was held that the heir at law of the intestate was entitled to receive the purchase-money out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cook, L. R. 13 Eq. 417, 41 L. J. Ch. 306, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180, 20 Wkly. Rep. 407. See also Garnett v. Acton, 28 Beav. 333.

27. Where an heir was indebted to the estate, and in order to save the debt the estate bought in his interest in realty, which he failed to redeem, it was held that the amount so invested thereon should be distributed as personal assets. Rogers v. Rogers, 101 Tenn. 428, 47 S. W. 701.

2. INTENTION OF TESTATOR — a. In General. As in the construction of wills the intention of the testator is the main guide. In order to work a conversion while the property remains unchanged in form, there must be a clear and imperative direction to convert it. There must be an expression in some form of an absolute intention that the land shall be sold and turned into money.⁸¹

The whole theory of conversion rests upon the intention of the testator, and can only be invoked to aid, and never to thwart, such intention. Clements v. Babcock, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 149, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 527. "The basis of all the decisions is, that the intent of the testator, is the great guide in determining the question, whether there has been an equitable conversion of the realty into personalty." Orrick v. Boehm, 49 Md. 72, 104. In Anewalt's Appeal, 42 Pa. St. 414, 416, the court lays down the rule, in language quoted from the standard authorities, as follows: "To establish a conversion, the will must direct it absolutely or out and out, irrespective of all contingencies. The direction to convert must be positive and explicit, and the will, if it be by will, or the deed, if it be by contract, must decisively fix upon the land the quality of

b. Where Intention Is Expressed. This intention may be expressed, as by the use of mandatory words directing the sale, or giving the power of sale in imperative terms.³²

c. Intention Implied—(1) FROM GENERAL SCOPE AND TENOR OF WILL. On the other hand the intention to convert may be implied, as where a testator authorizes his executors to sell his real estate, and it is apparent from the general provisions of the will that he intended such estate to be sold, although the power of sale is not in terms imperative.³³ money. It must be an imperative direction to sell."

Where testator devised all his property in trust, authorizing the trustees to lease it, sell it, and distribute it as directed by him, it was held to work an equitable conversion of the realty into personalty. Russell v. Hilton, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 642, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 233.

Where a testator directs his executors to sell all the residue of his real and personal property without limiting the power to a sale for certain purposes only, an absolute conversion of the realty into personalty results. Clark v. Denton, 36 N. J. Eq. 419.

32. Draper v. Harvard College, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 269; Lawrence v. Elliott, 3 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 235; Hood v. Dorer, 107 Wis. 149, 82 N. W. 546.

Phrases held to be mandatory.—Where a provision of a will directed certain real estate set out in a schedule attached thereto to be "converted" into certain other property "at schedule prices, or as much better as may be," it was held that this was an imperative direction to sell and convey the lands, the direction as to price being merely advisory. Ford v. Ford, 80 Mich. 42, 44 N. W. 1057; Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 19, 33 N. W. 188, 5 Am. St. Rep. 117. In Green v. Johnson, 4 Bush (Ky.) 164, the language of the will was "I authorize and request my executors . . . to sell and convey all my lands, except," etc. The word "request" was considered as synonymous with "require, or direct, or order," the latter words being regarded as mandatory. Testator provided in his will as follows: "I desire all my other estate, real, personal or mixed, shall, as soon after my decease as practicable, be sold, and the proceeds arising therefrom be invested in first bonds and mortgages, etc.," it was held that the words, "I desire," are the equivalent of "I will," and that the words, "as soon after my decease as practicable," left no discretion to his executors, excepting as to the matter of time, and the will worked a conversion of testator's real estate. Philadelphia's Appeal, 112 Pa. St. 470, 474, 4 Atl. 4.

Directions in will held imperative.—Where a will devised all the testator's property to certain parties, provided that it should be sold and the proceeds paid over as indicated, and nominated a certain person executor with full power to sell either personal or real estate, this was held to be an imperative direction to reduce the property to money so as to work an equitable conversion of realty into personalty, although the legal title and beneficial interest passed to the same persons. Wayne v. Fouts, 108 Tenn. 145, 65 S. W. 471.

An implied direction to sell land, charged by implication, for the payment of unequal legacies bequeathed to the testator's children, works an equitable conversion of such land into money. An immediate and inevitable effect of such a direction is to break the descent by vesting the estate in the executors or trustees, clothed with the power to sell, and to confer on the legatees, not an interest in the land, but simply a right to the proceeds of sale, in the proportions designated by the will. Beatty v. Byers, 18 Pa. St. 105.

The mere absence of words of express command or direction should not be held to render the exercise of the power discretionary, when to so hold would defeat the intention of the testator as it appears from the whole will. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 178 Ill. 387, 53 N. E. 101. Thus where a will contains a

(ii) FROM NECESSITY OF SALE TO EFFECTUATE EXPRESSED PURPOSE. The necessity of a conversion of realty into personalty to accomplish the purposes expressed in a will is equivalent to an imperative direction to convert and effects an equitable conversion.³⁴

(iii) BLENDED REALTY AND PERSONALTY. Where by the provisions of a will an intent, express or plainly implied, is manifest to create from blended realty and personalty a fund in money for the purpose of distribution, this has been recognized as equivalent to an express direction to sell.³⁵

d. Doubt as to Intention. The intention may only be implied, however, when the design and purpose of the testator is unequivocal, and the implication so strong as to leave no substantial doubt.³⁶ For equity will never presume such a conversion, unless it is demanded to accomplish the lawful purposes expressed in the will of the testator.³⁷ And where there is a doubt as to the intention of power of sale, not mandatory in terms, but it is apparent from the general scope and tenor of the will that the testator intended all his realty to be sold, the power of sale will be held imperative and the doctrine of equitable conversion applied. *Dodge v. Where a will provided that realty on Penn and Court streets should not be sold for five years after testator's death, and then only if his executrix deemed it advisable, and that as soon after his death as his executrix deemed practicable, she should sell all his other realty and his personalty, and that immediately after conversion of any part of his estate into money it should be divided between certain persons, it was held that these directions in the will did not blend the realty on Penn and Court streets with the personalty for distribution so as to work an implied conversion. Sauerbier's Estate, 202 Pa. 4. SALE AFTER TERMINATION OF PARTICULAR ESTATE. Where by a will a particular estate is created for life or a term of years, with directions that it shall be sold upon the termination of such particular estate and the proceeds distributed among certain designated beneficiaries, there is an equitable conversion of the remainder from realty into personalty.⁴¹ A provision, however, for the conversion of the remainder only cannot operate to work a conversion of the intermediate term also.⁴²

5. WHERE OPTION IS LEFT TO TRUSTEE OR BENEFICIARY — a. General Rule. If the act of converting is left to the option, discretion, or choice of the trustees or beneficiaries, then no equitable conversion will take place, because no duty to make the change rests upon them. Where there is a mere naked power to sell, the property remains in its original condition until that power is exercised.⁴³

What ought to be done is considered in equity as done. Every person therefore claiming property under an instrument directing its conversion must take it in the character which that instrument has impressed upon it. Dependent on choice of beneficiary.—Where a testator made the sale of his real estate depend on the choice or option of his widow and children, and the will contained no positive direction to sell, it was held that no conversion resulted. Stoner v. Zimmerman, 21 Pa. St. 394.

Discretion of executor or trustee.—No equitable conversion is worked of real estate into personality by a power of sale given to an executor or trustee, where the direction for the sale is not obligatory; a merely discretionary power of sale produces no such result. In re McComb, 117 N. A provision in a will authorizing the executors to sell and convey "for the purposes of a division or distribution, or for any other purpose, that they in their best judgment might think proper" any or all of testator's real estate, which by a previous clause of the will had been devised to certain persons, does not convert such realty into personality, and therefore does not bar an action for partition among the devisees, where the estate owes no debts. Mellen v. Banning, 72 Hun (N. Y.) 176, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 542.

Naked power of sale.—Where there is a trust in a will merely to sell real estate without any other power over the same, it is well settled that such trust is valid as a power only, and that the real estate itself passes to the persons otherwise entitled thereto, subject only to the execution of the trust as a power. Janssen v. Wemple, 3 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 229 [citing Dwelling v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 366]. See also Chew v. Nicklin, 45 Pa. St. 84, where it was held that the act of Feb. 24, 1834, was not intended to break descents or work a conversion of real estate over which a naked power of sale had been given to executors, but only to enable them to preserve and dispose of the estate as though an interest had been devised to them instead, leaving the question of intention to convert to depend upon the will of the testator.

The fact that partition proceedings might, or a sale by the executor under the discretion given him by the will would, change such realty into personality should not be considered in construing the will to determine whether it required a conversion of real property into personality. In re Tatum, 169 N. Discretionary power of sale.—Where real estate was devised to an infant with a discretionary power of sale in the executors, it was held that the proceeds of such sale belonging to the infant were personal property, passing on her death to her administrator and not to her heirs, under the power of the will, and not by the doctrine of equitable conversion. Matter of McKay, 75 N. Where the power to sell is only discretionary until the power is exercised the property remains and is considered as realty. Graham v. De Witt, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 186.

6. DISCRETION AS TO TIME, MANNER, OR TERMS OF SALE. The doctrine of equitable conversion is none the less applicable, where a testator directs his realty to be sold, because the executors or trustees are given a discretion as to the time, manner, or terms of sale.⁴⁶

7. SALE SUBJECT TO QUALIFICATIONS OR CONTINGENCIES. Where the direction in a will to sell real estate is not absolute but qualified, depending upon a contingency, the principle of equitable conversion does not apply.⁴⁷

8. LAND CHARGED WITH PAYMENT OF DEBTS MERELY. Where the executors are given the mere power of sale, and the realty is charged only with the payment of debts, no conversion results, and it retains the character of realty until actually converted.⁴⁸

9. TIME OF CONVERSION — a. In General. Where there is an imperative direction to sell, unless the conversion is expressly directed to be made at a specified time in the future, or upon the happening of some particular event, the conversion takes place as from the death of the testator.⁴⁹

Where the will provided that a sale of real estate was only to be made in the event the life-tenant should deem it to be to her advantage, and on her petition, it was held that there could be no conversion of such realty into personalty until a sale was made in accordance with the directions of the will. Pyott's Estate, 160 Pa. b. Where Date of Sale Is Remote. By the preponderance of authority it is no exception to the rule that land directed to be sold and turned into money is considered as money from the death of the testator, because the period of sale is remote, and the actual conversion cannot be made until the time arrives.⁵⁰ Some courts, however, have held that the doctrine of equitable conversion must be taken with the qualification that the change does not take place until the period arrives or event occurs when the conversion ought to be made. When that period arrives the estate will be deemed to undergo the change directed by the will, whether actually sold or not.⁵¹

"The rule is too well settled, to need the citation of authorities, that an express and explicit direction by the will, to sell the real estate of the testator and divide the proceeds, works a conversion of it into personalty on his death." Laird's Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 339, 343.

In construing a will where there was an imperative discretion to sell the real estate, Andrews, J., in Fisher v. Banta, 66 N. Y. 468, 476, says: "It became the duty of the executor to sell the land and divide the proceeds. . . . From the moment of the testator's death, the conversion took place, and the land became money for all purposes of administration."

"Whether the conversion shall be deemed to take place on the death of a testator or at some later period, depends on his intention as manifested by the provisions of the will. If it provides in terms that a sale shall be made at some specified future time, or creates a trust with direction to sell only on the happening of a designated event, which might or might not happen, then the conversion would only take place on its occurrence, otherwise the general rule is that real estate will be deemed converted into personalty as of the date of the death of a testator." Underwood v. Curtis, 127 N. Y. 523, 533, 28 N. E. 585, 40 N. Y. St. 255.

Where the testator gave one third of all his money and property to his wife, and the balance to his children, to be equally divided among them, and the will further directed that a portion of the estate given to the children should be invested in unencumbered real-estate security, and as each one of the children arrived at the age of twenty-four years he should receive his share, it was held that the will worked an equitable conversion of the estate into money at the death of the testator. After termination of particular estate.—Where there is a positive direction to sell testator's real estate after the widow's death and divide the proceeds among his daughters, conversion takes place at testator's death, when eo instanti the shares of the legatee pass to them as personalty, although there is a life-interest in the land to expire before the sale. Ramsey v. Hanlon, 33 Fed. 425.

Sale after twenty years.—It was held in Handley v. Palmer, 103 Fed. 39, 43 C. C. A. 100, that a direction to executors in a will to sell all of testator's real estate at the end of twenty years works a conversion of the testator's real estate, wherever situated, into personalty, as of the date of the testator's death.

c. Discretion as to Time or Manner of Sale. The rule is well settled that if the will requires the real estate to be converted into money at all events, notwithstanding the executors may have a discretion as to the time, it must be considered as converted into money from the death of the testator,⁵³ although the courts of several states have held to the contrary.⁵³

d. Upon Actual Sale. Where a discretionary power of sale is given by will to trustees, or such discretion rests with the beneficiary, no conversion of realty into personalty will take place until a sale is actually made.⁵⁴ So where lands are devised to be sold only upon the happening of a contingency, such lands are not converted into money until the happening of such contingency.⁵⁵

10. EXTENT OF CONVERSION— a. of conversion is attained, conversion thereupon ends or a reconversion takes place.⁵⁷

b. For Benefit of Devisees. A conversion of land into money, directed for the benefit of the devisees, creates no charge upon the land for the payment of debts, and does not make the proceeds either legal or equitable assets in the hands of an executor. He holds these proceeds simply as a trustee of the devisees.⁵⁸

11. JURISDICTION. The question as to the conversion of realty into personalty by will is to be determined by the courts of the state in which the property is situated, even though the will has been made and probated at the domicile of the testator in another state, where it has been construed to work such conversion.⁵⁹

B. Personalty Into Realty — 1. IN GENERAL. Following the principle already enunciated, that every person claiming property under an instrument directing its conversion must take it in the character which that instrument has impressed upon it, money directed by will to be employed in the purchase of land is to be considered as land.⁶⁰

2. INTENTION OF TESTATOR. As in the case of real estate, the quality of personal property for purposes of transmission by will is not changed from the character in which the testator left it, unless there is some clear act or intention by which he has impressed upon it definitely the character of realty.⁶¹

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Conversion," § 44.

Conversion of mortgage.—As between real and personal representatives, a mortgagee may, by a manifest declaration of his intent to treat the mortgage as real estate and not as personal property in his will, convert the mortgage as well as any other part of his personal estate into realty and make it pass accordingly. Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185, 35 Am. Dec. 277.

Land articulated to be purchased.—A articulated to purchase lands in trust for B, and, before any conveyance made, B, by will, directed all his freehold estate to be settled on C, and his son, etc. It was held that the lands articulated for would pass by the will. *Greenhill v. Where there is an unqualified direction in a will to convert money into land, it will be regarded as land, even in case of devolution before such character has in fact been assumed. Graham v. De Witt, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 186.

3. TIME OF CONVERSION. The same rules are applicable as to the time conversion takes place in the case of personalty turned into realty as have been stated hitherto in the case of realty turned into personalty, and where there is a positive direction in a will for a conversion of personalty into realty, such conversion takes place immediately on the death of the testator;⁶² and where the direction for the conversion is made to depend upon a contingency, then the conversion will not be deemed to take place until the happening of such contingency.⁶³

V. FAILURE OF PURPOSE OF CONVERSION — RESULTING TRUST.

A. Instruments Inter Vivos. Where real estate is settled by deed upon trust to sell for certain specified purposes, and such purposes fail wholly or partially, in such a case, whether the trust for sale is to arise in the lifetime of the grantor or not until after his decease, the property to the extent of such failure results to the grantor and his personal representative as personalty from the moment the deed is executed.⁶⁴

B. Wills — 1. TOTAL FAILURE. The general rule is that the conversion is limited to the purposes of the testator as expressed in the will, and in the event of a total failure of the purpose, there is a resulting trust in favor of the heir or the personal representative, and the property passes according to its original character.⁶⁵ will to A to be invested by the executors in land, no particular parcel being specified, it was held that this provision would be regarded for some purposes as a devise of real estate under the general rule of equitable conversion, but not so as to dispense with the necessity of the executor's assent or to relieve it from contributing pro rata with other legacies of personalty to the payment of debts. McFadden v. Hefley, 28 S. C. 317, 5 S. E. 812, 13 Am. St. Rep. 675. In Hinton v. Pinke, 1 P. Wms. 539, 24 Eng. Reprint 506, a money legacy was given to be laid out in land, and upon a deficiency of assets it was held that this legacy should be regarded as land, only for the amount which should remain after it had contributed its proportion toward making up the deficiency in the assets.

Specific legacies first applicable to debts.—A plain intention, gathered from a will, that certain personal property shall be treated as real must be regarded as effecting a conversion thereof, and specific legacies must be resorted to before chattels so converted are applied. Downing v. Marshall, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 525.

Where, for the security of the fund, money is converted into land by a judicial decree, the land is substituted for the fund and goes to the person who would have taken the fund had it remained specifically personal estate. *Vandewalker v. The principle on which this doctrine rests is thus expressed in Amphlett v. Parke, 2 Russ. & M. 221, 227, 11 Eng. Ch. 221, "that the heir must be effectually displaced, that he is not to be displaced by inference or implication, but there must appear a clear, substantive and undeniable intent on the part of the deviser or testator to exclude him." Mr. Cox, in a note to Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. Wms. 19, note 1, 24 Eng. Reprint 952, thus states the rule: "The several cases upon this subject seems to depend upon this question, whether the testator meant to give to the produce of real estate the quality of personality to all intents, or only as far as respected the particular purposes of the will."

Conversion presumed for purposes of will merely.—Where a testator orders his land to be sold, the conversion will, unless a contrary intention distinctly appears, be deemed to have been directed merely for the purposes of the will, and consequently if those purposes fail or do not require it, it will in equity be considered land and given to the heir. Moore v. Robbins, 53 N. J. Eq. 137, 32 Atl. 379. In Roy v. Monroe, 47 N. J. Eq. 356, 362, 20 Atl. 481, the court said: "It is an obvious dictate of justice, as well as of common sense, that the direction to convert shall be held to have terminated whenever it becomes impossible to carry out the purpose for which the conversion was ordered, and that when the property, in its changed form, cannot pass by the will which directs its conversion, but must be transmitted by the law, it should go to the person who would have taken it if it had not been converted, but still remained in its original position." The general rule is that where a person dealing with his own property only has directed a conversion for a particular purpose, or out and out, but its produce to be applied to a particular purpose, when the purpose fails, the intention fails, and a court of equity will regard him as not having directed the conversion. Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. Jr. 425.

Resulting trust pro tanto.—Where the object for which a conversion of real estate into personality failed either wholly or in part, so that the proceeds thereof are not legally and effectually disposed of by the will of the testator, there is a resulting trust in favor of the heir at law pro tanto. Hawley v. James, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 213, 32 Am. Dec. 623.

Extreme English doctrine.—In England there has always been a strong tendency to favor the heir, and in one case this doctrine was carried to the extent of holding that the right of the heir was not defeated by an express declaration in the will that the fund should be considered personal and should in no case lapse or result for his benefit. Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare 145, 12 Jur. 645, 17 L. J. Ch. 361, 31 Eng. Ch. 145. See also De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Cas. 524, 16 Jur. 1147, as illustrating the same point.

purposes of the will which may be effectuated, the surplus will go to the heir as money and not as land, and will pass to his personal representative in case of his death before actual sale.⁶⁷ The rule just stated also applies to personalty directed to be laid out in real estate, and upon a partial failure of the purposes of the will the surplus undisposed of will pass to the personal representative;⁶⁸ and where, in order to effectuate the purposes of the will, such personalty is laid out in real estate, upon a partial failure of the purposes of the will, the surplus undisposed of will go to the personal representative as land and not as money.⁶⁹

VI. CONVERSION OUT AND OUT.

Where the intent of the testator appears to have been to stamp upon the proceeds of land directed to be sold the quality of personalty, not only to subserve the particular purposes of the will, but to all intents, the claim of the heir at law to a resulting trust is defeated, and the estate is considered to be personal.⁷⁰

In the leading case of Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Bro. Ch. 503, 28 Eng. Reprint 1262, 3 P. Wms. 22, note 1, 24 Eng. Reprint 953, in which the testator directed his real estate to be sold and the proceeds paid to certain legatees, two of the legatees died before the testator. Lord Chancellor Thurlow held that the legacies to them lapsed, and that their shares, so far as they were constituted of real estate at the testator's death, descended to the heirs at law. Mr. Scott, afterward Lord Eldon, in his famous argument in this case, admitted that in favor of his legatees the testator intended to convert the whole property into personalty in case all his legatees should eventually take the whole, and that as to the legatees the law would regard it as converted out and out, but he argued that no intention was shown as to that part of the proceeds as to which his disposition, in the event which happened, failed of effect.

If one of the legacies fails, whether it be void or lapsed, where there is a qualified conversion of real estate into personalty by will, the portion of the fund does not pass with the residue, but goes to the party who would have been entitled to the real estate unsold. Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 72.

The fact that the heir is also a legatee under the will does not impair his right to a resulting trust in his own favor. Kellet v. Kellet, 1 Ball & B. 533, 12 Rev. Rep. 54.

Where real estate is directed to be converted in order to subserve a purpose it will be treated as personalty for that purpose, but will remain unchanged as to all beyond what that purpose requires. In re Rudy, 185 Pa. St. 359, 39 Atl. 968, 64 Am. St. Rep. 654.

Surplus passes to heir as personalty.—Where an executor sells real estate of his testator to pay his debts, under a power in the will, the conversion of the realty into personalty is complete to all intents and purposes only to the extent to which purchase-money is required for the particular objects for which the sale takes place, and the excess, although in the form of money, remains impressed with the character of real estate for the purpose of determining who is entitled to receive it, but for that purpose only. *Cronise v. VII. CONVERSION BY PARAMOUNT AUTHORITY.

A. Under Statute or by Order of Court — 1. GENERAL RULE. The question now presented is whether property, although de facto converted, is to be treated to any extent as not converted. The general rule is that if land be sold for a specific purpose, the surplus money shall, as between the heir and next of kin, be considered as land, so far as to vest in the persons who would have been entitled to it had it remained unconverted. But after it has so vested in the person entitled it is to be treated as money in his hands, and in the case of his subsequent death goes to his personal representatives as personal estate.⁷¹ Where, however, the sale is by order of court, if the sale is not completed by confirmation of the court, no conversion from realty to personalty takes place.⁷²

2. SALE OF LAND TO PAY DEBTS. So where real estate of the decedent is sold to pay his debts, any surplus remaining after such object is effectuated continues in its original character of realty.⁷³ The Pennsylvania courts have subscribed to this

Conversion for all intents.—Where, although the particular purposes of the will might only require a partial conversion of the realty into personalty, yet the general object and scope render it evident that sales of the whole real estate were intended, this amounts to a conversion of the same into personalty to all intents, and the beneficiaries will take the same as personal property. *Arnold v. Where an heir dies after land left by his ancestor is sold under orders of the orphans' court, and confirmation of such sale, but before deed is made, his interest descends as land and not as money. In re Schmidt, 182 Pa. St. 267, 37 Atl. 928.

73. Oberly v. Lerch, 18 N. J. Eq. 346; Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. 447; Cooke v. Dealey, 22 Beav. 196; Jermy v. Preston, 13 Sim. 356, 36 Eng. Ch. 356. But compare Graham v. Dickinson, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 169. In this case a testator charged his personal estate with payment of his debts, but it being insufficient his executors obtained an order for the sale of his real estate in the possession of his devisees, and the doctrine to the extent of holding that such surplus proceeds vest in the persons entitled to such real estate, in such proportions and for like interests, respectively, as they may have had in the real estate, although they vest as personalty and not as realty.⁷⁴

3. PARTITION SALE. The better doctrine seems to be that the proceeds of land of an intestate sold in partition are personalty;⁷⁵ but in some jurisdictions they are held to still retain the character of real estate.⁷⁶ No conversion takes place by virtue of proceedings in partition before sale or an allotment and acceptance of the purparts. Until then the interests of the several owners retain all the qualities of real estate.⁷⁷

4. FORECLOSURE SALE. In some jurisdictions it has been held that where a mortgage is foreclosed, the surplus remaining after the satisfaction of such mort-

proceeds were applied to the payment of debts. Subsequently the executors recovered a sum of money upon a claim which their testator held at the time of his death. It was held that while the money thus received was, in equity, to be considered a substitute for the real estate sold for the payment of debts, it would be treated as money and not as land on the death of a devisee entitled thereto, and would go to her personal representative.

Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 142, § 9, provides that in every sale of the real estate of a decedent by an executor or administrator the proceeds remaining on the final settlement of the accounts shall be considered as real estate and be disposed of as such; and it has been held under this statute that the unexpended balance of the proceeds of the sale of real estate of a testator sold to pay debts is to be treated as real estate, and should be paid over by the administrator to those entitled thereto. Adams v. Jones, 176 Mass. 185, 57 N. E. 362.

Young*, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 261; Wale's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 156, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 409. In McCarthy's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 85, 32 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 249, it was held that the balance of the proceeds of real estate sold for the payment of debts of a minor's father remained as realty and would be distributed as such. So in Lloyd v. Hart, 2 Pa. St. 473, 45 Am. Dec. 612, it was held that a sale of real estate by the committee of a lunatic, for the payment of his debts under a decree of the court, works no conversion of the surplus, but that it remains real estate and is distributed as such according to rules of descent.

Where property has once vested.—It is held in Squire's Appeal, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 118, that the provisions of section 33 of the act of Feb. 24, 1834, that the surplus proceeds of the land of a decedent sold at sheriff's sale shall be paid to his executor or administrator, and by him be distributed as the real estate from which they arise would have been, is simply an application of the general rule in equity with regard to conversion; that the operation of this rule is confined to the first transmission, and the

75. Jacobus v. Jacobus, 36 N. J. Eq. 248; In re Scott, 137 Pa. St. 454, 20 Atl. 623; Hough's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 187; In re Morgan, [1900] 2 Ch. 474, 69 L. J. Ch. 735. In Wentz's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 541, 551, 17 Atl. 875 [followed in Scott's Estate, 137 Pa. St. 454, 20 Atl. 623], the court said: "It is not uncommon to say that the proceeds of real estate remain realty, etc., but the expression is not accurate. The money never is real estate, in law any more than in fact, but for certain purposes, and within certain limits, it is treated as if it were real estate. The purpose is to preserve the inheritable quality of the estate, so that the title may not be diverted from the previous owner, and the limit is the first devolution." In Findley v. Findley, 42 W. Va. 372, 377, 26 S. E. 433, the court said: "This whole doctrine of equitable conversion, by which what is in fact land is treated as personalty, or money as realty is merely a fiction of courts of equity, to give impress to property to carry out the intent of wills. This reason does not apply to a sale in lieu of partition, where the very purpose is to change it into money, so it may be divided. 3 Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 1167, says that, when land is sold by a court, it is the doctrine of the court that its character should be changed, 'only so far as may be necessary to accomplish the particular purpose.' Then, what is the purpose in partition sales? A total division of dollars. You cannot accomplish the purpose otherwise than by dividing the dollars. That is the very end to be accomplished,—not like a sale of decedent's land, where there is a surplus."

76. Smith v. Smith, 63 Ill. App. 534 [affirmed in 174 Ill. 52, 50 N. E. 1083, 43 L. R. A. 403]. Where a court of equity causes land to be sold for partition, it leaves it to the party entitled to the proceeds to designate whether he will hold them as personalty or as realty. And when for any reason that party is incapable of making such designation the court will hold them subject to all the incidents of realty. Turner v. Dawson, 80 Va. 841. See also Ashby v. Smith, 1 Rob. (Va.) 55.

77. Jenkins v. Simms, 45 Md. 532; Thompson v. Owen, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 36. It is held in Eberts v. Eberts, 55 Pa. St. 110, that the interest of a husband, after proceedings in gage is personalty, and passes to the personal representative of decedent.⁷⁸ In other jurisdictions, however, such surplus has been held to retain the character of realty and to pass to the heir.⁷⁹

5. TAX-SALE. It has been held in the United States court of claims that a surplus remaining after a sale of lands, under the Direct Tax Acts of 1861 and 1862, is a chose in action, and personal estate, although derived from realty.⁸⁰

6. PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY—a. Married Women—(i) RULE IN UNITED STATES. The general rule seems to be that where real estate of a feme covert is sold by order of court, the proceeds of such sale are personalty, and on her death pass to her husband and his representatives;⁸¹ but the mere order of court for the sale of the real estate of a feme covert does not convert the realty into personalty, and until an actual sale confirmed by the court the nature of the estate remains unchanged.⁸²

(ii) RULE IN ENGLAND. In England by virtue of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, where the real estate of a married woman is sold by order of court, in the absence of election by such married woman (provided for by statute)⁸³ the proceeds of such sale are upon her death treated as realty for the purposes of devolution.⁸⁴ But by statute the share of a married woman in the proceeds of the sale of real estate devised to her in fee, which has been sold in a partition suit, may be treated as personalty and paid to her husband on her electing by examination in court to take the money as personal estate.⁸⁵

b. Infants. The rule in a number of jurisdictions is, that when the real estate of an infant is converted into money by statute or order of court, and the infant dies intestate before attaining his majority, the fund will be treated as real estate, and as such descend to the heirs at law of the infant.⁸⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that where real estate of an infant is sold, pursuant to a statute or order of court, and the infant subsequently dies during minority and

78. Sweeney v. Horn, 190 Pa. St. 237, 42 Atl. 709. This seems to have been the former doctrine in New York. Bogert v. Furnham, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 496; Swezey v. Willis, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 495. But see infra, note 79.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that a purchase of land by the executor at a sheriff's sale is a conversion thereof into personalty. Gumaer v. Barber, 182 Pa. St. 31, 37 Atl. 848.

But see Beyer v. Reesor, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 501. It was held in Hay's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 449, that the act of March 29, 1832, prohibiting the orphans' court from awarding a payment of a married woman's portion to her husband unless he gives security, does not preclude a conversion of such portion consisting of realty into personalty on partition; that the act extended no further than to regulate the first descent,

82. Where a female heir died after the order of the court for the sale of her share of real estate had been granted, but before an actual sale, it was held that her husband was not entitled, as her administrator, to the whole of her share of the money arising from the sale, and that he was only entitled, as tenant by the curtesy, to the interest of it during life. *Ferree v. Where proceeds are under two hundred pounds.—Where in a partition action, the share of a married woman in the proceeds of sale of real estate is under two hundred pounds, the court will order the same to be paid out to her upon her separate receipt and upon affidavit of no settlement, and will dispense with her separate examination as to her election to take the money as personal estate. *Wallace v. The cases show that where conversion is compulsory, that is, against the will or without the consent of the owner, the fund will be treated as real estate until the owner being sui juris, or of disposable capacity, manifests a willingness to accept it as personal. Wetherell v. Hough, 52 N. J. Eq. 683, 29 Atl. 592. In Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257, 278, 8 Rev. Rep. 144, Lord Chancellor Eldon said: "I have uniformly made it a rule, since I have sat here, where property of one nature has been applied for the benefit of an infant to property of another nature, to have an express provision that, if he shall not attain the age, at which he will have a disposable power, the representative shall not be prejudiced in any degree by the act done by the Court in contemplation of the infant's benefit, in all the circumstances surprise or accident can throw around it."

Under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 196, § 186, providing that no sale of the real estate of an infant should give such infant any other or greater interest than he had in the estate so sold, and that the proceeds shall be deemed real estate of the same nature as the property sold, the proceeds of an infant's real estate will be regarded as real estate for all purposes of distribution in all cases where the infant died before he attained his majority. Foreman v. Foreman, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 215.

The Pennsylvania act of 1853 declares in express terms that "no purchase or sale by authority of this act shall change the course of descent, or transmission of any property, changed in its nature, by virtue thereof as respects persons who are not of competent ability to dispose of it." Therefore, the proceeds of land sold under this act retains its character as real estate and so devolves. Holmes' Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 339, 342; Hough's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 187. See also Davis' Appeal, 60 Pa. St. 118; Grenawalt's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 95.

Foreclosure sale.—It has been held in New York that when at the time of the sale of mortgaged premises under decree of foreclosure, the equity of redemption therein is owned by a minor, and a surplus arises from the sale, the interest of the minor therein is deemed real estate and will be disposed of as such at his death, if he dies under age; and that such surplus will not be converted into personalty, even when it has been invested by the court in personal securities for the benefit of such minor. Sweezy v. Thayer, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 286.

Estoppel.—It was held in Wetherill v. Hough, 52 N. J. Eq. 683, 29 Atl. 592, that where all tenants in common of real estate who are of age undertake to convey the fee, including the interest of one not of age, and the portion of the purchase-money supposed to represent interest of the latter be paid to his guardian, as to the adults, the conversion is out and out, and the fund so held by the guardian will be treated as personal estate as between the adults and the legal personal representatives of the infant in case of his death.

Reason of rule.—This line of decisions seems to be based on the rule that both the real and personal representatives are volunteers; that there are no equities between them, and each must take what they find at the death of the person entitled for life, in the condition which they find it. Oxenden v. Compton, 2 Ves. Jr. 69, 2 Rev. Rep. 131.

Real estate was sold by order of court, the court being of the opinion that the same would be for the benefit of the infant defendant, and the adult defendant consenting. The infant's share of proceeds were paid into court, and the infant died before attaining

c. Lunatics. Where real estate of a lunatic is sold by his committee, under a statute or by order of court, the better doctrine is that the proceeds of such sale remain realty for the purpose of distribution upon the death of the lunatic.⁸⁸

7. PERSONALTY INTO REALTY—a. Infants—(i) BY DECREE OF COURT. Although a court of equity may direct and sanction the conversion of an infant's personal estate into realty, where it is for the manifest convenience and advantage of the infant,⁸⁹ yet the general rule is that such property will continue to be considered as personalty during the minority of such infant to the same extent as before such conversion was made, and on his death under age will pass to his personal representatives.⁹⁰

(ii) BY ACT OF GUARDIAN. Where a guardian without authority converts an infant's personal property into realty, such property will be regarded in equity his majority. It was held that the fund in court belonged to his personal representative and was not to be treated as realty. Steed v. Preece, L. R. 18 Eq. 192, 43 L. J. Ch. 687, 22 Wkly. Rep. 432.

Under the Pennsylvania act of April 19, 1794, providing for sale of the land of intestates by the orphans' court under certain conditions, it has been held that surplus money arising from the sale of land by such order, whether it belong to an infant, a feme covert, or a male of full age, is to be considered simply as money and nothing else. Griider v. McClay, 11 Serg. & R. 224 [followed in Clepper v. Livergood, 5 Watts 113]. See also Weaver's Estate, 2 Lanc. L. Rev. 114.

Sale of growing timber.—It was held in Oxenden v. Compton, 2 Ves. Jr. 69, 2 Rev. Rep. 131, that the produce of timber on the estate of a lunatic cut and sold by order on report that it would be for his benefit is personal assets.

Estoppel.—A cotenant of land with a lunatic, with whom he was related so as to be entitled to inherit from him as heir at law, was a party to a decree purporting to divest the lunatic of his interest in the land, and requiring such cotenant to pay therefor. It was held that after the lunatic's death the cotenant was estopped to deny that the lunatic's interest was converted into personalty. Anderson's Appeal, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 35.

Where a committee were suspended.—A lunatic's realty was sold by his committee in 1871. In 1872, by a decree adjudging him restored to sanity, the committee were suspended, and they filed an account of the proceeds of the sale, which they retained and reinvested until 1885, when by a further decree the suspension was terminated and they were reinstated as committee. It was held that on the lunatic's death the proceeds should be distributed as personalty; the restoration of the lunatic to sanity in 1872, and the subsequent reinvestment of the proceeds of the realty, although not actually made by him, causing such proceeds to lose the character of realty impressed upon them by the original sale. Jones' Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 318.

89. There are many cases in which the court will for the manifest convenience and advantage of the infants direct or sanction the making of an absolute purchase of real estate with his personalty, or with the rents and proceeds of his estate; and thus in fact convert his personalty into realty. This, however, is never done without a complete saving to the infant of all his rights by continuing to consider during his infancy the property as personalty to the same extent as before such conversion was made. Because the court can neither do nor sanction any act which may in its consequence impair the rights of the infant, or those who claim under him, either by altering the nature of his property or by changing his domicile so as to cast it into a different course of succession. In re Williams, 3 Bland (Md.) 186. as personalty, and on the death of the infant before attaining his majority will pass to his personal representatives and not to his heirs.⁹¹

b. Foreclosure Sale. A foreclosure, obtained by a mortgagee after the publication of a will, converts the mortgage from personal into real estate, which descends to the heirs, unencumbered by any bequest in the will not charged upon the real estate.⁹²

B. Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain. The better doctrine seems to be that where there is a compulsory conversion of real estate, that is, against the will or consent of the owner, such as the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the fund will be treated as real estate until the owner, being sui juris or of disposable capacity, manifests a willingness to accept it as personalty.⁹³

C. Time of Conversion. Where land is directed to be sold by order of court, the conversion of the realty into personalty does not take place until the confirmation of such sale by the court. This act of the court is necessary to change the character of the property from realty to personalty, and without it the rights of all parties as to the proceeds will remain as if there had been no sale.⁹⁴

Ch. 516, 5 Wkly. Rep. 449 (the case of a felon who was convicted and transported. In this case if the proceeds of the sale had been held to be personalty they would have escheated to the crown. They were held to be realty). But see Cadman v. Cadman, L. R. 13 Eq. 470, 41 L. J. Ch. 468, 20 Wkly. Rep. 356.

It was held in Massachusetts that damages paid for land of an infant taken for public use as a highway were personalty. Emerson v. Cutler, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 108. But see Gibson v. Cooke, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 75, where it was held that where land held in trust is taken for public use under the right of eminent domain, the money paid for it stands in its place, subject to the same trust and the same ultimate disposition. See also Holland v. Cruft, 3 Gray (Mass.) 162.

Pennsylvania doctrine.—It was held in Pennsylvania, however, that money received in condemnation proceedings from a railroad for a right of way through an infant's lands devolves as personal property. Hough's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 187. Land taken by condemnation proceedings in the decedent's lifetime is converted into personalty, to wit, the damages allowed for the taking. Stark's Estate, 9 Kulp 120.

Manumission of slaves.—Brown domiciled in Philadelphia, devised all his "real and personal property in Jamaica," part being slaves, which there were real estate. After the date of the will and during his life, parliament passed an act (3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 73) by which slaves were set free, and appropriated money to compensate their holders. After Brown's death his proportion was ascertained by commissioners under the act and paid to his executors. It was held that this act was a conversion of the slaves from realty into personalty before Brown's death. Pleasant's Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 356. See also *Richards v. VIII. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A. In General. Generally speaking equity will carry out the principle of equitable conversion in all of its consequences, and as far as it is necessary to effectuate the well defined and lawful purposes of the instrument directing such conversion, and to determine the property rights of all parties claiming under or through it, will recognize all of its legitimate consequences and treat the property, from the time the conversion takes place to all intents and purposes as of the nature and character into which it should have been changed, and will determine the rights of parties to it as in its changed form.⁹⁵

Compliance with conditions of sale unnecessary.—The confirmation of a report of sale in partition, stating that a certain proportion of the purchase-money was to be paid when the deed was made and the remainder at the death of the intestate's widow, is not a conversion of the realty into personalty until the conditions of the sale are complied with, so far at least as to entitle the purchaser to the deed. Biggett's Estate, 20 Pa. St. 17. Where real estate is sold by order of court, the mutation of the estate from real to personal may be determined to be complete when the commissioner's sale is ratified by the court and the purchaser has complied with the terms of it by paying the money if the sale is for cash, or by giving bonds to the representatives, if the sale is on credit. State v. Krebs, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 31 [followed in Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297, 56 Am. Dec. 717].

Conversion by act of law.—In Biggett's Estate, 20 Pa. St. 17, 18, Lewis, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "A conversion of real into personal estate, by act of the law, differs from a conversion by act of the party. In the latter case, where the conversion is the object of the owner, the result is produced as soon as the contract of sale is made. In the former, where payment of debts, or partition, and not conversion, is the object, the transmutation is but the unavoidable result of the proceedings, and takes place only when the estate is completely vested in the vendee and the purchase-money paid or secured."

The order for the sale of land does not operate in presenti, and convert the land into assets in the hands of the guardian, so as to prevent judgment obtained after the order, but before the sale, from becoming a lien on the land. Shaffner v. Briggs, 36 Ind. 55, 10 Am. Rep. 1.

B. Realty Into Personalty — 1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION. So where land is converted into money, either by act of parties or operation of law, the proceeds are regarded in equity as personal property, and on the death of the party entitled thereto will pass to his personal representative and not to his heir.⁹⁶

2. SALE AFTER LIFE-ESTATE. Also where land is equitably converted into money by a direction in a will that it should be sold after the death of the life-tenant and then distributed, the share of a beneficiary who dies before the termination of the life-estate passes as personalty.⁹⁷

3. ALIEN BENEFICIARIES. Where by a will or instrument inter vivos realty is converted into personalty, an alien, although incapable of holding land for his own benefit, can take the proceeds of the realty thus converted.⁹⁸

4. CORPORATION AS BENEFICIARY. And so in the same manner a bequest to a corporation may be valid, although it is incapable of receiving a devise of lands.⁹⁹

5. REVOCAION OF DEVISE. Since the sale of land by executory contract, where the vendor has previously devised the same, converts such land into personalty, such sale and conversion operates as a revocation of the will pro tanto.¹

6. INTEREST NOT SUBJECT TO LIEN OR EXECUTION. Where a testator directs his executor to sell his land and divide the proceeds among designated legatees, it is

— Thus where the executors, acting under a general power in the will, have sold the realty and received the proceeds, such proceeds, being personalty, may be applied to the payment of the testator's debts and legacies. Bolton v. Myers, 83 Hun (N. Y.) 259, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 588, 64 N. Y. St. 142 [reversing 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 475, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 333, and affirmed in 146 N. Y. 257, 40 N. E. 737]. See also Smith v. Bloomsbury First Presb. Church, 26 N. J. Eq. 132, to the same effect.

Mortgage of land directed or agreed to be sold operates as an equitable assignment thereof. Herst v. Dague, 34 Ohio St. 371; Bailey v. Allegheny Nat. Bank, 104 Pa. St. 425.

Rents of estate prior to sale.— Where the will directs the sale of real estate, the rents of the estate between the death of the testator and the actual sale go to the party who takes the proceeds. Wright v. New York City M. E. Church, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 202. well settled that such legatees have no estate in the land which is the subject of lien or execution.²

C. Right of Disposition by Beneficiary. An obvious result of conversion is the right of the beneficiary to deal with the property as in its changed form before such change has been actually effected.³

D. Marital Rights — 1. RIGHTS OF HUSBAND — a. Realty Converted Into Personalty. When land is converted into personalty, by will, deed, or other instrument, the share of a feme covert in the proceeds belongs to her husband as other personalty.⁴

b. Personalty Into Realty. So money belonging to a feme covert which is directed to be converted into land is liable to the husband's curtesy.⁵

2. WIDOW'S DOWER RIGHT — a. Testator's Widow. Where the testator directs an out and out conversion of his real estate and makes his wife a legatee under the will, the widow is put to her election as to whether she will accept the provision made for her under the will or claim her dower right in the realty;⁶ but such conversion cannot defeat the widow of her dower right without her consent.⁷

b. Beneficiary's Widow. And where land is equitably converted into personalty by a direction in a will or by other instrument, the wife of a beneficiary of such proceeds has no right of dower in the realty so converted.⁸

Equitable assignment.—Where a will directed certain land to be sold and the proceeds divided, it was held that a mortgage of the land by the devisees was invalid and constituted only an assignment of such mortgagor's interest, which would be enforced as an equity in an alleged mortgagee. See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Conversion," § 61. Where testator gave his real estate to his wife during her life, and directed that at her death the same be sold and the proceeds divided among his children, it was held, under Ala. Code (1886), § 1951, providing that all persons over eighteen years of age may dispose of their personal property by will, that any of the children over such age could bequeath his interest, although his will was made before the mother's death, since the direction in the will operated as an equitable conversion. Allen v. Watts, 98 Ala. 384, 11 So. 646.

Where real estate directed to be sold under the terms of a will had not been sold at the time of the death of one devisee, but there had been no election by all the parties interested in the estate to reconvert the property, it was held that the husband of the deceased devisee was entitled to one fourth of such property devised as personalty of his wife, and that he was not a tenant by curtesy. Wayne v. Fouts, 108 Tenn. 145, 65 S. W. 471. But the husband cannot, under the doctrine of equitable conversion, and in virtue of his right to take the money if he can get it, take the land as money and hold it as he would the money itself free from all claim of the wife. *Samuel v. 8. Willing v. Peters, 7 Pa. St. 287.

By a trust paper executed by the beneficiaries of a judgment by confession, plaintiff and a co-trustee were authorized to bid in and purchase lands about to be sold under

E. Exceptions to General Rule — 1. EXECUTOR'S CONTRACT TO CONVEY. There are, however, exceptions to the above stated rule that the property will be for all purposes treated as in its converted state. Thus where by a will the title to real estate is vested in two executors in trust, with power to sell, it has been held that one of the executors cannot, without the assent of the other, enter into a contract to convey, which will be valid and binding upon the other, as would be the case with personalty.⁹

2. RIGHTS OF HUSBAND OF BENEFICIARY. So where a testator has left his realty in trust to be sold for the benefit of his daughter, it has been held that her husband could not by any act of his before the sale bar his wife's right to her share of it.¹⁰

3. CHILDREN NOT NAMED OR PROVIDED FOR IN WILL. It has been held also that where by statute¹¹ a testator is deemed to have died intestate as to any child or children not named or provided for in the will, a will which directs sale of the real estate of the testator by the executors will not work an equitable conversion of the interests of a child or children not so named or provided for.¹²

4. MORTGAGE BY BENEFICIARY. Again it has been held that where a will directs real property to be sold and the proceeds distributed, this does not work a conversion of the real estate into personalty in such a sense as to render invalid a mortgage by a distributee of the real estate as such.¹³

IX. RECONVERSION.

A. Definition. Reconversion is that imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled and the converted property restored in contemplation of law to its original state.¹⁴

B. Election of Beneficiary — 1. IN GENERAL. In the application of the doctrine of equitable conversion, it is a well-settled rule that if money is directed by a will or other instrument to be laid out in land, or land is directed to be turned into money, the party entitled to the beneficial interest may in either case, if he elects so to do, cause a reconversion of such property and take it in its original state.¹⁵

2. WHAT ACTS WILL AMOUNT TO ELECTION — a. In General. It may be stated in general that the acts or expressions declaratory of an intention on the part of the

the judgment, to take a deed thereof from the sheriff conveying the land to them as trustees for those executing the trust paper, to sell such land as soon as practicable in order to convert it into money, to execute deeds therefor, and to pay over the proceeds of sale to the beneficiaries. It was held that since such purchase by the trustees constituted an equitable conversion of the land into personalty, it was not subject to dower, in favor of the wives of any of the beneficiaries. Hunter v. Anderson, 152 Pa. St. 386, 25 Atl. 538.

9. Wilder v. Ranney, 95 N. Y. 7. Although the will directs the executors to convert land into money, such land cannot be treated as personalty and sold by one executor without the consent of the others. Crowley v. Hicks, 72 Wis. 539, 40 N. W. 151.

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Conversion," § 67.

Surplusage.—A provision in a will that if the heirs shall agree to a division of the estate among themselves the executor shall not be bound to sell does not prevent a conversion, and as this provision merely gives the parties interested in the proceeds a right which the law gives them independently of the will, the provision may be stricken from the will as surplusage, without altering its legal effect. Jones v. Caldwell, 97 Pa. St. 42.

Where the conversion has not in fact taken place, and the interest vests absolutely, whether in land or money, in one person, any act of his indicating an option in which character he takes or disposes of it will determine the succession as between his real and personal representatives. Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & F. 121, 9 Jur. 499, 8 Eng. Reprint 1344.

Where the ownership in property after conversion is or becomes vested in a person having the right to convert it from the one kind to the other, or in one having legal capacity to accept it, and who does accept it, or does something to recognize it or give it character in the shape in which it exists, the doctrine of equitable conversion is not applicable. Smith v. Bayright, 34 N. J. Eq. 424; Oberly v. Lerch, 18 N. J. Eq. 346.

Where the whole beneficial interest in the land directed to be converted into money belongs to the person or persons for whose use it is given, equity will not compel the trustee to execute the trust against the wishes of the cestui que trust, but will permit him to take the land, if he elect to do so, before the conversion has been actually made. Fluke v. Fluke, 16 N. J. Eq. 478.

16. Cropley v. Cooper, 7 D. C. 226; Beatty v. Byers, 13 Pa. St. 105; Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Meriv. 521. A testator, after giving certain legacies, devised his real estate in trust for sale and gave his residuary estate to the trustees. They paid all of the legacies except two out of other parts of the estate and kept the real estate unsold, granting a lease of it to a tenant. The real estate remained unsold for fifty years, the two legatees permitting their legacies to remain unpaid during all that time. It was held that the trustees had by their conduct elected to take the property as reconverted into real estate and that the assent of the unpaid legatees might be inferred. Mutlow v. Bigg, 1 Ch. D. 385, 45 L. J. Ch. 282, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 273, 24 Wkly. Rep. 409.

Action for recovery of land.—Where, by a direction to sell land after the death of a life-tenant, a testator converted the character of the property taken by the remainder-men from realty into personality, the subject-matter of an action by the remainder-men to recover the land is realty, as the plaintiffs, by the commencement of such action, elect to so treat their remainder, such election operating as a reconversion. De Vaughn v. McLeroy, 82 Ga. 687, 10 S. E. 211.

Declaratory acts held insufficient.—Where, before the realty devised was actually converted into personality by sale, the persons interested had no conference, and all they did or said was done and said in pleadings in a suit to have the property sold, etc., in which they simply referred to the devised property as "land" or "real estate," the decree directing the sale of which referred to the property as "land" or "real estate," it was held that there was no election or declaratory act so as to amount to a reconversion of the property into realty. Wayne v. Fouts, (Tenn. Ch. 1901) 65 S. W. 471.

17. Prentice v. Janssen, 79 N. Y. 478; Bradish v. Gee, AmbL 229, 1 Ld. Ken. 73, 27 Eng. Reprint 152.

b. Conveyance of Land By Deed. Where land is devised to be sold and the proceeds divided among certain beneficiaries, if all of such beneficiaries unite in the conveyance of the land to a third person, they thereby elect to take the land as such, and their deeds are evidence of such election.¹⁸ So where all the legatees but one unite in conveying their interest in land devised to be sold to that one, and the latter accepts such conveyance, this is an election by such beneficiary under the will to take the land instead of the proceeds thereof.¹⁹

c. Executing Mortgage. So the giving of a mortgage by the person entitled to the proceeds of the sale of land is a clear election on his part to take land.²⁰

d. Rescission of Contract For Sale. Where a conversion of real estate is effected by a contract for its sale, the rescission of the contract after the death of the vendor will not work a reconversion of the estate from personalty to realty.²¹

e. By Parol. An early English case held that an election to take money directed to be laid out in land as money might be made by parol.²²

3. ELECTION PRESUMED. It is a general rule that where equity impresses a different quality upon property from that which it has in fact, such impression ceases whenever the possession of the estate and the right to it in each quality meet in the same person; that is, when there is no other person than the one in the actual possession who has an equitable interest in retaining the fictitious character of the estate.²³

4. WHO MAY ELECT— a. In General. A person sui juris and owning the sole beneficial interest in property may elect to take the same in its actual rather than in its converted form.²⁴ Land devised in trust with directions for its sale cannot be reconverted into real estate by persons having only a defeasible title to the proceeds of sale. To effect such a reconversion there must be the concurrence of the absolute owners.²⁵

b. In Case of Realty. So where land is directed to be converted into money,

Presumption of election.—Where land was devised to be sold and the proceeds divided among certain legatees, and the executors fail for thirty years to sell it, and the legatees take no steps to compel a sale, but sell and convey their interest in the land, they will be presumed to have elected to take the land. Swan v. Goodwin, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 298. The son may, on attaining his majority, elect to treat the real estate unsold as land, and the fact that he afterward devises it as such is proof of his determination to so reconvert it. *Burr v. or money directed to be converted into land, all the parties entitled beneficially thereto have the right to take the property in its unconverted form, and thus prevent the actual conversion thereof.²⁶ In the case of land, however, the election of one of the beneficiaries alone will not change the character of the estate; all the persons so beneficially interested must join.²⁷

c. In Case of Personalty. On the other hand if a person entitled to a partial interest in money to be laid out in land shows an intention to dispose thereof by will or otherwise as personal estate, it will pass by such disposition.²⁸

d. Remainder-Men. Remainder-men and other holders of future interests cannot elect so as to affect the interests of owners of prior estates;²⁹ but they make an election binding upon their own real and personal representatives.³⁰

e. Husband For Wife. It has been held that when land is devised to be sold for money which would go by operation of law to the husband, and he should elect to take the land for his wife, and thus secure to her a right she would otherwise be deprived of, he may do so.³¹

f. Persons Not Sui Juris—(1) INFANTS. The general rule is that an infant cannot make an election so as to reconvert property from that character which the instrument converting it has impressed upon it during the continuance of such disability.³² It has been held, however, that the court may make an election for the infant, where it seems to be for his benefit.³³ land is by will directed to be sold, although the beneficiaries of the proceeds of such sale may elect to take the land itself, the act of a creditor who elects to treat the interest of a distributee in the land so converted as real estate will not be attributed to the distributee as an election by him to treat as land an interest in the estate, where the terms of the will convert such interest into personality. *Yerkes v. 6. EFFECT OF ELECTION. The doctrine of equitable conversion applies none the less because the conversion directed is of real property into real property, and so is a double conversion, first into money and then into land.⁴⁰

W. 800, where, construing a statute, inflicting a penalty on any officer, etc., who shall convert to his use or shall make way with or secrete, any portion of the public moneys, etc., the court said: "We are not aware of any technical significance the words 'make away with,' 'secrete' and 'convert' have, that would render them repugnant or inconsistent. Either of them would characterize an embezzlement, or all of them can properly unite in designating a particular embezzlement. . . . This court in State v. Flint, 62 Mo. 393, did not deem the words 'make way with' and 'secrete' repugnant. If they are not repugnant to each other they certainly are not to the expression 'convert.' Indeed, we think the statute in this case makes the word 'convert' generic, and includes within it the other two expressions as modifiers."

Distinguished from "furnish."—Where the statute provided that "If any person shall convey into any jail any disguise, instrument, arms or any other thing useful to aid any prisoner in escaping, with intent," etc., and an indictment charged that "the accused did 'furnish one K, who was then and there confined in the jail of said county, charged,' etc., 'with certain instruments,' etc., it was said: "'Furnish' and 'convey' are words of widely different meaning. To 'furnish' a thing and to 'convey' it signify very different acts. To 'furnish' is to provide, or supply to conduct;¹⁰ to import; to take to or from; to transport;¹¹ to carry or transport the thing to another person or place;¹² to assure;¹³ to grant;¹⁴ to pass; to pass a title to any thing from one person to another as by deed, assignment or otherwise;¹⁵ to transfer;¹⁶ to transfer the title or property;¹⁷ to trans-anything wanted by another; to 'convey,' is to bear, carry or transport the thing to another person or place. A person at a distance may 'furnish' the article desired, upon request by letter or otherwise, and another may 'convey' it to the person for whom it is intended. One may 'furnish,' provide or supply a person confined in jail with food, which another may 'convey into any jail' to the person therein confined. Therefore to furnish a person who is confined in jail with any thing, may, and ordinarily does mean quite a different act from what we understand by the words 'shall convey into any jail' any thing." Francis v. State, 21 Tex. 280, 285.

D. 393, 402, where it is said: "The word 'convey' by itself does not shew much; it is a word of general meaning, denoting any act by which real property is passed from one person to another—a rather more modern term, I believe, than 'assure,' but having the same meaning."

15. Webster Dict. [quoted in Spicer v. Norton, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 542, 546].

The word "convey," if it imply a written instrument, refers to a deed of land. Brown v. Fitz, 13 N. H. 283, 285.

A contract to make a "deed" or to "convey," implies that the conveyance shall give the vendee a sufficient title, in view of the provisions of the statute defining what a deed must contain. Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 12, 13.

Mining lease.—An instrument which purports to lease and "convey" for a term of years all the coal on or under certain described land is a mining lease, and authorizes the lessee to take out all the coal he can mine on the premises during the term, and is not an absolute conveyance of all the coal in the land. The court said: "We are not of opinion that the word 'convey' should be allowed to overthrow the operation of the word 'lease' which precedes it." Austin v. Huntsville Coal, etc., Co., 72 Mo. 535, 541, 37 Am. Rep. 446, 36 Am. Rep. 770 note.

Distinguished from "assign."—Where the executors under a will were directed to divide the real and personal property into four equal shares, and were also directed "'to convey, pay and assign' three of the shares," etc., the court said: "The use of the word 'convey,' apt to pass realty, and the word 'assign,' usual in the disposition of personalty not reduced to money, must strongly negative the idea of an absolute direction for conversion" of the property, etc. Story v. Palmer, 46 N. J. Eq. 1, 8 18 Atl. 363.

Distinguished from "bequeath," "give," "devise."—"The term 'convey' is a technical term, long known and used in deeds conveying real estate and never known or used in a will or devise, any more than the terms 'bequeath' or 'devise' are used in a deed. The term 'give' is used in devises and deeds, because a gift may be by deed as well as by devise. To call a devise therefore a conveyance violates all propriety of legal language." Jenckes v. Smithfield Probate Ct., 2 R. I. 255, 256.

"Convey and devise."—A statute provided: "Any married female may take, by inheritance, gift, &c., and hold to her sole and separate use, and convey and devise, real and personal property," etc. It was said: "A married woman may 'convey and devise' real and personal property as if she were unmarried. . . . She may convey and devise her real and personal estate, but her promissory note or other personal engagement is void, as it always was by the rules of the common law." Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265, 271, 72 Am. Dec. 503.

Power to sell and power to convey distinguished.—"A person may give another authority to sell land without giving him authority to execute conveyances, or he may give him power to execute conveyances without the power to make sales, or he may give him power to do both. Authority to convey can only be given by deed, while authority to sell may be given by parol, and, until a recent statute, even verbally." Dayton v. Nell, 43 Minn. 246, 247, 45 N. W. 231.

17. Burrill Dict. [quoted in Lambert v. Smith, 9 Oreg. 185, 193].

An instrument which "transfers" an interest in land "conveys such interest." Lembeck, etc., Eagle Brewing Co. v. Kelly, 63 N. J. Eq. 401, 408, 51 Atl. 794.

Disposition of trust property by wife.—By a deed of settlement it was stipulated that the wife should be permitted to make what disposition of the trust property she might choose, and that she might have the entire and absolute control over it, and dispose of the same by deed, will or otherwise, at her pleasure. The trustee covenanted to convey the said estates and property as she should direct. The court said: "The term 'convey' must have been used as well in reference fer title from one person to another;¹⁸ to transfer the title of land from one person or class of persons to another;¹⁹ to transfer the legal title to real estate from the present owner to another.²⁰ (See CONVEYANCE; CONVEYANCER; CONVEYANCING)

CONVEYANCE.²¹ As defined by statute, every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real estate is created, aliened, mortgaged or assigned, or by which the title to any real estate may be affected in law or equity, except last wills and testaments, leases for a term not exceeding three years, and executory contracts for the sale or purchase of lands.²² At common law, the term "conveyance" has been defined to mean an instrument in writing by which property, or the title to property, is conveyed or transmitted from one person to another;²³ to the personal as to the real estate." Leaycraft v. Hedden, 4 N. J. Eq. 512, 552.

18. Lambert v. Smith, 9 Oreg. 185, 193 (where it is said: "This is giving the same legal effect to the word convey as grant, which has 'become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property'"); Edelman v. Yeakel, 27 Pa. St. 26, 29 [quoted in Chapman v. Charter, 46 W. Va. 769, 779, 34 S. E. 768].

19. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Nickell v. Tomlinson, 27 W. Va. 697, 720].

"The word 'convey' is appropriate to the transfer of real property and entirely inappropriate to the transfer of personal estate." Thompson v. Hart, 58 N. Y. App. Div. 439, 449, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 223.

The words "convey and devise" are technical terms relating to the disposition of interests in real property. It could not be technically or legally correct to speak of conveying personal property by a verbal sale of it, or of devising it by a last will and testament. Real property may be conveyed by deed or devised by will. Dickerman v. Abrahams, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 551, 561, dissenting opinion.

21. Derived apparently from the French convoyer, to accompany (con, with; voie, Latin via, a way); hence to convoy, take safely from one place to another, convey. "Conveyance" in the sense of a transfer of property seems to be a comparatively modern term, the old word being "ASSURANCE," q. v. Coke used "conveyance," as signifying that part of a pleading which serves as an explanation or introduction to the material facts. Sweet L. Dict.

There is no magical meaning in the word "conveyance." Credland v. Potter, L. R. 10 Ch. 8, 12, 44 L. J. Ch. 169, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 522, 23 Wkly. Rep. 36.

It is a technical or quasi-technical word of precise and definite import. Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 226, 245.

The meaning of this word being well understood at common law, it must be understood in the same sense when used in a statute. Kelly v. Fleming, 113 N. C. 133, 138, 18 S. E. 81 [quoting Smithdeal v. Wilkerson, 100 N. C. 52, 53, 6 S. E. 71].

Applied in a bankruptcy case.—Where it was alleged that the transfer and removal of certain goods constituted an act of bankruptcy, under the federal statutes which provided that "if any merchant, &c., shall, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, secretly convey his goods out of his house, . . . or make, or cause to be made, any fraudulent conveyance of his lands or chattels, &c., every such person shall be deemed and adjudged a bankrupt," it was said: "This conveyance was not, in the opinion of the Court, a conveyance of chattels in the technical sense, or according to the legal construction of the clause cited from the statute. Whatever may be the loose and popular sense, or possible applications, of the term conveyance, the legislature are not understood to speak in an indeterminate manner; especially if that construction would violate any general principle of jurisprudence. For, in making a statute, the legis-

a sale;²⁴ a transfer;²⁵ the act or the instrument, by which property in real estate is transferred;²⁶ the transfer of the title of land from one person, or class of persons, to another;²⁷ or, by one person to another person;²⁸ a deed which passes or conveys land from one man to another;²⁹ an instrument which carries from one person to another person an interest in land;³⁰ a contract under lature are understood to refer themselves to existing customs and rules, or, in other words, when using technical terms, to employ them in a precise and technical sense. The same term conveyance is used in speaking of the transfer of lands and of chattels; and different meanings must be given to the same word to apply it to the transaction in question. In this respect the variance from the British statute operates against the construction contended for by the plaintiff. There this act of bankruptcy is described by the terms grant or conveyance of lands or goods. And if the term conveyance were less technical than grant, they might be applied respectively to the subjects, reddendo singula singulis. But in the statute of the United States, the same word is made use of, to describe a transfer of both species of property." Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. 487, 510 [quoted in Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 18, 2 Atl. 130, 57 Am. Rep. 780, where it was determined, that the word "conveyance" in the bankrupt law of 1800 referred to a deed of land, and not to a bill of sale of personal property].

Forged order for diploma.—Where a statute provided that "he is guilty of forgery who, without lawful authority, and with intent to injure or defraud, shall make a false instrument in writing," etc., it was said that a forged letter asking for the delivery of a diploma of an educational institution was not a "conveyance" within the legal definition of that word. Alexander v. State, 28 Tex. App. 186, 12 S. W. 595.

Compared with "confirmation."—Where a statute provided that, on the completion by a company of a certain number of miles of railroad, patents of land should be issued "confirming" to the company the right and title to said lands, etc., and also, on the performance of certain conditions, patents should be issued "conveying" to the company additional sections of land, etc., the court said: "Conveyance, . . . is the generic term, of which confirmation is the species. Its operative words include those of a feoffment, which is also a species of a conveyance. We think, therefore, that when the word 'conveying' was used in the latter portion of section 4, it was employed as synonymous with the language used in the first portion thereof, viz., 'confirming the right and title.'" Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Majors, 5 Mont. 111, 139, 2 Pac. 322.

Wife's separate estate.—Where a statute provided that no conveyance or encumbrance for the separate debts of the husband shall be binding on the wife, beyond the amount of her income, the court said: "The legislative intention is that she shall not, beyond the income, make her property a security for her husband's debt, either by 'conveyance or incumbrance;' that is, by any form of instrument by which, under the law, a lien or hypothecation can be treated. It will be observed that the word 'conveyance' is separated by the disjunction 'or' from 'incumbrance.' These words are not used to convey the same idea. Conveyance, being a general word, comprehends the several modes of passing title to real estate." Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 90, 104 [citing Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 226, 245].

27. Black L. Dict. [quoted in Argand Refining Co. v. Quinn, 39 W. Va. 535, 543, 20 S. E. 576]; Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 90, 105].

Not apt in passing chattel interest.—The word "conveyance" does not, when standing without assistance in a statute, signify its applicability to the passing of a chattel interest in realty. Sullivan v. Barry, 46 N. J. L. 1, 6 [citing Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38; Tone v. Brace, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 597, 598].

Distinguished from "grantor."—As "grantor" is the most comprehensive word to signify one who conveys lands, so "conveyance" is the common statute word to intend the deed. Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 438, 472.

The distinction between a conveyance by deed and will is patent. The one is completed by the act, and the other does not become effective until the death of the maker. Caldwell v. Bowman, 1 Tenn. Cas. 601 [quoted in Macrae v. Macrae, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 57 S. W. 423].

May be synonymous with "deed."—Where a statute used the words "by deed or conveyance" in respect to the devise of lands, it was said: "The terms 'deed or conveyance' appear to have been used in that section as synonymous terms, or the legislature may have intended the term 'deed' to apply to lands, and 'conveyance' to personalty, when it says 'that any deed or conveyance of any land or of personalty that may be made to any bishop, &c.'" Baker v. Clark, 7 U. C. Q. B. 44, 59.

The instrument itself is called a conveyance. Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 226, 245 [quoted in Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 90, 105].

Applied under homestead act.—Where a seal.³¹ In the narrower sense of the word, it signifies the instrument employed to effectuate an ordinary purchase of freehold land (e. g. the modern deed), as opposed to settlements, wills, leases, partitions, etc.³² In respect to transportation, that by which anything is conveyed or transported, or which serves as means or way of statute provided that "any grant or conveyance which he (the claimant) may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, shall be null and void," etc., the court said: "Mortgages, always in form conveyances, were then regarded by the profession generally more as conveyances, and subject to the laws and conditions of conveyances, than at present. . . . It seems more reasonable that by these terms, 'grant and conveyance,' was intended all forms of conveyance, whether absolute, as a warranty deed, or upon condition, as a trust deed or mortgage." Brewster v. Madden, 15 Kan. 249, 251 [quoted in Norris v. Heald, 12 Mont. 282, 289, 29 Pac. 1121, 3 Am. St. Rep. 581].

31. Grubbe v. Grubbe, 26 Oreg. 363, 370, 38 Pac. 182, where it is said: "But there is often a difference between the power of contract and the power of making conveyances."

"Deeds or conveyances" exclude writings not under seal. Hutchinson v. Bramhall, 42 N. J. Eq. 372, 384, 7 Atl. 873.

32. Rapalje & L. L. Dict. [quoted in Brigham v. Kenyon, 76 Fed. 30, 33].

The term "deed or conveyance of lands, tenements, and hereditaments" means what it signified under the old rule of the common law, viz., a deed or conveyance of a freehold estate, such estate as must be conveyed by deed, and not a lease for years, which may be passed by writing not under seal. Hutchinson v. Bramhall, 42 N. J. Eq. 372, 384, 7 Atl. 873.

The word "conveyance" has been applied to an antenuptial contract (Aultman v. Petts, 59 Mich. 482, 487, 26 N. W. 680), an assignment for the benefit of creditors (Haug v. Detroit Third Nat. Bank, 77 Mich. 474, 480, 43 N. W. 939), an assignment of a real-estate mortgage (Merrill v. Luce, 6 S. D. 354, 360, 61 N. W. 43, 55 Am. St. Rep. 844; *Butler v. 33. Van Bokkelen v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 34 N. Y. App. Div. 399, 401, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 307.

Applied to transportation of passengers or freight.—In Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 458, 462, 53 Pac. 918, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49, 41 L. R. A. 467, an insurance policy qualified the liability of the insurer by a provision exempting it from liability while the insured was in or on any conveyance not provided for transportation of passengers. The court said: "The term 'conveyance' applies as well to the means of transporting freight as of passengers, and in the clause exempting the insurance company from liability for accidents occurring in 'entering or trying to enter or leave a moving conveyance using steam as a motive power' is so applied; while the clause here under consideration distinguishes a 'conveyance provided for the transportation of passengers' from those used for the transportation of freight. Neither clause specifies railroad trains, and each includes as clearly vessels propelled by steam." Where a life-insurance policy provided that "if such injuries are sustained while riding as a passenger in any passenger conveyance, . . . the amount to be paid shall be double the sum specified." The court said: "But where the liability is confined to a case where the passenger was injured when 'in any passenger conveyance,' it would seem to exclude an injury received by a person when riding otherwise than inside of a passenger conveyance." Van Bokkelen v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 34 N. Y. App. Div. 399, 401, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 307. And where an insurance policy provided that the death must be "caused by an accident while traveling by public or private conveyance provided for the transportation of passengers," it was held that a locomotive or engine was embraced within this clause of the policy, as the insurance ticket was sold to a person known to be an engineer. The court said: "A passenger would have no right to go upon an engine, and if he was so indiscreet as to venture on such a place, and injury ensued, he would not be protected. But this ticket was designed to include and cover something more than the ordinary risk incurred by the passenger or traveler. The locomotive is a necessary part of the conveyance." Brown v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 45 Mo. 221, 225.

"Public and private conveyance."—Public conveyance naturally suggests a vessel or vehicle employed in the general conveyance of passengers. Private conveyance suggests a vehicle belonging to a private individual. Ripley v. Hartford Pass. Assur. Co., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 336, 479, 21 L. ed. 469. And see Oswego v. Collins, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 171, 172, where an omnibus is declared not to be a "public conveyance." See also Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591, 595. And where an accident-insurance policy provided an indemnity to the insured "while traveling by public or private conveyance" and he was injured by highwaymen, the court said: "The term 'private-conveyance,' used as a compound word, has no precise or definite meaning, while the word 'private' pertains to persons, and the word 'conveyance' to any means by which persons or things are transported. Hence, self-locomotion is strictly private conveyance. And, finally, that the terms of the policy are 'traveling by,' not 'traveling in,' private or public conveyance." Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,854.

CONVEYANCER. Every person, other than one having paid the special tax as a lawyer or claim agent, whose business it is to draw deeds, bonds, mortgages, wills, writs, or other legal papers, or to examine titles to real estate.³⁶ Now generally means a barrister who chiefly devotes himself to the practice of conveyancing or combines it with equity drafting.³⁷

CONVEYANCING. A term including both the science and act of transferring titles to real estate from one man to another.³⁸

CONVEYANCING COUNSEL TO THE COURT OF CHANCERY. Certain counsel, not less than six in number, appointed by the lord chancellor, for the purpose of assisting the court of chancery, or any judge thereof, with their opinion in matters of title and conveyancing.³⁹

CONVEYER. In old English law, to derive title; to derive by descent. To show in pleading.⁴⁰

CONVICIUM. In the civil law, the name of a species of slander or injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bonos mores.⁴² (See, generally, LIBEL AND SLANDER.)

CONVICT. To condemn; to find guilty of an offense [usually] by the verdict of a jury;⁴³ to prove or find guilty of an offense or crime charged; to pronounce guilty as by legal decision;⁴⁴ to find against a defendant in a civil case.⁴⁵ (Convict: As a noun, see CONVICTS. See CONVICTED; CONVICTION.)

CONVICTED. Found guilty of the crime whereof one stands indicted.⁴⁶ The word "convicted" is sometimes used to mean that a judgment of final condem-

Conveyancing is that part of the lawyer's business which relates to the alienation and transmission of property and other rights from one person to another, and to the framing of legal documents intended to create, define, transfer, or extinguish rights. It therefore includes the investigation of the title to land, and the preparation of agreements, wills, articles of association, private statutes operating as conveyances, and many other instruments in addition to conveyances properly so called. 45. Burrill L. Dict. And compare Reagh v. Spann, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 100, 107, where it is said: "The word convicted, as expressed in the statute, must be taken to mean convicted on the trial of the penal action of debt for the recovery of the penalty, and cannot mean a previous conviction on an indictment."

46. Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in Eagan v. Jones, 21 Nev. 433, 32 Pac. 929]. And see Messner v. People, 45 N. Y. 1, 12.

"Convicted" means when a person has been indicted by a grand jury, tried by a court and jury, and found guilty of the offense charged in the indictment. Eagan v. Jones, 21 Nev. 433, 32 Pac. 929.

"Convictus,—he that is found guilty of an offense by verdict of a jury." Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 179, 8 Pac. 829].

"If the jury find him [the accused] guilty, he is then said to be convicted of the crime whereof he stands indicted." 4 Bl. Comm. 262. These words of Blackstone have been quoted in the following cases:

Compared with "conviction."—"With respect to some purposes and consequences, the words 'convicted' and 'conviction,' when used in a statute, mean no more than the judicial ascertainment of guilt by verdict or plea." Com. v. Miller, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 35, 39. See also Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420, 422, where it is said: "The words 'conviction' and 'convicted' describe the same condition of the offender."

"When the statute says, 'convicted as if such larceny . . . had been committed in this state,' the word 'convicted' includes the accusation and the trial. And, if the statute in terms had said such a defendant may be charged, tried, convicted, and punished in the same manner as if such larceny had been committed in this state, the error of defendant's contention as to lack of jurisdiction would be palpable; yet such is the fair significance of the word 'convicted,' as used in the section of the code." People v. Black, 122 Cal. 73, 75, 54 Pac. 385.

Distinguished from "attainted."—"There is a great difference between a man convicted and attainted, though they are frequently, though inaccurately, confounded together." Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 179, 8 Pac. 829; Blair v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 850, 853]. "Attainder is larger than conviction; a man is convicted when he is found guilty by verdict or confesses the crime before judgment had, but not attainted till judgment is also passed on him." Coke Litt. 390 [quoted in Reg. v. Hinks, Den. C. C. 84, 87]. "A felon was convicted by the verdict of a jury; he was attainted by the judgment rendered on the verdict." Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406, 419]. "The difference between a man attainted and convicted is, that a man is said to be convict before he hath judgment; as if a man be convict by confession, verdict or recreancy. And when he hath his judgment upon the verdict, confession or recreancy, or upon outlawry or abjuration, then he is said to be attainted." 1 Coke Inst. 391 [quoted in Quintard v. Knoedler, 53 Conn. 485, 487, 2 Atl. 752, 55 Am. Rep. 149, and cited in Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 178, 8 Pac. 829; U. S. v. Watkinds, 6 Fed. 152, 158, 7 Sawy. 85].

v. People, 51 Ill. 311 [quoted in State v. Barnes, 24 Fla. 153, 4 So. 560; State v. Townley, 147 Mo. 205, 208, 48 S. W. 833], it was held that a person cannot be said to be convicted of a crime so as to render him incapable of giving testimony until judgment is rendered on a verdict of guilty, for not until then is he "convicted" by law. And in Gallagher v. State, 10 Tex. App. 469, 472 [quoted in State v. Townley, 147 Mo. 205, 208, 48 S. W. 833], it was said that the word "convicted . . . has a definite signification in law. It means that a judgment of final condemnation has been pronounced against the accused. . . . To say that a party had been 'convicted' and then add, that he stood his trial and that 'judgment final' was rendered against him would be tautology." The same rule was announced in Rex v. Turner, 15 East 570 [cited in State v. Townley, 147 Mo. 205, 208, 48 S. W. 833].

48. "The term conviction, as its composition (convincio, convictio) sufficiently indicates, signifies the act of convicting or overcoming one, and in criminal procedure the overthrow of the defendant by the establishment of his guilt according to some known legal mode." U. S. v. Watkinds, 6 Fed. 152, 158, 7 Sawy. 85.

Under a statute giving the district attorney certain fees for convictions, a conviction is meant in which the district attorney or his deputy took some part, either by the institution of the proceedings by being present or aiding at the trial, or in some other way performing some service as district attorney. *Edwards v. "Conviction may accrue in two ways, either by his [defendant's] confessing the offense and pleading guilty or by his being found so by the verdict of his country." 4 Bl. Comm. 362 [quoted in Healey v. Martin, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 243, 248, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 413; Burgess v. Boeteleur, 8 Jur. 621, 625, 13 L. J. M. C. 122, 7 M. & G. 481, 8 Scott N. R. 194, 49 E. C. L. 481]. Conviction is on confession or verdict. 6 Dane Abr. 534, 536. [quoted in Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 328, 12 Am. St. Rep. 699]. Crompton saith that conviction is either when a man is outlawed, or appeareth and confesseth, or is found guilty by the inquest; and when a statute excludes from clergy persons found guilty of felony, etc., it extends to those who are convicted by confession. 2 Crompton Just. 9 [quoted in Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 179, 8 Pac. 829; Blair v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 850, 853]. So a plea of guilty by defendant constitutes a conviction of him. Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 8 Pac. 829 [quoting Jacob L. Dict.]; Bishop Stat. Cr. § 348 [quoted in Quintard v. Knoedler, 53 Conn. 485, 487, 2 Atl. 752, 55 Am. Rep. 149]. Compare Blair v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 850, 853.

Distinguished from "judgment" or "sentence."—"The ordinary legal meaning of 'conviction,' when used to designate a particular stage of a criminal prosecution triable by a jury, is the confession of the accused in open court, or 'the verdict returned against him by the jury, which ascertains and publishes the fact of his guilt; while 'judgment' or 'sentence' is the appropriate word to denote the action of the court before which the trial is had, declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact thus ascertained." Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 325, 12 Am. Rep. 699 [cited or quoted in Quintard v. Knoedler, 53 Conn. 485, 487, 2 Atl. 752, 55 Am. Rep. 149; State v. Barnes, 24 Fla. 153, 4 So. 560; *State v. See also Faunce v. People, 51 Ill. 311, 312, where this language appears: "What is a conviction? Is it the verdict of guilty, or is it the sentence or judgment rendered on such a verdict? I. DEFINITION.

A convict is one who has been condemned by a competent court; one who has been convicted of a crime or misdemeanor.¹ The term is a broad one and is not confined to those who have been convicted of felonies or misdemeanors under the general laws, but applies also to those who have been convicted of violating municipal ordinances.² And a person committed to prison upon a summary conviction or in default of payment of a penalty or fine adjudged to be paid upon such conviction is to be regarded as a criminal prisoner.³

II. STATUS OF THE CONVICT.

A. Attainder at Common Law — 1. IN GENERAL. By the ancient common law when sentence was pronounced for treason or other felony the offender was, by operation of law, placed in a state of attainder.⁴ And there were three principal incidents consequent upon such attainder, namely, forfeiture, corruption of blood, and an extinction of civil rights more or less complete which was denominated civil death.⁵

1. Bouvier L. Dict. See also Abbott L. Dict.; Century Dict.; Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 179, 8 Pac. 829.

Another definition is: "He that is found guilty of an offense by verdict of a jury." Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Ex p. Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 179, 8 Pac. 829].

"An accused person is termed a 'convict' after final condemnation by the highest court of resort which by law has jurisdiction of his case, and to which he may have thought proper to appeal." Tex. Pen. Code, art. 27 [quoted in Arcia v. State, 26 Tex. App. 193, 205, 9 S. W. 685].

"All the definitions of the words 'convict' and 'conviction,' as asserted by the defendant's counsel, in the English lexicons and law dictionaries in general use, as well as by the chief text writers, agree in including within the term convict every person duly found guilty by a legal tribunal of a crime, whether it be a misdemeanor or a felony." Cameron v. Tribune Assoc., 3 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 575, 581, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 739, 27 N. Y. St. 907 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.; Burrill L. Dict.; Stormouth Eng. Dict.; Webster Eng. Dict.; Worcester Unabr. Dict.].

That a person is a "convict" necessarily means that he has been duly tried and found guilty of some offense against the law and is subject to punishment, and it must be presumed that he was properly sentenced by the court in which his case was tried. Taylor v. State, 108 Ga. 384, 34 S. E. 2.

Under immigration laws.—An alien remains a convict within the meaning of the federal act regulating immigration, although he has served the full term of imprisonment imposed in the country whence he came. In re Aliano, 43 Fed. 517; In re Varana, 43 Fed. 517.

A person committed to prison under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, § 32, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, § 26, for acting as a solicitor without being duly qualified, is a criminal prisoner within 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, § 4. *Osborne v. 2. FORFEITURE. Forfeiture was a part of the punishment for the crime, said to have been of Saxon origin, by which the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the attainted felon were forfeited to the crown, the former absolutely on conviction and the latter perpetually or during the life of the offender, after sentence and office found.⁶

3. CORRUPTION OF BLOOD. The doctrine of corruption of blood was of feudal origin and was introduced after the Norman Conquest. The blood of the attainted person was deemed to be corrupted and stained, so that he could not transmit his estate to his heirs, nor could they take by descent from the ancestor. The crime of the attainted felon was deemed a breach of the implied condition of the original donation of the feud, dum bene se gesserit, and such donation was thereby determined, and his lands escheated to the lord, but this escheat was subordinate to the prior and superior law of forfeiture to the crown, unless the king was the immediate lord of the fee; in which case the distinction became immaterial.⁷ And an attainted person, although pardoned, could not take by descent, for nothing short of an act of parliament could remove the effects of the attainder.⁸

4. CIVIL DEATH. The incident of civil death attended every attainder of treason or other felony, whereby in the language of Lord Coke the attainted person "is disabled to bring any action, for he is extra legem positus, and is accounted in law civiliter mortuus,"⁹ or as stated by Chitty, "he is disqualified from being a witness, can bring no action, nor perform any legal function, he is, in short, regarded as dead in law."¹⁰ He could be heard in court only for the direct purpose of reversing the attainder, and not in prosecution of a civil right;¹¹ but although he could not sue he might be sued,¹² and his body could be taken in execution, subject, however, to the paramount claims of public justice.¹³ He was not incapacitated to make a contract, but he could make no contract which he Goods forfeited, although clergy allowed.—A man, by a conviction of felony, although allowed his clergy, forfeited his goods. Finch's Case, 6 Coke 63a.

No forfeiture before conviction.—After the commission of a felony and before conviction the guilty party could make a valid sale or assignment of his personal property, provided it was made in good faith. Chowne v. Baylis, 31 Beav. 351, 8 Jur. N. S. 1028, 31 L. J. Ch. 757, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 739, 11 Wkly. Rep. 5; Whitaker v. Wisbey, 12 C. B. 44, 16 Jur. 411, 21 L. J. C. P. 116, 74 E. C. No forfeiture of lands until office found.—The attainted person was not divested of his lands till office found. Thus in Nichols v. Nichols, Plowd. 477, 486, the question was put, "If the possession in deed or law, of the lands of a person attainted of treason, should not be in the king before office found, in whom should it be by the course of the common law, in the life of the person attainted?" And it was held that the freehold of such lands would be, in fact, in the person attainted, so long as he should live; "for, as he hath capacity to take in deed lands by a new purchase, so hath he power to retain his an-

Property of the wife.—In Coombes v. Queen's Proctor, 16 Jur. 820, 2 Rob. Eccl. 547, it appeared that the wife of a felon under sentence of transportation died intestate leaving property acquired after the conviction of her husband, and it was held that such property belonged to the crown as accrued to the felon. But the wife could make a will and in all things act as a feme sole. Newsome v. Bowyer, 3 P. Wms. 37, 24 Eng. Reprint 959; Portland v. Prodders, 2 Vern. 104.

could enforce in a court of justice.¹⁴ He could be grantor or grantee after attainder, and the grant would be good as against all persons except the king.¹⁵ So also it seems that he could devise his lands, subject only to the right of entry for the forfeiture.¹⁶ And he could demise his lands before office found.¹⁷ A right of action for damages was not forfeited to the crown upon conviction;¹⁸ and if a personal wrong were done to an attainted person during his attainder he might, after being pardoned, have an action for it.¹⁹

B. Status Fixed by Statute — 1. IN ENGLAND. By a series of English statutes the whole doctrine of attainder, corruption of blood, and forfeiture, except forfeiture consequent upon outlawry, has been swept away, and provision is made for the administration of the estate of the convicted felon by trustees for the benefit of his creditors and the support of his family. The real property of the traitor or felon remains his own, subject to the temporary estate of the trustees, and he may dispose of it by will, but he is incapable of alienating or charging his property or of making any contract.²⁰

2. IN THE UNITED STATES — a. In General. The constitution of the United States provides that congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted.²¹ Consequently only the life-estate of the person for whose offense land is seized is subject to condemnation and sale, and nothing more is within the jurisdiction or judicial power of the court, and it follows that a decree condemning the fee can have no greater effect than to subject the life-estate to sale.²² And it appears that the forfeitures and disabilities imposed by the common law upon persons attainted of treason or felony are at present unknown to the laws of the United States, and a conviction is followed by no consequences except those that are declared by statute.²³

b. Civil Death. Accordingly it is held that a person under sentence of imprisonment for life is not civilly dead unless the statute so provides;²⁴ but in a number of the states there are statutes declaring in substance that a person convicted of a felony and sentenced to imprisonment for life shall be deemed and taken to be civilly dead.²⁵ This disability, however, continues only during the imprisonment. The effect of a pardon is to acquit the offender of the penalties annexed to the conviction and to give him a new credit and capacity.²⁶ And there are other statutes declaring that a sentence to imprisonment in the state prison for a term less than for life shall suspend during such term the civil rights of the person so sentenced;²⁷ and an escape during the term does not remove that disability.²⁸ These statutes apply to sentences in the state courts only and not to those in the federal courts;²⁹ and they do not apply to convicts confined in county penitentiaries or jails,³⁰ or in state reformatories.³¹

c. Property and Conveyances. Inasmuch as a convicted felon might be sued at common law, and, unless the statute provides other means of reaching his property, still may be sued, the law would not be consistent with itself if it held the party alive for the purpose of being sued and charged in execution, and yet dead for the purpose of transmitting his estate to his heirs.³² It is accordingly held that a conviction and sentence to life imprisonment do not operate, eo instanti, to divest the title of the offender to his property;³³ and he may dispose of it by will, although he be sentenced to death.³⁴ Consequently letters of administration cannot be granted on his estate,³⁵ for his conviction and sentence do not operate a devolution of his property to the persons who would be his heirs at law in case of his physical death,³⁶ unless the law makes provision, in case he is sentenced for life, for the administration and disposal of his estate the same as if he were naturally dead.³⁷ It has been held, however, that civil death imports a deprivation of all rights whose exercise or enjoyment depends upon some provision of positive law, and that a person who is civilly dead under the statute is consequently deprived of his right of inheritance.³⁸ Under statutes providing for a suspension of civil rights during imprisonment for terms less than for life, the offender is not divested of title to his property, although he is sometimes deprived of the control of it by the appointment of trustees to manage it during his term of imprisonment. Where this is the case he may not alienate or encumber his lands during the term of his sentence to imprisonment;³⁹ but he may devise his estate as though he were not convicted,⁴⁰ and he may accept a devise of an estate upon condition.⁴¹ And in cases where the statute is silent on the subject he may take or convey an estate by grant or devise,⁴² and upon his discharge or release from

Everett*, supra, it appeared that the testator devised his lands to his wife for life or during her widowhood, remainder in fee to his son, with a substituted remainder in fee to his nephew in case his son died without issue. The widow died, and the son remaining unmarried and without issue was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for life. It was contended on the part of the plaintiff that the civil death of the son divested his estate and let in the substituted remainder of the nephew, but the court decided against the plaintiff's contention on the double ground that the civil death of the son did not divest the title to his property, and that by the true construction of the will the natural death of the son without issue was

Kan. Gen. Stat. (1899), § 5583, providing that when a person shall be imprisoned under a sentence of imprisonment for life, his estate, property, and effects shall be administered and disposed of in all respects as if he were naturally dead, does not cast the descent of his property on his heirs, by the fact of such sentence and imprisonment. *Smith v. imprisonment so much of his estate as has not been legally disposed of reverts to him.⁴³

d. Contracts Generally. In the absence of statutory inhibition one under sentence of imprisonment for life may make a contract which is enforceable against his estate, although he may not be able to enforce it with the aid of the courts.⁴⁴

e. Actions by Convicts. Where a conviction works no forfeiture of estate, a convict may maintain an action to enforce his property rights,⁴⁵ or for personal injuries received during his imprisonment.⁴⁶ And although he be imprisoned for life he should sue in his own name; it is improper to join another party plaintiff as prochein ami.⁴⁷ Even a conviction and sentence to death in one state will not deprive the convict of his right to sue in the courts of another state.⁴⁸ Where, however, the statute deprives one sentenced to state prison of the right to maintain an action, the disability continues during the time of the sentence, although he has escaped.⁴⁹

f. Actions Against Convicts. By the great weight of authority, offenders, whether sentenced to state prison for life or for a term of years during which their civil rights are suspended, are still liable to be sued, and this liability necessarily carries with it the right to defend;⁵⁰ although there are cases holding that a pending action is abated by the conviction and sentence of the defendant to imprisonment in the state prison.⁵¹ But again it has been held that a plea or answer in abatement setting up the civil death of the defendant is inconsistent

44. Stephani v. Lent, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 346, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 471. In Miller v. Finkle, 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 374, it seems to have been assumed that one sentenced for a felony to state prison could not transfer his personal property, but the point was not necessary to the decision, for the sentence was vacated and the prisoner was resentenced, and the transfer of property having been made while the prisoner was under the vacated sentence was held valid.

Thus a statute prohibiting a convict from making any conveyance of his property or any part thereof during imprisonment does not prevent his executing an appeal-bond in a case in which he is interested as appellant. Kenyon v. Saunders, 18 R. I. 590, 30 Atl. 470, 26 L. R. A. 232.

Citizenship of convict.—The fact that a citizen of a state is by judgment of a federal court confined to prison in another state does not make him a citizen of the latter state, so that a suit against him in the place of his former residence may be removed from the state court. Guarantee Co. of North America v. Lynchburg First Nat. Bank, 95 Va. 480, 28 S. E. 909.

There is some confusion in the New York cases. Thus in Davis v. Duffie, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 617, it was held that the conviction and sentence to the state prison of a party defendant do not abate the action, and in Bonnell v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 218, it was held that judgment by default might be entered against one sentenced after issue joined. This is probably the better and bad on demurrer, because the fact that he is able to plead or answer shows him to be alive.⁵² Where the statute provides for the appointment of a trustee of the estate of one imprisoned for crime, it is clear that such trustee should defend any action against the convict that may be pending at the time of his conviction and sentence, and proceedings ought to be stayed until after his appointment and qualification.⁵³

g. Service of Process on Convicts. In the absence of any statutory provision on the subject process may be served personally on a convict confined in prison,⁵⁴ and a governor or warden of a prison who refuses to permit such service renders himself liable to attachment for contempt.⁵⁵ Personal service on the convict, however, is not always necessary. It has been held that service on the warden or keeper of the prison is sufficient.⁵⁶ So also it seems that a substituted service by leaving a true copy at his place of residence with an adult member of his family may be sufficient.⁵⁷

h. As to Other Crimes — (i) DOCTRINE OF AUTREFOIS ATTAINT. By the early common law, as we have seen, whenever a man was attainted of felony by sentence of death, his goods and chattels, lands and tenements were forfeited to the crown, and he was deemed as civilly dead. As any further prosecution under such circumstances would be a useless and superfluous proceeding, it was considered that a plea of autrefois attain, or former attainder, was a good plea in bar for the same or any other felony except treason.⁵⁸ And in an early American case this common-law doctrine was so far recognized as to hold that a conviction, judgment, and execution upon one indictment for a felony not capital was a bar to all other indictments for felonies not capital, committed previous to such conviction, judgment, and execution.⁵⁹ In England this doctrine has been swept away by a statute which provides that no plea setting forth any attainder shall be pleaded in bar of any indictment, unless the attainder be for the same offense as that charged in the indictment;⁶⁰ and the doctrine has generally been repudiated by American courts without the aid of legislation.⁶¹

opinion. See Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 18 N. E. 148, 18 N. Y. St. 213, 6 Am. Rep. 368, 1 L. R. A. 264.

Foreclosure proceedings.—It seems, however, that the appointment of a trustee is not necessary in order to foreclose a mortgage on the convict's property, as such appointment would not dispense with the necessity of making him a party to the action of foreclosure. David v. Duffie, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 617.

Where pending a civil action the defendant was sentenced to the state prison, and the plaintiff, without the appointment of a trustee to manage the estate or defend the action, took judgment by default, it was held that the judgment was a nullity and might be set aside by proper proceedings before the trial court. Rice County v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 158.

The exceptions, as enumerated by Blackstone, were, where the former attainder was reversed, where the attainder was upon indictment it was no bar to an appeal, cases of treason, and where a person attainted of one felony was afterward indicted as principal in another to which there were accessories, for the accessories could not be prosecuted until after the conviction of the principal. 4 Bl. Comm. 336.

59. Crenshaw v. State, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 122, 17 Am. Dec. 788. In State v. Fayetteville Com'rs, 6 N. C. 371, it appeared that the defendants were bound to keep all the streets of an incorporated town in good condition, and several indictments were found for the neglect of different streets. After one conviction the court sustained the plea of autrefois convict as a bar to the other indictments.

61. Singleton v. State, 71 Miss. 782, 16 So. 295, 42 Am. St. Rep. 488. Thus in Hawkins v. State, 1 Port. (Ala.) 475, 27 Am. Dec. 641, it was held that a person indicted for autrefois attainé has no place in modern American jurisprudence, a person may now be tried for a capital felony, although he is at the time under sentence of life imprisonment for another offense.⁶² And if a convict while serving his sentence commits another offense he may be tried and sentenced to a term in addition to his original sentence,⁶³ or for life, in which case the term will commence on the day of conviction and sentence and run concurrently with that of the former sentence;⁶⁴ or he may be sentenced to death and executed accordingly;⁶⁵ for the fact that a convict is undergoing sentence in a state prison is no bar to his trial, conviction, and sentence for another and higher grade of offense. The idea that because a convict is under many disabilities he may with impunity commit crime as he has opportunity is untenable.⁶⁶ And in such case the convict may be charged, tried, and convicted in like manner as other persons, and it is not necessary to set out in the indictment the particulars of his former trial, conviction, and sentence to imprisonment;⁶⁷ but if the facts of his former conviction are set out in detail, he is not entitled to have the count containing them stricken out on the ground that it is calculated to prejudice him in the minds of the jury.⁶⁸

III. CUSTODY AND CONTROL.

A. In General. As a general rule after the conviction and sentence of a prisoner he is in the legal custody of the sheriff of the county until he is delivered to the warden of the prison to which he is committed by the judgment of the court;⁶⁹ but it may be the duty of the sheriff, under statutory requirement, to deliver the prisoner to a contractor for the labor of state or county convicts, and in that case if he keeps the prisoner in jail after the contractor demands him, he is chargeable with jail fees, as well as the costs of a writ of habeas corpus sued out by the contractor to obtain custody of the convict.⁷⁰ And where the statute makes provision for the employment of convicts upon public works or ways under the direction of some responsible person, they may be taken out of the custody of the sheriff for that purpose, and if he refuses to deliver them to the person duly appointed overseer he may be required to do so by a writ of mandamus;⁷¹ but a person convicted of felony and sentenced to confinement in horse-stealing could not legally plead in defense a subsequent conviction of negro-stealing, for which he had been pardoned. See also State v. McCarty, 1 Bay (S. C.) 334.

the state prison is in contemplation of law in prison until he serves his term or is pardoned, although he may have been hired out to work for a contractor for convict labor,⁷² for the state cannot surrender the police power of the state over the convicts.⁷³ A prisoner who has been convicted of a crime by a federal court and is confined in a state prison, with the consent of the state, is deemed to be in the custody of the federal authorities.⁷⁴

B. Permission to Go at Large. In the absence of statutory authority it is unlawful for the warden of a penitentiary to allow a convict to go at large on a pass.⁷⁵ A convict thus at large may lawfully be arrested as an escaped felon by a peace officer without a warrant;⁷⁶ and where a convict is at large under a revocable permit from the prison authorities which is authorized by statute, he may, upon revocation of the permit, be rearrested, and such arrest is not subject to the rules governing arrests of persons not yet convicted.⁷⁷ Upon the conviction and sentence of a prisoner it is the duty of the sheriff to take him into his custody and dispose of him in accordance with the judgment of the court, and if he voluntarily permit the convict to go at large he is guilty of a misdemeanor and is subject to removal from office for wilful neglect of duty.⁷⁸

C. Chastisement. A convict who violates any of the prison regulations may be subjected to solitary confinement or such other reasonable punishment as the statute may authorize;⁷⁹ but corporal punishment cannot lawfully be inflicted without legislative sanction.⁸⁰ The custodian of a county jail may be punished by attachment for contempt for inflicting a cruel or unusual punishment on a prisoner committed to such jail by a federal court.⁸¹ And a fortiori the hirer of a convict under sentence of hard labor has no right to inflict corporal punishment upon him;⁸² and if he does so without statutory authority he is liable to indictment for assault and battery.⁸³

D. Action For Injuries to Convict Laborer. Public officers having the custody of prisoners are not liable to a prisoner for injuries caused by defective machinery with which he was put to work;⁸⁴ nor is the state liable for such injuries.⁸⁵ On the other hand a convict is the servant of the contractor to whom he is hired out, although his wages go to the county or state, and he may maintain an action against the contractor if he is injured by defective machinery furnished by him.⁸⁶ And the rule forbidding recovery by a servant who subjects himself to injury by going without objection into a place which he knows to be dangerous⁸⁷ does not apply to a convict whose movements are controlled by a guard placed over him by the contractor with power to compel obedience, even though the convict is under the general charge of a state officer;⁸⁸ but so far as his injuries affect his ability to labor during the period of his imprisonment he cannot recover.⁸⁹

IV. SUPPORT.

Primarily the expense of supporting convicts while in prison is a state or county charge accordingly as they are committed to the state prison or the county jail;⁹⁰ but contractors for the labor of state or county convicts are usually, by law or the express terms of their contracts, bound to support in a suitable manner the convicts committed to their charge,⁹¹ and this includes not only food and clothing, but also suitable and necessary medical care and attention.⁹²

V. CONTRACT LABOR.

A. Contracts by Convicts — 1. IN GENERAL. Under a statute authorizing one convicted of a crime to procure security for the payment of his fine and the costs incidental to his conviction, by contracting with his surety to render personal services until his fine and the costs are paid, he cannot include the repayment of money advanced to him by his surety in such contract, as this would amount to imprisonment for debt.⁹³ If such contract requires the convict to labor in one capacity as a farm hand, he cannot be required to labor in another as a railroad section hand;⁹⁴ and if the court which tried and sentenced him had no jurisdiction, he may recover from the contractor the value of his services on a quantum meruit.⁹⁵ If on the other hand the contract for his services was made with the public authorities he cannot recover the value of his services from the

But if he has petitioned the legislature for relief and obtained it, the convict cannot afterward maintain an action against the contractor to recover damages for the same injury. Metz v. Soule, 40 Iowa 236.

In Ohio it has been held in the court of common pleas that the relation of master and servant does not exist between a penitentiary convict and a manufacturer in the prison availing himself of the labor of the convict, under a contract with the board of managers of the penitentiary, there being no privity of contract between the parties and no statute creating the relation. *Rayborn v. Mass. Stat. (1883), c. 148, § 1, making the support of a state prison convict who has been removed to the state lunatic hospital a charge on the commonwealth until the end of his sentence in state prison, does not apply to a female convict transferred to such hospital from the reformatory prison for women. Her support remains a charge on the town or city in which she has a settlement, under Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 87, § 33. Beard v. Boston, 151 Mass. 96, 23 N. E. 826.

The duty of keeping the county jail and supplying the prisoners committed thereto with board and lodging devolves upon the sheriff, and to him alone is the county liable for the same. Hendricks v. Chautauqua County, 35 Kan. 483, 11 Pac. 450. See also Atchison County Com'rs v. Tomlinson, 9 Kan. 167.

One county cannot recover from another county for the support of its convicts unless the counties had legislative authority to make a contract for their maintenance. Kings County v. Queens County, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 195, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 883.

contractor, even if his commitment to prison was void, because he has no contractual relation express or implied with the contractor.⁹⁶ Nor can the convict maintain an action on the common counts to recover on a quantum meruit for work performed on Sundays and holidays, although the contractor compelled him to perform such work and thereby became guilty of a trespass.⁹⁷

2. PROSECUTION FOR FAILURE TO PERFORM CONTRACT. A convict who is released from custody after entering into such a contract with his surety in open court is liable to criminal prosecution if he fails or refuses, without a good and sufficient excuse, to perform the services stipulated for in the contract, provided the contract creates the relation of employer and employee,⁹⁸ and defines with reasonable certainty the particular act or services undertaken to be performed;⁹⁹ and it is no defense to a prosecution for a breach of such contract that the convict was a minor at the time of entering into the contract.¹ In such prosecution the indictment or complaint should clearly allege that a fine was imposed on the accused, that the contract for services was signed in open court, that it was approved in writing by the judge of the court in which the conviction was had as required by the statute, and should give a description of the services which the defendant contracted to perform.²

B. Contracts by Public Authorities — 1. IN GENERAL. In many of the states there are statutes providing for the leasing or hiring out by the public authorities of convicts confined in the state prison and county jails to corporations or private individuals.³ Such contracts have no vitality except by virtue of the statute authorizing them, and generally speaking they must be made by the public officials authorized by statute to act in that capacity, and all the statutory requirements must be substantially complied with, both as to the terms of the contract and the manner of its performance.⁴ Under such statutes county convicts who have been fined and committed to jail in default of payment of their fines may generally be hired out or put to work upon public improvements on a per diem credit until their fines and the costs of prosecution have been paid.⁵

2. BOND OF CONTRACTOR. The contractor is generally required to give bond for the proper care of the convicts hired to him and the payment of the wages for their work;⁶ and the approval of such bond by the officials designated by statute

Where the statute requires an advertisement and sealed bids for convict labor, a contract made without these prerequisites is invalid. People v. Dulaney, 96 Ill. 503; State Prison v. Lathrop, 1 Mich. 438; Horner v. Wood, 23 N. Y. 350; Jones v. Lynds, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 301. But where the prison authorities have complied with the statute in respect to advertising and receiving bids, the court will not interfere with the discretion allowed them under the statute in awarding the contract. State v. Ohio Penitentiary, 5 Ohio St. 234. See also Branton v. Washington County, 79 Miss. 277, 30 So. 659.

A prisoner who has been fined and committed to the county jail for an offense for which he might have been sentenced to the state prison cannot, under such a statute, be hired out to liquidate his fine and costs. Ward v. White, 86 Tex. 170, 23 S. W. 981.

Under the Alabama act regulating the hiring of county convicts, and providing that persons convicted of offenses involving moral turpitude shall not work with those convicted of other offenses, the court of county commissioners must establish a system of hiring for each class of offenders, which must appear of record, otherwise a convict cannot be hired out to hard labor. *Ex p. That it was executed on Sunday is no objection to the bond. Ex p. Millsap, 39 Tex. Crim. 93, 45 S. W. 20.

Where a county convict's hiring bond is void he may be arrested under a capias pro fine, and the fact that he may have settled is a condition precedent to the validity of the contract of hiring.⁷ The prison authorities cannot be compelled by mandamus to perform the contract until the bond required by the statute has been given.⁸ But if the contract of hiring is illegal, the bond is not valid either as a statutory or common-law bond, and will not support an action.⁹ The contract terminates with the death of the contractor, and his estate and bondsmen are liable under the contract only up to that time.¹⁰

3. POWER TO ANNUL CONTRACT. Inasmuch as the state cannot surrender its police power over convicts, it is customary in contracts for their labor to reserve the right of revocation in certain contingencies therein specified or provided by law.¹¹ The prison authorities, however, may not arbitrarily and without cause annul a contract which has been legally made,¹² although the rights of the lessee or contractor are subject to the power of the governor to pardon and thereby discharge the convicts.¹³

4. LOCALITY FOR EMPLOYMENT. County convicts who have been hired out should as a rule be employed in the county in which they were convicted;¹⁴ but if the interests of the county require it, or there is no demand for their labor in such county, the authorities may hire them out to perform labor in another county,¹⁵ and their decision as to the advantage or necessity of such hiring has the force of a judgment in rem and cannot be questioned collaterally.¹⁶

5. ESCAPE OF CONVICT LABORERS. If a convict sentenced to hard labor escapes, the time elapsing before his rearrest is not allowed him; his term does not expire until he has been at hard labor the full number of days for which he was sentenced.¹⁷ And the hirer of convicts under a contract with a county is liable for the hire of convicts who have escaped, to the extent of the fines and costs charged against them, at least where the right to recapture them was in no way wrongfully interfered with by the county.¹⁸ The hirer has no authority to rearrest the convict unless he has escaped;¹⁹ and a bondsman of the hirer has no right to rearrest him even if he has escaped from the hirer.²⁰ The lessee of state convicts is liable on his bond for damages to the state, if through his negligence such convicts are permitted to escape;²¹ and he is personally liable for the damages specified in the statute, although he did not give the statutory bond.²² And if a person in charge of convicts employed on public works negligently allows them to escape he is liable to a fine.²³

6. ACTION ON CONTRACT. A contract legally made for hire of convicts in a state prison is the contract of the state and cannot be enforced against the warden or

his successor personally.²⁴ In an action on the contractor's bond to recover the wages of county convicts, the county is the proper party plaintiff, not only because it is the interested party but because the bond runs to it;²⁵ but where the bond is made payable to an officer in his official capacity, he may sue on the same in his own name for the benefit of the county.²⁶ In an action against the contractor to recover the wages of convicts hired to him, he may set off any loss and damage caused by the failure of the state to perform its stipulation to keep the convicts under good discipline and at diligent and faithful labor;²⁷ and where the prosecution of his own work has been interrupted in order to make repairs and improvements to the state prison, he may set off the damages thereby sustained against the rent sued for by the state;²⁸ and if he is compelled by the prison authorities to incur additional expenses in order to retain the benefit of his contract, he may recover back money so paid, as paid under duress;²⁹ but he cannot set off damages caused by a wilful tort committed by the convicts hired to him;³⁰ nor is he entitled to a deduction for loss of services due to an escape unless it is so stipulated in his contract.³¹ A contractor who has had the benefit of the labor of county convicts is liable for the value of the same, and the county may recover such value on the common counts, even though the contract were indefinite and some of the statutory provisions were not complied with,³² and where labor has been performed by city convicts under a contract with the city which is ultra vires, but not illegal, the city is entitled to recover for the work actually done by the prisoners and not paid for, and the contractor after having derived benefits under the contract is estopped from denying its validity.³³ A lessee or hirer of convicts may legally employ an agent to superintend their work for him;³⁴ but he has no authority to sublet them, and if he does so the contract of subhiring is illegal and void and will not support an action.³⁵

7. DISCHARGE FROM CUSTODY. A warrant of commitment of a convict should distinctly state the terms on which the convict is entitled to his discharge, and if the convict, after having complied with the terms of his sentence, is unlawfully detained by the keeper, he may be freed from his illegal restraint by appropriate process;³⁶ but an escaped convict who has been convicted and sentenced for another crime may, at the expiration of the latter sentence, be held to serve out the remainder of the first sentence.³⁷ A county convict hired out to pay his fine and costs must be discharged when the value of his services, reckoned at the statutory per diem, equals the sum of the fine and costs,³⁸ even though the contractor be insolvent and his bond worthless.³⁹ If the county gives the prisoner no opportunity to pay his fine and costs by labor he is entitled to his discharge without such payment;⁴⁰ and he may be discharged on habeas corpus if he is not put to work within a reasonable time after adjournment of the court which sentenced him;⁴¹ but a convict sentenced to hard labor cannot complain that he was not immediately put at labor, when the delay was at his own request.⁴² So also if a convict sentenced to hard labor under the contract labor system be physically disabled, so that no one will hire him, he should be discharged, although he is unable to pay his fine and costs, for the punishment imposed by the judgment of the court cannot be changed from hard labor to imprisonment.⁴³ A contract for the hire of county convicts for a period longer than the statute authorizes is valid for the full legal term, but is void as to the excess.⁴⁴ A county convict hired out to labor is not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus merely on the ground that the contract does not bind his hirer to pay the costs of his prosecution.⁴⁵

8. DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF CONVICT LABOR. Where a county convict is hired out to pay his fine and the costs of prosecution the contract itself directs the application of the proceeds of his labor; but in some cases the statute directs the application of the proceeds of such labor.⁴⁶ Sometimes the statute directs that the surplus proceeds of their labor shall be paid to the convicts upon their discharge, but the repeal of such a statute before a prisoner's discharge deprives him of the right to receive money earned before such repeal.⁴⁷ The warden of the prison is not entitled to the proceeds of convict labor, although he may have settled with the institution for the services of convicts whose labor he used.⁴⁸

It is in the nature of a parliament, being, in the province of Canterbury, composed of two houses, of which the archbishop and bishops form the upper house, and the lower consists of deans, arch-deacons, the proctors for the chapters, and the proctors for the parochial clergy. In York, it consists of one house only. The convocation has always met in time of parliament, and although it has long been the course to summon it pro forma only, it is still, in fact, summoned before the meeting of every new parliament, and adjourns immediately afterward, without even proceeding to the despatch of business. *Burrill L. If, then the association be voluntary, the neutral, in suffering the fate of the whole, has only to regret his own folly in wedding his fortune to theirs; or if involved in the aggression or opposition of the convoying vessel, he shares the fate which the leader of his own choice either was, or would have been made liable to, in case of capture."

Applied to interpretation of doubtful phrases.—In Fowler v. Danvers, 8 Allen (Mass.) 80, 85, it is said: "The maxim of Lord Bacon, Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu, is a safe and sound rule in the construction of doubtful phrases and sentences; and, unless there is something to indicate a different intent, it is fair to presume that a word in question and those which surround it or immediately follow it are designed to be ejusdem generis, and referable to the same subject-matter, or to be interpreted in a similar sense." And see State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. L. 86, 89 [citing Broom Leg. Max. 450], where it is said: "The collocation of the words in this statute requires that the thing used to effect the miscarriage should be noxious—that is, hurtful. The words 'poison, drug, medicine or noxious thing,' indicate the character of the means that must be used. The rule, copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu, and the maxim noscitur a sociis, govern the construction of these words as they stand connected in this statute."

As used in bankruptcy proceedings.—Where a form in bankruptcy proceedings provided that "a copy of said petition, together with a writ of subpoena, be served" as therein provided, the court said: "When, therefore, the act provides that a petition shall be filed in duplicate, 'one copy for the clerk and one for service on the bankrupt,' it must be held to have intended that one petition in the form of two duplicate originals should be filed. The use of the term 'copy' in such a connection is not unusual. A deed executed in duplicate is not in legal contemplation two deeds, but only one, and it is quite common to say that A holds one copy and B the other. Compared with "engrave, etch or work."—Where a statute provided that "If any person shall engrave, etch or work, sell or copy," with intent to deceive, etc., the court said: "The word 'copy' is a general term, added to the more specific terms before used, for the very purpose of covering methods of reproduction not included in the words 'engrave, etch or work,' and, if it covers anything, should cover the photographic method, which, more nearly than any other, produces a perfect copy. "Copies" or "original."—Where a statute provided that no person shall maintain an action for infringement of a book, etc., unless the word "Copyright," etc., be entered in the book, chromo, etc., the court said: "Each chromo is as much an 'original' as a 'copy,' and either term applies equally well to all chromos. We copyright a painting, and section 4962 requires notice of copyright upon the published painting, and upon each replica or reproduction which is published. And what has been said with respect to a book, map, chromo, or painting applies to the other copyrighted things enumerated in this section. Section 4962 does not deal with 'copies' as distinct from 'originals,' or with 'originals' as distinct from 'copies,' as those terms are commonly understood; but it deals with published copyrighted things, and it declares that no action for infringement will lie unless each copyrighted thing which is published or made public, be it a 'copy' so called, or an 'original,' so called, or another

It is an estate at the will of the lord, yet such a will as is agreeable to the custom of the manor, which customs are preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron, in which they are entered. In a larger sense, copyhold is said to import every customary tenure, (that is, every tenure pending on the particular custom of a manor,) as opposed to free socage, or freehold, which may now (since the abolition of knight-service) be considered as the general or common-law tenure of the country. Black L. Dict.

ber and minerals, etc.,) and the compulsory enfranchisement of copyhold lands.⁵⁰

I. NATURE AND ACQUISITION.

A. In General. Copyright, which may be defined to mean the exclusive right of multiplying and vending copies of an intellectual work,¹ or, in the case of a dramatic or musical composition, of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others,² as distinguished from the common-law right of literary property,³ is of purely statutory origin.⁴ Whether

Dict.*, where copyright is defined to be "the exclusive privilege, secured according to certain legal forms, of printing, or otherwise multiplying, publishing, and vending copies of certain literary or artistic productions."

The copyright of a work is the exclusive right to multiply copies of the work, not merely a right to do so in common with others. Sims v. Marryat, 17 C. B. 281, 20 L. J. Q. B. 454, 79 E. C. L. 281. Copyright, as defined by the English act, means the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the word is applied. Hole v. Bradbury, 12 Ch. D. 886, 48 L. J. Ch. 673, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 153, 250, 28 Wkly. Rep. 39. To the same effect see Ager v. Peninsular, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 26 Ch. D. 637, 53 L. J. Ch. 589, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 477, 33 Wkly. Rep. 116; Chappell v. Purday, 9 Jur. 495, 14 L. J. Exch. 258, 14 M. & W. 303; Maple v. Junior Army,

Copyright is "an incorporeal right, resting entirely in the reasonable interpretation of the terms of the grant; and so disconnected from, and independent of any material substance such as manuscript or plate, that a sale of either or both of these will not necessarily carry with it any right on the part of the purchaser thereof to make copies of the original work — the right to copy or the 'copyright' still remaining in the author, his legal representative or assignee, a distinct, well-defined, though intangible legal estate." Carter v. Bailey, 64 Me. 458, 462, 18 Am. Rep. 273. See also Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. (U. S.) 447, 15 L. ed. 155; Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. (U. S.) 528, 14 L. ed. 528; Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303, 2306.

3. See, generally, LITERARY PROPERTY.

4. The earliest statute on the subject is that of 8 Anne, c. 19, enacted in 1710, which provided that an author should have the ex-

or not there existed at common law a copyright after,⁵ or even, in the United States, before publication,⁶ it is now definitively settled in both countries that after publication copyright only exists as to the subjects therein enumerated by virtue of such statutes.⁷ As giving effect to what may be considered the inherent right of an author in his own work, the provisions of the copyright acts should receive a liberal construction.⁸

B. Subjects of Copyright — 1. IN GENERAL. Substantially the same productions may be copyrighted in England and the United States. Under the federal statute any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph or negative thereof, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, and models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts are entitled to the provisions of the act. The right of public performance or representation of dramatic or musical compositions, or of causing them to be performed or represented, is also protected; and authors may reserve the right to dramatize or to translate their own works.⁹ But there cannot be two successive copyrights

Under the federal constitution congress is empowered "to promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries." U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8. The first statute passed in pursuance of this provision was that of May 31, 1790 (1 U. S. Stat. at L. 124). See Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. ed. 1055; Grant v. Raymond, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 218, 8 L. ed. 376.

In construing a statute imposing a penalty for the infringement of copyright, if there is a reasonable interpretation which will avoid the penalty in any particular case, it should be adopted. If there are two reasonable constructions, the more lenient one should be given. Such is the settled rule for the construction of penal sections. Hildesheimer v. Faulkner, [1901] 2 Ch. 552, 70 L. J. Ch. 800, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 322, 49 Wkly. Rep. 708 [citing with approval Tuck v. Priestler, 52 J. P. 213, 56 L. J. Q. B. 553, 36 Wkly. Rep. 93]. See also, generally, STATUTES.

In England the various subjects of statutory copyright are provided for by different statutes beginning with 8 Anne, c. 19 (books), which has been followed by 8 Geo. II, c. 13 (the Engraving Copyright Act of 1734); 7 Geo. III, c. 38 (the Engraving Copyright Act of 1776); 15 Geo. III, c. 53 (the Copyright Act of 1775); 17 Geo. III, c. 57 (the Prints Copyright Act of 1777); 54 Geo. III, c. 56 (the Sculpture Copyright Act of 1814); 3 Wm. IV, c. 15 (the Dramatic Copyright Act of 1833); 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 65 (the Lecturers' Copyright Act of 1835); 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 69 (the Prints and Engravings Copyright Act of 1836); 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 110 (the Copyright Act of 1836); 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 (the Copyright Act of 1842); 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12 (the International Copyright Act of 1844); 10 & of the same literary work. To permit this would render possible an extension of the statutory period through which a copyright runs, which the law will not allow.¹⁰

2. Books — a. In General. A literary production, to be entitled to copyright, need not be a book in the common and ordinary acceptance of the word, a volume printed or written, made up of several sheets and bound together.¹¹ The literary property intended to be protected is not to be determined by the size, form, or shape in which it appears, but by the subject-matter of the work.¹²

11 Vict. c. 95 (the Colonial Copyright Act of 1847); 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12 (the International Copyright Act of 1852); 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68 (the Fine Arts Copyright Act of 1862); 38 & 39 Vict. c. 12 (the International Copyright Act of 1875); 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33 (the International Copyright Act of 1886).

Only such writings and discoveries are included within the constitutional provision as to copyright as are the result of intellectual labor; the term "writings" may be liberally construed to include designs for engraving and prints that are original and are founded in the creative powers of the mind—the fruits of intellectual labor. Prints upon a single sheet might be considered a book if it otherwise met the spirit of the constitutional provision; but to be entitled to copyright, the article must have, by, and of itself, some value as a composition, at least to the extent of serving some purpose other than as a mere advertisement or designation of the subject to which it is attached. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Clow, 82 Fed. 316, 27 C. C. A. 250 [citing with approval Higgins v. Keuffel, 140 U. S. 428, 11 S. Ct. 731, 35 L. ed. 470; Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 4 S. Ct. 279, 28 L. ed. 349; Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 99, 25 L. ed. 841; U. S. v. Steffens, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. ed. 1055].

Specifications of patents are not subjects of copyright. Wyatt v. Barnard, 3 Ves. & B. 77, 13 Rev. Rep. 141. But see Newton v. Cowe, 4 Bing. 234, 5 L. J. C. P. O. S. 159, 12 Moore C. P. 457, 29 Rev. Rep. 541, 13 E. C. L. 482, where it was held that an engraving on a reduced scale of a specification of a new invention enrolled at the patent office may be the subject of copyright, such reduction having required labor and some degree of skill to preserve the proportions. And see, generally, PATENTS.

A system of indexes, constituting a letter-file, being designed for use, and not for conveying information, is not a proper subject of copyright. Amberg File, etc., Co. v. Smith, 82 Fed. 314, 37 C. C. A. 246 [affirming 78 Fed. 479].

A railway ticket is not a subject of copyright. Griffin v. Kingston, etc., R. Co., 17 Ont. 660.

Commercial works.—Little by little copyright has been extended to the literature of commerce, so that it now includes books that the old guild of authors would have disdained; catalogues, mathematical tables, statistics, designs, guide-books, directories, and other works of similar character. Nothing, it would seem, evincing, in its make-up, that there has been underneath it, in some substantial way, the mind of a creator or originator, is now excluded. A belief that in no other way can the labor of the brain, in these useful departments of life, be adequately protected, is doubtless responsible for this wide departure from what was unquestionably the original purpose of the constitution." National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 Fed. 294, 297, 60 L. R. A. 805.

10. Miffin v. Dutton, 112 Fed. 1004, 50 C. C. A. 661.

11. For definition of "book" see 5 Cyc. 859.

Statutory definition.—Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 2, "book" is to be "construed to mean and include every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published."

The face of a barometer, displaying special letter-press, is not capable of registration under the copyright act of 1842, not being within the second section of that act, "a book separately published." Davis v. Comitti, 54 L. J. Ch. 419, 52 L. T. Rep. N. S. 539.

Photograph album.—An album for holding photographs, with pictorial borders containing views of castles, with short descriptions attached, is not a book within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 1, so as to be capable of obtaining copyright for the contents. Schove v. Schmincké, 33 Ch. D. 546, 25 L. J. Ch. 892, 55 L. T. Rep. N. S. 212, 34 Wkly. Rep. 700.

Part of volume.—The word "book" includes a part of a book under the interpretation clause of section 2 of the copyright act

b. Manuscripts. Unprinted manuscript, such as a collection of letters, has been held to be within the meaning of 8 Anne, c. 19;¹³ and in the United States an author's or proprietor's property in an unpublished manuscript is specifically protected by statute.¹⁴

c. Translations. Translations are subject to copyright in the name of the translator or proprietor.¹⁵

d. New Editions — (i) IN GENERAL. New editions which are but reprints of the original are protected by the original copyright;¹⁶ but in order to protect new and original matter incorporated into a new edition, a new copyright must be obtained, such editions being new books within the meaning of the statute, and protection being afforded as to such new and original matter from the date of the new copyright.¹⁷

(ii) WHERE NEW AND OLD MATTER IS SEPARABLE. Where the new matter is separable from the old, or where only a portion of the original matter has been rewritten or revised, the new copyright will extend only to such distinct and separable matter.¹⁸

e. Law Reports — (i) OPINIONS. It is well settled that neither the reporter of, nor the judge delivering, an opinion can obtain a copyright therein,¹⁹ and the better opinion seems to be, at least in the United States, that no copyright in judicial opinions exists in favor of the government.²⁰

Letters.—The copyright act of 1831 (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4967 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3416]) protects the author's right to his manuscript, which includes private letters. Bartlett v. Crittenden, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,076, 5 McLean 32, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,082, 4 McLean 300.

(ii) SYLLABI, STATEMENTS, INDEXES, ETC. All original matter prepared by the reporter, such as head-notes, statements of facts, and of arguments of counsel, indexes, tables of cases, and notes, is entitled to protection.²¹ It is, however, competent for the government to contract with the reporter that the copyright in such matter shall vest in itself;²² and where the syllabi or statement of facts are prepared by the court, no right to copyright vests in the reporter.²³

f. Statutes. While it has been broadly stated that the government, as owner, may copyright statutes,²⁴ the contrary would seem the better doctrine for the same reasons as are applicable to reports.²⁵ A compiler or publisher of an annotated edition may, however, obtain a copyright covering and protecting such part of the contents as may be fairly deemed the product of his own labor.²⁶

g. Official Letters and Documents. The author or his representative may obtain a copyright in official letters and documents, if their publication is not contrary to public policy; but such right is subject to that of the government to publish such documents when the public service renders it necessary.²⁷ such a form are old, if they are so combined with the parts drawn in pursuance of the statute as to make a complete form.²⁹

i. Cyclopedias and Periodicals. In England encyclopedias, reviews, magazines, and periodical works, or works published in a series of books or parts, are specifically protected by statute.³⁰ Previous to this enactment protection had been afforded such publications under the judicial construction of the word "book," as used in 8 Anne, c. 19.³¹ In the United States it has been held that newspapers are not within the statute,³² but the sounder view seems to be that they are.³³

j. Compilations—(i) IN GENERAL. While the author of a book has a copyright in the plan, arrangement, and combination of his material, if such plan, arrangement, and combination be new and original in substance, yet before he can invoke an application of this rule he must make it appear that his book exhibits a substantially new and original system of arranging material, which system is his own invention.³⁴ He must in all cases go to the original sources for his information, and cannot appropriate that gathered by his predecessor.³⁵ A compilation comprising a choice of articles treating in an original manner of subjects taken from books on which the copyright has expired, together with its nomenclature, may, when properly registered, be the subject of copyright.³⁶

(ii) ADVERTISEMENTS, PRICE-LISTS AND CATALOGUES. While no copyright can be acquired in the employment of a particular method of advertising,³⁷ or in a mere price-list,³⁸ yet it may be acquired in an advertising catalogue which contains original matter, the product of intellectual labor on the part of the author or designer.³⁹

Work published in instalments.—Any copyright protection for a work, secured under 4 U. S. (vi) TICKER TAPE. A printed tape showing the results of races is not within the meaning of the copyright laws.⁴³ plaintiffs, but the book contained no letterpress of such a description as to be the subject of copyright, and it was not published for sale but was used by the plaintiffs as an advertisement. The defendants published an illustrated catalogue, many of the illustrations in which were copied from those in the plaintiffs' book. It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from publishing any catalogue containing illustrations copied from the plaintiffs' book. Maple v. Schile, 12 Fed. 97, 20 Blatchf. 452, the chromo entitled "Gambrinus and his Followers," intended as a glorification of lager-beer drinking, and designed and circulated as an advertisement of the publisher's business as a lager-beer brewer, was held to be a proper subject of copyright [distinguishing Ehret v. Pierce, 10 Fed. 553, 18 Blatchf. 302, upon the ground that the copyrighted article in that case was not a work of art and had no value as such, and was merely a mode of advertising]. In the principal case, Brown, District J., held that the chromo of Gambrinus was a work of the imagination, and had such obvious artistic qualities as in his judgment to render it fairly a subject of copyright without regard to the use the plaintiff may have made, or might have intended to make, of it. 805, in which it was said that printed tape "has no value at all as a book or article. It lasts literally for an hour, and is in the waste-basket when the hour has passed. It is not desired by the patron for the intrinsic value of the happening recorded—the happening, as a happening, may have no value. The value of the tape to the patron is almost wholly in the fact that the knowledge thus communicated is earlier, in point of time, than knowledge communicated through other means, or to persons other than those having a like service. In just this quality—to coin a word, the precommunicatedness of the information—is the essence of appellee's service; the quality that wins from the patron his patronage."

b. Translations, Dramatizations, and Adaptations. Translations, dramatizations, and adaptations of literary works are copyrightable, where the author may legally make use of the original work.⁴⁸ In the United States authors or their assigns are given the right of dramatization and translation.⁴⁹

c. What Constitutes Dramatic Composition — (1) IN GENERAL. What constitutes a dramatic composition within the meaning of the statutes cannot be clearly defined. The courts are, however, extremely liberal in their construction, and will hold any piece in which the dramatic element is present, and which is suitable for representation to come within the clear intent of the legislature.⁵⁰

Statute construed. — In construing the definitions of "dramatic piece" as contained in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 2, Denman, C. J., said: "These words comprehend any piece which could be called dramatic in its widest sense; any piece which, on being presented by a performer to an audience, would produce the emotions which are the purpose of the regular drama, and which constitute the entertainment of the audience." Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217, 12 Jur. 723, 17 L. J. Q. B. 225, 64 E. C. L. 217.

A song which relates to the burning of a ship at sea and the escape of those on board, which describes their feelings in vehement language and sometimes expresses them in the supposed words of the suffering parties, is dramatic, and therefore at all events within the meaning of the statute, although it be sung by one person only, sitting at a piano, giving effect to the verses by his delivery, but not assisted by scenery or appropriate dress. Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217, 12 Jur. 723, 17 L. J. Q. B. 225, 64 E. C. L. 217. See also Clark v. Bishop, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 908.

A stage dance illustrating the poetry of motion by a series of graceful movements, combined with an attractive arrangement of drapery, lights, and shadows, but telling no story, portraying no character, and depicting no emotion, is not a "dramatic composition," within the meaning of the Copyright Act. Fuller v. Bemis, 50 Fed. 926.

So too a stage performance consisting of the singing of well-known songs by a woman dressed to personate other singers, prefaced by a short and commonplace dialogue having no reference to such performance, and with a kinetoscope exhibition during the interval when the performer is changing costume, in which she is shown while making such changes by means of moving pictures previously taken photographically on a film, is not a subject of copyright, the dialogue not being a dramatic composition within the meaning of the statute, and neither the dialogue, performance, nor exhibition being such as to "promote the progress of science" or "useful arts," within the meaning of the constitutional provision conferring upon congress power to enact copyright laws, and by which such power is limited. Barnes v. Miner, 122 Fed. 480.

Pantomimes are dramatic compositions within the meaning of the copyright statutes. Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871, 4 D. & L. 666, 11 Jur. 127, 16 L. J. C. P. 105, 54 E. C. L. 871. See also Daly v. Palmer, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,552, 6 Blatchf. 256.

(II) SPECTACULAR PRODUCTIONS. A mere exhibition, spectacle, or scene is not a dramatic composition within the meaning of the copyright laws, and as such entitled to protection.⁵¹

(III) STAGE CONTRIVANCES. While scenic effects which constitute mere links in an extended chain of incident, speech, and action will be protected as dramatic compositions,⁵² mere mechanical contrivances used upon the stage to represent a particular incident of a production will not be protected by a copyright of the play in which the incident is contained.⁵³

(IV) STAGE DIRECTIONS. A written work consisting wholly of directions, set in order for conveying the ideas of the author on a stage or public place, by means of characters who represent the narrative wholly by action, is as much a dramatic composition designed or suited for public representation as if language or dialogue were used in it to convey some of the ideas.⁵⁴

5. MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. While musical compositions were construed to be within the intent of 8 Anne, c. 19,⁵⁵ and were specifically protected in the United States,⁵⁶ the right of exclusive performance or representation was not secured. This right, however, is now given by statute in both England and the United States.⁵⁷

Illustration.—A scene in a play represented a person placed by another on a track over which a train was momentarily expected to arrive, and so fastened that he could not move from his dangerous position, and his rescue by a third person at the last moment. It was displayed before the audience by a series of incidents grouped in a certain sequence, and realistically presented, but with very little dialogue. It was held that such combination of dramatic events, although its success was largely dependent on what was seen, irrespective of the dialogue, was a dramatic composition, entitled to protection under the copyright laws. Daly v. Webster, 56 Fed. 483, 4 C. C. A. 10.

53. Seranna v. Jefferson, 33 Fed. 347; Freigh v. Carroll, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,092a [cited in 2 Morgan, lit. 222, to the point that a mechanical contrivance used upon the stage to represent the incident of a drawbridge surreptitiously opened to precipitate an approaching train into a stream below, etc., being patentable, cannot be protected by a copyright of the play in which the incident is contained].

A mechanical contrivance consisting of a tank into which water is made to fall, and running thence off underneath the stage, representing a river into which, in the course of a play, the villain falls from a bridge above, not being a link in the chain of incident which, together with the speech and action of the performance, constitute a series of events concededly novel, is not such a mechanical contrivance as will be protected by copyright of the play in which it is introduced. *Seranna v. Rearrangements.—A person who writes words to an old air and procures an accompaniment and publishes them together is entitled to the copyright in the whole work. Leader v. Purday, 7 C. B. 4, 6 D. & L. 408, 12 Jur. 1091, 18 L. J. C. P. 97, 62 E. C. L. 4. See also Reed v. Carusi, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,642, Taney 72; Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. N. S. 182, 87 E. C. L. 182.

Score for piano.—The pianoforte score of an already existing opera, whether arranged by the composer himself or by another person, is the subject of copyright within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12. Wood v. Boosey, L. R. 3 Q. B. 223, 9 B. & S. 175, 37 L. J. Q. B. 84, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 105, 16 Wkly. Rep. 485. See also Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 640, 2 Blatchf. 39; *Jollie v. 58. England.—8 Geo. II, c. 13 (engravings, prints, and cuts, when subject or design is original. See Blackwell v. Harper, 2 Atk. 93, 26 Eng. Reprint 458, holding that the act is not confined to works of invention only, but means the designing or engraving of anything that is already in nature); 7 Geo. III, c. 38 (extending protection to "any print taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture either ancient or modern"); 17 Geo. III, c. 57 (giving an action for damages); 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 59 (extending law to Ireland); 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, § 14 (including "prints taken by lithography or any other mechanical process by which prints or impressions of drawings or designs are capable of being multiplied indefinitely"); 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68 (extending protection to photographs. See Matter of Copyright Acts, L. R. 4 Q. B. 715, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 877, 17 Wkly. Rep. 1018, holding that a photograph of a painting is so far original that it would be infringing the statute to copy it). See also Graves v. Ashford, L. R. 2 C. P. 410, 36 L. J. C. P. 139, 16 L. United States.—U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4952 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3406]; Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 4 S. Ct. 279, 28 L. ed. 349 [affirming

No. 17,938, 5 Blatchf. 325, in which it was held that a photograph is not a "print" within the meaning of section 1 of the act of Feb. 3, 1831, and therefore not the subject of copyright under that act.

"The words 'engraving,' 'cut,' and 'print' shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts." 18 U. S. Stat. at L. 79 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3412]. See also Rosenbach v. Dreyfuss, 2 Fed. 217, where it was held that prints of balloons and hanging baskets, with printing on them for embroidery and cutting lines, showing how the paper may be cut and joined to make the different parts fit together, and not intended as a mere pictorial representation of something, are not copyrightable. Compare Drury v. Ewing, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,095, 1 Bond 540 (where it was held that a dress pattern might be copyrighted as a print or chart); Richardson v. Miller, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,791 (where it was held that a design for playing cards was copyrightable).

Engraved advertisements.—Engravings representing ballet dancers or fancy bicycle riding, designed for use as show-bills or advertisements of a circus, are not entitled to copyright under the constitution or under the United States statutes. Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 98 Fed. 608. See also Courier Lithographing Co. v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 104 Fed. 993, 44 C. C. A. 296.

Prints.—U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4956 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3407], authorizes the copyright of any "book, map, chart, . . . cut, print, . . . or design for a work of the fine arts: provided, that in the case of a book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph, the two copies of the same required to be delivered or deposited, . . . shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States, or from plates made therefrom, or from negatives, or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States." It was held that pictures printed in successive colors from metal plates, from which part of the metal has been cut so as to leave portions thereof in relief, were entitled to copyright as "prints," within the general enumeration of the section, and were not within the proviso because not "printed from drawings on stone." Hills v. Austrich, 120 Fed. 862.

Prints from lawful plate.—A being employed by B to engrave plates from drawings belonging to B, took from the plates so engraved by him a number of proof impressions, which he retained for his own use. A afterward became bankrupt, and the proofs of are used to illustrate a copyrighted book they will be protected by the copyright of the book.⁵⁹ A series of photographs arranged for use in a machine for producing a panoramic effect is entitled to copyright.⁶⁰

b. Labels. Mere labels used to indicate the contents of a package to which they are affixed are not within the provisions of the copyright law.⁶¹

which he had possessed himself were advertised by his assignee for sale. It was held that neither he nor his assignees were liable to an action for having disposed of pirated prints without the consent of the proprietor, inasmuch as 17 Geo. III, c. 57, applied to impressions of engravings pirated from other engravings and not to prints taken from a lawful plate. Murray v. Heath, 1 B. & Ad. 804, 9 L. J. K. B. O. S. 111, 20 E. C. L. 698.

Photographs.—A photographer who arranges the light background and other details for a photograph and poses the subject so as to produce an artistic and pleasing picture is entitled to a copyright for such photograph. Falk v. Gast Lithograph, etc., Co., 48 Fed. 262. See also Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Saroni, 111 U. S. 53, 4 S. Ct. 279, 28 L. ed. 349.

A colored photograph or picture of natural scenery may be the subject of a copyright. Cleland v. Thayer, 121 Fed. 71 [citing Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U. S. 239, 23 S. Ct. 298, 47 L. ed. 460].

Nature of photograph.—A photograph may be something more than a mere mechanical and chemical product, and may rise to the dignity of art through the blending of the mechanical parts of the process with the original intellectual conception of an artist. Courier Lithographing Co. v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 104 Fed. 993, 44 C. C. A. 296.

Constitutionality of statute protecting photographs.—Under U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, empowering congress to secure "to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries," congress can authorize copyright of photographs, so far as they embody original intellectual conceptions of the author. Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Saroni, 111 U. S. 53, 4 S. Ct. 279, 28 L. ed. 349 [affirming 17 Fed. 591].

A chromolithograph is a print within the act of 1831 (4 Stat. at L. 436, § 1), granting a copyright in prints. Yuengling v. Schile, 12 Fed. 97, 20 Blatchf. 452.

Chromolithographic advertisements of a circus, portraying a ballet, a number of persons performing on bicycles, and groups of men and women whitened to represent statues, are proper subjects of copyright under the federal statutes as "pictorial illustrations," even assuming that only such illustrations as are "connected with the fine arts" are within the protection of such laws.

Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U. S. 239, 23 S. Ct. 298, 47 L. ed. 460 [reversing 104 Fed. 993, 44 C. C. A. 296].

Pictorial illustrations are none the less within the protection of the copyright law, because they are drawn from real life. Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U. S. 239, 23 S. Ct. 298, 47 L. ed. 460 [reversing 104 Fed. 993, 44 C. C. A. 296].

A chromo, if a meritorious work of art, may be copyrighted, although designed and used for gratuitous distribution as an advertisement for the purpose of attracting business. Yuengling v. Schile, 12 Fed. 97, 20 Blatchf. 452.

Not protected as "manuscript."—The word "manuscript," in the copyright law of 1831 (4 U. S. Stat. at L. 438), giving a remedy when any person shall publish any manuscript without the consent of the author or proprietor, does not include pictures. Parton v. Prang, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,784, 3 Cliff. 537.

Canada.—The Imperial Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, being an act for amending the law relating to copyright in works of fine art, does not extend to the colonies, and copyright conferred thereby is confined to the United Kingdom. Graves v. Gorrie, 32 Ont. 266.

C. Form and Quality of Subject-Matter — 1. IN GENERAL. The form or size of a work in order that it may be entitled to protection under the copyright acts is immaterial. It must, however, be original, meritorious, and free from illegality or immorality.⁶⁴

2. ORIGINALITY — a. In General. A work in order to be copyrighted must be original, in the sense that the author has created it by his own skill, labor, and judgment, without directly copying or evasively imitating the work of another.⁶⁵

64. Form or size.—Schumacher v. Schwencke, 25 Fed. 466, 23 Blatchf. 373; Clayton v. Stone, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,872, 2 Paine 382; Drury v. Ewing, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,095, 1 Bond 540; *Roberts v. Rep. 963; Church v. Linton, 25 Ont. 131; Griffin v. Kingston, etc., R. Co., 17 Ont. 660.

Printing not necessary.—A literary composition may be a book entitled to copyright without being printed. Roberts v. Myers, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,906, Brunn. Col. Cas. 698.

Size of painting.—The fact that a painting is only seven by four and one-half inches in size, and could be readily lithographed and used as an advertising label, will not affect the copyright. Schumacher v. Schwencke, 25 Fed. 466, 23 Blatchf. 373.

Longman*, 1 East 358, 3 Esp. 273, 6 Rev. Rep. 285; Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Jur. N. S. 1051, 3 Kay & J. 708; Cable v. Marks, 52 L. J. Ch. 107, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 432, 31 Wkly. Rep. 221; Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 L. J. Ch. O. S. 90, 3 Sim. & St. 1; Bailey v. Taylor, 3 L. J. Ch. O. S. 66; Black v. Murray, 9 Sc. Sess. Cas. (3d ser.) 341.

Originality of conception as criterion.—In National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 Fed. 294, 297, 60 L. R. A. 805, it is said: "It would be difficult to define, comprehensively, what character of writing is copyrightable, and what is not. But, for the purposes of this case, we may fix the confines at the point where authorship proper ends, and mere annals begin. Nor is this line easily drawn. Generally speaking, authorship implies that there has been put into the production something meritorious from the author's own mind; that the product embodies the thought of the author, as well as the thought of others; and would not have found existence in the form presented, but for the distinctive individuality of mind from which it sprang. A mere annal, on the contrary, is the reduction to copy of an event that others, in a like situation, would have observed; and its statement in the substantial form that people generally would have adopted. A catalogue, or table of statistics, or business publications generally, may thus belong to either one or the other of these classes. If, in their makeup, there is evinced some peculiar mental endowment—the grasp of mind, say in a table of statistics, that can gather in all that is useful, the discrimination that adjusts their proportions—there may be authorship within the meaning of the copyright grant as interpreted by the courts. But if, on the contrary, such writings are a mere notation of the figures at which stocks or cereals have sold, or of the result of a horse race, or base-ball game, they cannot be said to bear the impress of individuality, and fail, therefore, to rise to the plane of authorship. In authorship, the product has some likeness to the mind underneath it; in a work of mere notation, the mind is guide only to the fingers that make the notation. One is the product of originality; the other the product of opportunity."

Corrections and additions.—Where a person simply makes corrections and additions to a work in which he had originally no interest, he acquires a copyright in them, and may bring an action if they are pirated. Cary v. Longman, 1 East 358, 3 Esp. 273, 6 Rev. Rep. 285. See also Sayre v. Moore, 1 East 361 note b, 6 Rev. Rep. 288.

The novelty of a design may consist in the form, outline, or grouping, or in the use, combination, arrangement, or harmony, of colors, or the combination of some or all of these attributes. Richardson v. Miller, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,791.

The novelty of a work on bookkeeping consists in the mode of keeping accounts, the names used in the items of debit and credit being of no importance. Bartlett v. Crittenden, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,076, 5 McLean 32.

A musical composition, to be the subject of a copyright, must be substantially a new and original work, not a copy of a piece already produced, with additions or variations which a writer of music with experience and skill might readily make. Jollie v. Jaques, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,437, 1 Blatchf. 618.

Title of drama.—A person who deposits in the copyright office the title of a drama, which title is not original with himself, cannot secure such title to the exclusion of others who have applied such title to a dramatic composition founded on the same story before the date of such deposit. Benn v. Leclercq, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,308.

It need not, however, be wholly original with himself, but in such case copyright is only acquired in that part of the work which is the result of the author's own labor, skill, and ingenuity.⁶⁶

b. New Combinations of Old Materials. A new and original plan, arrangement, or combination of materials will entitle the author to a copyright therein, whether the materials themselves be new or old.⁶⁷

66. Test of originality.—"The question is not whether the materials which are used are entirely new and have never been used before; or even that they have never been used before for the same purpose. The true question is whether the same plan, arrangement, and combination of materials have been used before for the same purpose or for any other purpose. If they have not then the plaintiff is entitled to a copyright, although he may have gathered hints for his plan and arrangement, or parts of his plan and arrangement, from existing and known sources. He may have borrowed much of his materials from others, but if they are combined in a different manner from what was in use before, and a fortiori, if his plan and arrangement are real improvements upon the existing modes, he is entitled to a copyright in the book embodying such improvement. It is true that he does not thereby acquire the right to appropriate to himself the materials which were common to all persons before, so as to exclude those persons from a future use of such materials; but then they have no right to use such materials with his improvements super-added, whether they consist in plan, arrangement or illustrations, or combinations; for these are strictly his own." Emerson v. Davies, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,436, 3 Story 768, 778. If, instead of searching into the common sources and obtaining your subject-matter thence, you avail yourself of the labors of your predecessor, adopt his arrangement, and questions, or adopt them with a colorable variation, it is an illegitimate use. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Jur. N. S. 1051, 3 Kay & J. 708.

Original matter in new editions.—The editor of a subsequent edition is entitled to a copyright on his notes and additions, where they can be clearly separated from those of a previous edition. Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1. See also Black v. Murray, 9 Sc. Sess. Cas. (3d ser.) 341. And also cases cited supra, note 65.

Abstracts of title.—It seems that abstract books and books of indexes containing abstracts of title to lands, with the encumbrances and liens upon said lands condensed and prepared from public records may be subjects of copyright. Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 94. See also Stover v. Lathrop, 33 Fed. 348.

Arrangements of questions and answers.—Arrangements of questions and answers, however simple in themselves, and on subjects however common, may be the subject of copyright. Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Jur. N. S. 1051, 3 Kay & J. 708.

Court calendars.—An injunction was granted against pirating a court calendar, the

c. Effect of Similarity. The mere fact that two or more works upon the same subject are similar to one another is not sufficient of itself to deprive either of the protection of the statute. Each, if the result of independent labor and research, and not a servile copy or an evasive imitation of the other, is entitled to be copyrighted.⁶⁸

3. LITERARY OR ARTISTIC MERIT. While the original object of both the English and American copyright laws was the promotion and encouragement of learning and art, the courts have been exceedingly liberal in their interpretation of them. Literary or artistic merit is not essential in order that a work may be copyrighted. If it can be considered a substantial contribution to useful knowledge or to the arts it is entitled to protection. The work must, however, have some such value.⁶⁹

4. ILLEGAL OR IMMORAL WORKS. Illegal or immoral works are not entitled to individual work creating a copyright, although the general subject was common. Longman v. Winchester, 16 Ves. Jr. 269. See also Matthewson v. Stockdale, 12 Ves. Jr. 270.

Plan of book.—There may be a valid copyright in the plan of a book, as connected with the arrangement and combination of the materials and the mode of displaying and illustrating the subject, although all the materials employed and the subject of the work may be common to all other writers. Greene v. Bishop, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,763, 1 Cliff. 186. But see Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385, 26 Rev. Rep. 112, 3 Eng. Ch. 385.

Railway guide.—The mere publication in a particular order of time-tables which are to be found in the publications of the various railway companies is not sufficient to give rise to a claim to copyright. The right may, however, exist in a compilation of information as to coach routes, ferries, and steamers published in the form of an abstract for the use of a particular locality. Leslie v. Young, [1894] A. C. 335, 6 Reports 211.

Trade directory.—The headings of a trade directory under which trade advertisements are classified are the subject of copyright. Lamb v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. 218, 62 L. J. Ch. 404, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 131, 2 Reports 189, 41 Wkly. Rep. 405.

Object of acts.—The act of May 31, 1790 (1 U. S. Stat. at L. 124), securing to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries, was passed in execution of the power given by the constitution, and its object was the promotion of science and the useful arts. The act is for the encouragement of learning, and was not intended for the encouragement of mere industry, unconnected with learning and the sciences. Clayton v. Stone, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,872, 2 Paine 382.

The purely commercial or business character of a composition or a compilation does not oust the right to protection of copyright, if time, labor, and experience have been dethe protection of the copyright acts.⁷⁰ But the illegality or immorality must be inherent in the work. The mere fact that the work may be used for an unlawful purpose will not deprive it of the statutory protection.⁷¹

D. Persons Entitled to Copyright — 1. IN GENERAL. The author, inventor, or designer of a literary or artistic production, or his legal representatives, can by compliance with the statutory requirements obtain copyright therein.⁷² No one else is entitled to the protection of the statutes.⁷³

2. AUTHORS, INVENTORS, OR DESIGNERS — a. Who Are — (i) IN GENERAL. To constitute a person an author, inventor, or designer, within the meaning of the copyright laws, he must by his own intellectual labor and skill produce a work new and original in itself.⁷⁴ It is not necessary, however, that one be the sole voted to its production. Church v. Linton, 25 Ont. 131 [dissenting from Griffin v. Kingston, etc., R. Co., 17 Ont. 660].

Works contrary to morality.—No action can be maintained for pirating a work which professes to be the amours of a courtesan, and it is no answer to the objection that the party is also a wrong-doer in publishing them, and that he therefore ought not to set up their immorality. Stockdale v. Onwhyn, 5 B. & C. 173, 11 E. C. L. 416, 2 C. & P. 163, 12 E. C. L. 506, 7 D. & R. 625, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 122, 29 Rev. Rep. 207.

Works contrary to religion.—An injunction to restrain the infringement of the copyright in a work, as to which it appeared doubtful whether it did not tend to impugn the doctrine of the scriptures, was refused by a court of equity. Lawrence v. Smith, Jac. 471, 23 Rev. Rep. 125, 4 Eng. Ch. 471.

Libelous works.—The author of a work of a libelous or of an immoral tendency can have no legal property in it. Stockdale v. Onwhyn, 5 B. & C. 173, 11 E. C. L. 416, 2 C. & P. 163, 12 E. C. L. 506, 7 D. & R. 625, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 122, 29 Rev. Rep. 207.

Musical compositions of immoral character cannot be protected by copyright; but where a copyright is held invalid because of the use of a word of immoral significance, such as "hottest," the owners thereof may republish the song, omitting the objectionable matter, and obtain a valid copyright therefor. Broder v. Zeno Mauvais Music Co., 88 Fed. 74.

"Dope books."—An "official form chart," which consists of a list of race-horses, and a compilation of facts and statistics relating to the performances of such horses on the track, is a proper subject of protection by copyright, where it is shown to be purchased and used by persons engaged in breeding, training, and racing horses; and on a proper showing a court of equity will not refuse a preliminary injunction against infringement of such copyright on the ground that the chart is also used for betting purposes. Egbert v. Greenberg, 100 Fed. 447.

Playing cards.—The fact that playing cards may be used by persons to violate the laws against gambling does not of itself deprive them of the protection of the law. Richardson v. Miller, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,791.

Employer not author.—A person who hires another to write a book and gives him the description and scope of the work is not the creator of the work for which protection is claimed. Labor bestowed on the production of another is enough to constitute a claim to copyright, if involving originality.⁷⁵ So too a work may be so far the product of the mind of its designer that he will be considered the author of it, although he has had no part in its execution;⁷⁶ but a mere suggestion of the subject, without share in the design or execution, is insufficient to warrant a claim of authorship.⁷⁷

(ii) JOINT AUTHORS. Copyright may vest in two or more persons as joint authors of a production, where it is the result of a preconcerted joint design.⁷⁸ So too there may be owners in common of copyright.⁷⁹ But mere alterations, additions, or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work.⁸⁰

b. Effect of Citizenship or Residence⁸¹ — (i) ENGLAND. In England, irrespective of the international copyright acts,⁸² it is now settled after much controversy that not only a citizen, whether a resident or non-resident,⁸³ but also a foreigner, if within the British dominions at the time of publication in the United Kingdom, author. The literary man who writes the book and prepares it for publication is the author, and the copyright is intended to protect him and not the person who employed him. De Witt v. Brooks, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,851. See also Jefferys v. Baldwin, Amb. 164, 27 Eng. Reprint 109; Levy v. Rutley, L. R. 6 C. P. 523, 40 L. J. C. P. 244, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621, 19 Wkly. Rep. 976.

Piano score of opera.—The arranger, not the original composer, is the author of a piano score of an opera. Wood v. Boosey, L. R. 3 Q. R. 223, 9 B. & S. 175, 37 L. J. Q. B. 84, 18 L. T. Rep. N. Similarity to previous production.—A person will be held to be the author of a song, although there is evidence that his song is similar to a song previously published, if the parts that seem to be alike are not continuous enough or sufficiently extended to indicate that he was guided or aided by the former song, and notwithstanding the fact that he was very young at the time he says the music was formed in his mind; especially since he had the music written out as soon as he was old enough to do so intelligently, and before any other person did so. *Blume v. The person who conceived the idea of an engraving, where neither the design nor general arrangement of the print was his invention, but employed others to compose and execute the print, who designed and arranged the print and the parts that composed it, and executed the same, is not entitled to a copyright, under the act of April 29, 1802. *Binns v. is entitled to copyright. If not within the British dominions at the time of publication a foreigner cannot acquire copyright.⁸⁴

(II) UNITED STATES—(A) In General. Prior to the passage of the International Copyright Act⁸⁵ residents of the United States as well as citizens were entitled to the protection of the copyright laws. Non-resident aliens were not protected.⁸⁶ Under that act, however, an alien can only obtain copyright when he is a citizen or subject of a foreign state which grants reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States, or which is a party to an international copyright agreement to which the United States may become a party at pleasure.⁸⁷

(B) What Residence Required. Residence entitling an alien to the benefit of the copyright laws is determined by the intention existing at the time of filing the title, and is unaffected by any change of intention.⁸⁸

3. ASSIGNEES AND PROPRIETORS—a. In General. In both England and the United States the assignee of an author, inventor, or designer of a work entitled to copyright can claim the protection of the statutes, and this, whether the assignment is before or after publication.⁸⁹ Obviously, in order to entitle an assignee

Statute construed.—Congress, in the revision of the copyright act of 1870, did not intend any reversal or change of its inflexible policy, ever since the act of 1790, of protecting only native or resident authors and artists, and that the word "proprietor," in section 86 of the act of 1870, and in section 4952 of the Revised Statutes, must be construed in the limited and restricted sense in which it has been used in every act from that of 1790 downward, viz., as the legal representative of a right derived from a native resident author or artist. *Yuengling v. Naturalization declaration.—An officer of the British navy, traveling through the United States, and considering himself a British subject, during his stay, filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen. "The word 'assigns' shall be construed to mean and include every person in whom the interest of an author in copyright shall be vested, whether derived from such author before or after the publication of any book, and whether acquired by sale, gift, bequest, or by operation of law, or otherwise." 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45.

Assignment before publication.—"The statute of Anne clearly contemplates a first publication by the assignee as sufficient to give him the monopoly,—and, in point of fact, I believe that nothing is more common than that the booksellers should take an assignment of the copyright, and publish themselves as proprietors, so as to vest the monopoly in them during the term. The words of the statute that the author or his assignee shall have the sole liberty, etc., from the day of the first publication, seem to me to show that the assignee may himself publish, so as to acquire the copyright, and I see no reason why an alien friend should not have this right." *Jefferys v. The literary product of a salaried employee, the result of complications made in the course of his employment, becomes the property of the employer, who may copyright it, and when so copyrighted the employee has no more right than a stranger to copy or reproduce it. Colliery Engineer Co. v. United Correspondence Schools Co., 94 Fed. 152.

Gratuitous services.—L gave his services gratuitously to W, the proprietor of a book, in preparing new editions with notes and other additions of his own composition. W took out a copyright of said editions. By the terms of a contract between them, W was to make a formal agreement not to use L's notes in a subsequent edition without his consent, and gave L the right to make any use of his notes he wished. It was held that L was the equitable owner of said notes; that W ment or implied understanding. The mere fact of employment is not of itself sufficient to vest copyright in the employer,⁹² but in some cases, where the publication is of a peculiar nature, or where there have been special circumstances in the terms of the employment of the contributor, it has been held by the court that it is not necessary that there should be an express agreement between publisher and author that copyright shall belong to the publisher.⁹³

(II) CYCLOPEDIAS AND PERIODICALS. In England the proprietor of any encyclopedia, review, magazine, or periodical work, or of a work published in a series of books or parts, who has employed any persons to compose any volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, shall be entitled to the copyright. The author may, however, by contract, express or implied, reserve to himself the right to publish his composition in a separate form, the copyright in which will vest in himself. In the case of essays, articles, or portions forming part of and first published in reviews, magazines, or other periodical works of a like nature, the right of publishing the same in a separate form reverts to the author after the term of twenty-eight years for the remainder of the term given by the act.⁹⁴ It seems, however, was the legal owner, and the proper person to take out the copyright. Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1.

Equitable assignment.—Where an employer registered in his own name a compilation of designs made by his employee, he was held entitled to the copyright as the equitable assignee of the compiler. The court said: "The person remunerated has no claim to the copyright, but it is the property of the person who remunerates him, and in this Court the person who remunerates must be taken to be the equitable assignee, and the publisher within the meaning of the Act." Grace v. Newman, L. R. 19 Eq. 623, 626, 44 L. J. Ch. 298, 23 Wkly. Rep. 517.

Judicial reports.—A copyright in the original work of a state reporter of judicial decisions, who is paid a salary for such work, may be taken in the name of the secretary of state, for the benefit of the people, and the exclusive right of publishing such copyrighted matter may be vested in a publisher under contract with the state. *Little v. Necessity of contract.—"The title to literary property is in the author whose intellect has given birth to the thoughts and wrought them into the composition, unless he has transferred that title, by contract, to another." Boucicault v. Fox, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,691, 5 Blatchf. 87.

A court reporter, although a sworn public officer, receiving a fixed salary for his labors, is not, in the absence of statute, deprived of any privilege of taking out a copyright which he would otherwise have. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547.

An agreement to write a play for another, and to act in it, with a share in the profits as compensation, does not create a legal or equitable title in the latter which will prevent the author taking out a copyright. *Boucicault v. that where the publishers of a periodical employ and pay an editor, and he employs and pays persons for writing articles for the publication, the copyright does not vest in the publishers under the statute;⁹⁵ and in all cases actual payment for an article written for a periodical work is a condition precedent to the vesting of the copyright. A contract for payment is not sufficient.⁹⁶

4. LICENSEES. A person who owns a copyright of a book, or a work of art, or a dramatic or musical composition does not lose that copyright by reason of the grant of a partial license or of a full license to use it, and he is not prevented from suing an infringer, if before action brought he has taken the necessary steps to perfect his copyright.⁹⁷

Implied consent.—Although no express words to that effect are used, where a man employs another to write an article, or to do anything else for him, unless there is something in the surrounding circumstances or in the course of dealing between the parties to require a different construction, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, it is to be understood that the writing or other thing is produced upon the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to the employer—subject to the limitation pointed out in the eighteenth section of the act. *Sweet v. By the effect of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 18, the proprietor of a periodical is precluded from republishing, without the consent of the author, articles written by the latter for and published in such periodicals in any other form than as reprints of the entire numbers of the periodicals in which the articles appeared. *Smith v. Necessity of contract reserving copyright.—It seems that in the absence of a contract, either express or implied, reserving to the author a qualified copyright, the purchaser of a manuscript is at liberty to alter and deal with it as he thinks proper. Cox v. Cox, 1 Eq. Rep. 94, 11 Hare 118, 1 Wkly. Rep. 345, 45 Eng. Ch. 118. See also Sweet v. Benning, 16 C. B. 459, 1 Jur. N. S. 543, 24 L. J. C. P. 175, 3 Wkly. Rep. 519, 81 E. C. L. 459.

What constitutes separate publication.—A republication in supplemental numbers of a selection of various tales previously published in a periodical is a separate publication within the section. Smith v. Johnson, 4 Giff. 632, 9 Jur. N. S. 1223, 33 L. J. Ch. 137, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 437, 12 Wkly. Rep. 122. See also Mayhew v. Maxwell, 1 Johns. & H. 312, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 466, 8 Wkly. Rep. 118, where it was held that the republication of a number of a periodical under a different title and price is a separate publication of an article contained in the number, which the author is entitled to restrain.

The author's right to restrain a separate publication is not copyright within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 24, and it is no objection to a motion for an injunction in such a case that the author has not entered his work at Stationers' Hall. Mayhew v. Maxwell, 1 Johns. & H. 312, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 466, 8 Wkly. Rep. 118.

Articles composed at joint expense of proprietors of several newspapers.—The three several proprietors of three periodicals jointly employed a person to compile for them lists of registered bills of sale and deeds of arrangement, on the terms that the copyright was to belong to the three proprietors. The three periodicals were registered under the Copyright Act. The compiling these lists required skill, and involved a good deal of labor and expense. The defendant association copied and circulated among their own members so much of these lists as related to their own neighborhood, which was a very small part of the whole. The three proprietors sued to restrain this proceeding. It was held that the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 18, was not to be construed as confining the copyright of a proprietor of a newspaper to articles composed on the term that the copyright should belong to and be paid for by him alone, that each of the three proprietors had an interest in the copyright of the lists, that having registered his periodical he had a right to sue to restrain infringement, and that the defendant association could not escape on the ground that it had only copied a small portion of the lists. *Trade Auxiliary Co. v. 5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. Copyright is personal property, and descends on the death of an owner to his personal representatives.⁹⁸ It is also transmissible by will.⁹⁹

6. TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY. Copyright comes within the vesting section of the English Bankruptcy Act and passes to the trustee of a bankrupt owner;¹ but it is probable that an assignee in bankruptcy cannot publish unpublished works of a bankrupt without his consent.²

E. Proceedings to Obtain Copyright—1. ENGLAND—a. In General. Under the general copyright statutes of England, the only prerequisite to the vesting of copyright is that the work must be first or contemporaneously published in the United Kingdom.³ Statutory provisions as to registration, deposit of copies, and notice are either merely directory, or at most prerequisite only to a right of action.⁴

b. Registration—(1) SUBJECTS OF REGISTRATION—(A) Books—(1) IN GENERAL—(a) NECESSITY OF ENTRY. Books are required to be registered at Stationers' Hall,⁵ but such registration is not necessary to the existence of the copyright. It is only necessary in order to perfect the right to sue, and it need not be made before the alleged infringement.⁶

(b) FORM AND REQUISITES. While entry under the above statute is not essential to the vesting of copyright,⁷ a strict compliance with its provisions is essential to a right of action at law or in equity for infringement. A false or erroneous entry of any of the prescribed facts will vitiate the registration;⁸ but while a

Issue of writ on day of registration.—The issue of a writ in an action for the infringement of a copyright on the same day, but subsequently to the registration of such copyright under the copyright act of 1842, sufficiently complies with section 24 of the statute, so as to enable the person making the registration to sue in respect of the infringement. *Warne v. false or erroneous registration will defeat a pending suit, a new suit may be brought after a correction of the entry.⁹

(c) WHO MAY REGISTER. Only one in whom the property in the copyright is legally vested is entitled to be registered as the proprietor.¹⁰

(d) TIME OF REGISTRATION. As the act gives copyright merely from the date of first publication, and provides for the entry of that date, registration can only be made after publication.¹¹

(2) CYCLOPEDIAS AND PERIODICALS. Encyclopedias and periodicals must be registered, but the registration of the first number or part gives a right of action for the infringement of subsequent issues.¹² As in the case of books generally

N. S. 864 (day of month of publication, as well as year, must be stated); Page v. Wisden, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 435, 17 Wkly. Rep. 483 (error in date of publication); Hazlitt v. Templeman, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 593 (registration must be in name of proprietor).

Name and abode of proprietor.—The author and proprietor of copyright in a song, in the entry at Stationers' Hall, describing his place of abode as 65 Oxford street, he being in America at the time of the publication and having no place of abode in England, but 65 Oxford street being the address of his publishers, is a sufficient description. Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B. N. S. 182, 87 E. C. L. 182.

Non-registration of first edition.—Registration of reprint.—The plaintiff in an action for infringement of copyright in a book, the first edition of which was published in November, 1881, had not, before commencing such action, registered at Stationers' Hall either the first or a second edition which he had subsequently published, but he had registered a third edition which was in fact a reprint of the first edition, describing it in the entry as a third edition and giving the time of the first publication as April 22, 1885, which was the date at which the third edition was published. It was held that the plaintiff had not truly stated the time of the first publication of his books within the meaning of section 13 of the copyright act of 1842, and consequently had not caused entry to be made of his book pursuant to the act, and was precluded by section 24 from maintaining an action for infringement of copyright until he had made due and correct entry pursuant to section 13. Thomas v. Turner, 33 Ch. D. 292, 56 L. J. Ch. 56, 55 L. T. Rep. N. S. 534, 35 Wkly. Rep. 177.

Reprint with additions.—Where the date of the first publication of an illustrated catalogue, being a reprint with additions of catalogues duly registered in 1880 and 1882, was given on registration as June 22, 1885, it was held that it was a correct statement as to the first publication of the new pages, and that the description in the catalogue of the articles as the "patent" subsequent to the expiration of the patent, on July 31, 1885, did not take away the plaintiff's copyright in the part of the catalogue which was correctly stated, and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to prevent any further publication of books by the defendant, so far as they contained an infringement of the copyright of the plaintiff in his illustrated

Effect of false registration on assignment.—Where in registering the proprietorship of a copyright, either the date of the first publication or the name of the publisher is correctly entered, a subsequent assignment by entry in the book of registry is valid. Low v. Routledge, L. R. 1 Ch. 42, 10 Jur. N. S. 922, 33 L. J. Ch. 717, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 838, 12 Wkly. Rep. 1069.

Whose name must be registered.—Where copyright belongs to A it cannot be properly registered in the name of his nominee or agent unless the property is actually vested in such person as trustee for A. The conjunction in such case of the unregistered proprietor as co-plaintiff with the improperly registered nominee or agent will not render an action for infringement sustainable. *Petty v. (B) Dramatic or Musical Compositions. Dramatic or musical compositions need not be registered in order to secure and protect the exclusive right of representing them.¹⁵

(C) Engravings, Prints, and Lithographs. Engravings, prints, and lithographs are not required to be registered under the statutes relating to them.¹⁶

Right of action before registration.—25 & 26 Vict. c. 68 provides for registration of proprietorship and assignments of copyright in paintings, and enacts that no proprietor of any such copyright shall be entitled to the benefit of the act until registration, and no action shall be sustainable, nor any penalty be recoverable, in respect of anything done before registration. Semble a registered proprietor cannot sue for offenses under the act committed when an earlier proprietor was on the register. Dupuy v. Dilkes, 48 L. J. Ch. 682.

Registration of assignment.—A person to whom the copyright in a picture has been assigned by the author, of which assignment a memorandum has been duly registered, has a good title under the act, although the original copyright of the author has not been

(ii) EFFECT OF ENTRY. Registration not only perfects the right of action for infringement, but a properly certified copy of the entry is receivable in evidence in all courts and in all summary proceedings as prima facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright or license as therein expressed.¹⁸

(iii) AMENDING OR EXPUNGING ENTRY. If any person deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under color of the act, he may apply by motion to the king's bench division in term time, or apply by summons to any judge of such court in vacation for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied; and such court or judge shall make such order for expunging, varying, or confirming such entry, either with or without costs, as such court or judge shall deem just—such order to be carried into effect by the officer of the Stationers' company appointed for the purposes of the act.¹⁹ It seems that the court has no power to restore an entry when once it has been expunged.²⁰

c. Deposit of Copies of Book. A printed copy of the whole of every book, together with all maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto, is required to be delivered to the British museum in the mode and within the periods prescribed by the act.²¹ The act further provides for a like delivery to certain named libraries upon demand made.²²

where prints, cuts, engravings, or lithographs are published as illustrations of a book, the copyright of the latter protects them without the inscription of date of publication and name of proprietor.²⁴

e. Publication—(i) IN GENERAL. Publication is essential to statutory copyright; it is the commencement and foundation of the right, the terminus a quo the period of the existence of the right is to run, and a condition precedent to the existence of the right.²⁵

(ii) WHAT CONSTITUTES—(A) In General. Publication is the act of offering a book, map, print, piece of music, or the like, to the public by sale or by gratuitous distribution.²⁶ It may be of a part as well as of the whole of a production.²⁷

(B) Dramatic or Musical Composition. In the case of a dramatic or musical composition its first public representation or performance is equivalent to publication, so far at least as regards the exclusive right of representation or performance. It is not a publication so far as the literary copyright is concerned.²⁸

(c) Works of Art. Neither the publication of an engraving of a work of art, its sale, nor its public exhibition, where copying it would not be permitted, is a publication of it.²⁹

2. UNITED STATES — a. In General. In the United States there are certain requirements of law as to depositing the title or a description of the work, the delivery of copies or photograph of the work to the librarian of congress; and the insertion or inscription of a notice in or upon the work, a compliance with which is essential to the existence and protection of copyright.³¹

b. Deposit of Title or Description of Work — (1) IN GENERAL. No person is entitled to copyright unless he shall on or before the day of publication in this or any foreign country deliver at the office of the librarian of congress or deposit in the mail within the United States, addressed to the librarian of congress, at Contemporaneous publication.—With regard to the sufficiency of contemporaneous publication in the United Kingdom and abroad, Wilde, C. J., said: "If it be correct to say that a foreigner, the author of a work composed abroad, and published by him in this country, is, by the municipal law of his country, entitled to a copyright in the work, how can such right be defeated by a contemporaneous publication abroad? In the popular sense of the word, each would be the first publication. But, if neither could be so called, we think the result would be the same; for, that, in order to defeat the claim of copyright, a prior publication in some place, or by some other party, should be proved." Cocks v. Purday, 5 C. B. 860, 884, 12 Jur. 677, 17 L. J. C. P. 273, 57 E. C. L. 860.

Canada.—Printing and publishing a book in Canada from stereotyped plates imported from England is a sufficient printing within the meaning of Can. Rev. Stat. c. 62, although no typographical work is done in the preparation of the copies. Frowde v. Parrish, 27 Ont. 526. Section 33 of the Copyright Act (Can. Rev. Stat. c. 62) does not impose the penalty mentioned therein upon the owner of a Canadian copyright in respect to a musical composition who has the work printed abroad and inserts notification of the existence of such copyright on copies published in Canada. Lancefield v. Anglo-Canadian Music Publishing Assoc., 26 Ont. 457.

31. Compliance with statute essential.—Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. ed. 1055; Bennett v. Carr, 96 Fed. 213, 37 C. C. A. 453; *Chicago Music Co. v. J. W. Power of congress.—Congress, in making provision to vest an exclusive right in an author, has the power to prescribe the conditions on which such right shall be enjoyed; and no one can avail himself of such right who does not substantially comply with the requisitions of the law. Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. 591, 8 L. ed. 1055.

Act construed.—"Under sections 4952 and 4956 of the United States revised statutes [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) pp. 3406, 3407], the plaintiff can have no copyright till he has performed the prescribed conditions, and until he has acquired his copyright there can be no violation of that right at all which can afford a ground of action. Instead of section 4962 being a limitation of the acts to be performed, or alleged in order to entitle a party to maintain an action, it imposes an additional duty upon him as a prerequisite to its maintenance. He must first acquire a copyright under the other provisions of the act, and then in order to enforce his right against infringers he must, also, give notice of his right by the means prescribed by section 4962, so that other parties may not copy his work in ignorance of his rights. This seems to be the object of the provision." Parkinson v. Laselle, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,762, 3 Sawy. 330, per Sawyer, J., at page 1212.

"All the conditions clearly imposed by congress are important, and their performance is essential to a perfect title." Boucicault v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47, at page 984. "Until these things are done, the copyright is not perfect; although, by taking the incipient step, a right is acquired, which chancery will protect, until the other acts may be done." Pulte v. Derby, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,465, at page 52, 5 McLean 328.

Washington, District of Columbia, a printed copy of the title of the book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph, or chromo, or a description of the printing, drawing, statue, statuary, or a model or design for a work of the fine arts for which he desires a copyright.³²

(II) VARIATION BETWEEN TITLE DEPOSITED AND TITLE PUBLISHED. If the published title of a book is sufficient to identify it with substantial certainty with the registered copyright, the copyright will not be forfeited on account of immaterial variations between the two.³³

c. Deposit of Copies or Photograph of Work—(i) IN GENERAL. No person is entitled to copyright unless he shall, not later than the day of the publication thereof in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, or deposit in the mail within the United States, addressed to the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, chromo, cut, print, or photograph, or in the case of the fine arts, a photograph of the same.³⁴

Presumption as to time of deposit.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the deposit of title was made before publication, and that, where the work purports to have been deposited within three months after the title, it was deposited within three months after publication. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547. See infra, I, E, 2, c, (III).

Although the title and the work were deposited on the same day, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the former was deposited before and the latter after publication. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547 [affirming 5 Fed. 726, 10 Biss. 139]. Compare Baker v. Taylor, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 782, 2 Blatchf. 82.

The "printed" copy of the title of a book or other article, required by U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4956 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3407], to be delivered or mailed to the librarian of congress, may be "printed" with a pen as well as type, with or without the aid of tracing paper. *Chapman v. Illustration.—The copy of the title of a play, filed under the act of Feb. 3, 1891, to obtain a copyright, was, "Under the Gaslight, A Romantic Panorama of the Streets and Homes of New York." The title of the play published was, "Under the Gaslight, A Totally Original and Picturesque Drama of Life and Love in these Times, in Five Acts." It was held that there was no material variance. The title of the play, within the meaning of the act, being the name to be given to it by the public, and by those who might buy and sell it, was "Under the Gaslight," the remaining words being mere description of the general character of the work, apparently not intended, and not in fact used as any part of the title. Daly v. Webster, 56 Fed. 483, 4 C. C. A. 10 [reversing 39 Fed. 265, 47 Fed. 903].

Proof of deposit.—The court will not require direct proof that advance copies of complainant's publication were seasonably deposited in the mail for the purposes of the copyright statute, where it appears beyond a doubt that complainant forwarded them so early that respondent could not possibly have been prejudiced by any delay therein. Ladd v. Oxnard, 75 Fed. 703. Similarly where it is proved that the party claiming a copyright for a song deposited two copies in the mail and got a receipt from the librarian of congress acknowledging the receipt of two copies of the publication by its title in full, with the

(II) NEW EDITIONS. The proprietor of every copyright book or other article shall deliver at the office of the librarian of congress, or deposit in the mail, addressed to the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, a copy of every subsequent edition wherein any substantial changes shall be made;³⁵ and the copyrighting of the volumes of a particular edition of an author's works which have been previously published, some with and some without copyright, protects only what is original in the new edition, and does not enlarge the rights of the owner of the copyright as to any matter previously published.³⁶

(III) TIME OF DEPOSIT. The statutory requirement as to the time of deposit must be complied with.³⁷ Under the present statute the deposit must be made not later than the day of publication.³⁸

(IV) PENALTY FOR OMISSION TO DEPOSIT. For every failure of the proprietor to deliver or deposit in the mail the required copies or photograph he shall be liable to a penalty of twenty-five dollars, to be recovered by the librarian of congress, in the name of the United States, in an action in the nature of an action of debt, in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the delinquent may reside or be found.³⁹

d. Inserting or Inscribing Notice—(I) IN GENERAL. No person can maintain an action for the infringement of his copyright unless he shall give notice thereof by inserting in the several copies of every edition published, on the title-page or the page following, if it be a book, or if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statu-ary, or model or design intended to be perfected and completed as a work of the fine arts, by inscribing on the face or front thereof, or on the face of the substance on which the same shall be mounted, the following words: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year —, by A. B, in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington;" or at his option the word "copyright," together with the year the copyright was entered, and the name of the party by whom it was taken out, thus: "Copyright, 18—, by A. B."⁴⁰ date over the official signature of the librarian, this will be considered evidence that two copies were delivered to the librarian as required by the act of congress. Blume v. Spear, 30 Fed. 629.

Character of copies deposited.—It is necessary to a valid copyright under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4956, as amended 26 U. S. Stat. at L. 1107 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3407], that the copies deposited with the librarian of congress shall be printed from type set in the United States, or from plates made therefrom, but not that they shall contain notice of the copyright. Osgood v. A. S. Aloe Instrument Co., 69 Fed. 291. Compare Oliver Ditson Co. v. Littleton, 67 Fed. 905, 15 C. C. A. 61 [affirming 62 Fed. 597], where it was held that the requirement that the two copies required to be deposited shall be manufactured in the United States does not apply to musical compositions, although published in book form or made by lithographic process.

"Best edition."—The copyright law requiring a deposit of two copies of the best (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4959 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3410]) edition of the work to complete the copyright is sufficiently complied with in the case of a separate article of an American author published in a foreign encyclopedia by the deposit of the sheets or pages containing the article taken out of the bound volume. Black v. Henry G. Allen

Co., 56 Fed. 764. Under the act of March 3, 1891, amending the copyright law as contained in the Revised Statutes the provision as to the deposit of two copies of the "best edition" is stricken out. 26 U. S. Stat. at L. 1108 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3410].

Deposit before publication.—The copies of a copyright work required by section 4959 of the Revised Statutes to be deposited with the librarian of congress within ten days after publication may be so deposited after the printing of the work and before its formal publication. *Chapman v. (ii) WORK PUBLISHED IN SEVERAL VOLUMES. Where an entire work is published in several volumes at different times, the insertion of the notice of copyright in the first volume of the work is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the statute to secure the whole work.⁴¹

(iii) NEW EDITIONS. New editions containing material alterations and additions to be protected must be copyrighted and a notice of the new copyright inserted therein,⁴² but it is not necessary that the original notice be inserted in such new editions.⁴³

(iv) SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE. The notice of copyright required by the statute is sufficiently given if it clearly shows the claim of copyright, the date at which the right was obtained, and the name of the proprietor. But a substantial compliance with the statutory forms is required.⁴⁴

The word "copies," in 18 U. S. Stat. at L. 78 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3411] requiring a notice of copyright to be inserted in the several copies of the edition of a copyrighted book, or, if the copyrighted article be a map, painting, etc., to be inscribed upon some visible portion thereof, refers not to reproductions of an original, but to the individual copyrighted things whether one or many. Accordingly it was held that in order to maintain an action for the infringement of a copyright of a painting, a notice of copyright must have been inscribed upon some visible portion thereof when it was published. Pierce, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Werckmeister, 72 Fed. 54, 18 C. C. A. 431 [reversing 63 Fed. 445].

The object of inscribing upon copyright articles the word "copyright," with the year when the copyright was taken out and the name of the party taking it out, is to give notice of the copyright to the public, to prevent a person from being punished who ignorantly and innocently reproduces the photograph without knowledge of protecting copyright. Sarony v. Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co., 17 Fed. 591, construing 18 U. S. Stat. at L. 78 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3411].

Penalty for impressing false notice.—The penalty imposed by statute is not retroactive in effect and does not apply to a case where the infringement was committed before its passage. McLoughlin v. Raphael Tuck & Sons Co., 115 Fed. 85, 53 C. C. A. 508, construing 26 U. S. Stat. at L. 1109 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3412].

Sufficiency of notice.—A copyright of a book, obtained by an author in her own name, is vitiated for failure to comply with the requirement of the act of Feb. 3, 1831, that notice of copyright be inserted in each copy of the work, by its subsequent publication, with her consent, in a magazine with no other notice of copyright than that of the entry of the magazine in the name of its publishers. Miffin v. Dutton, 190 U. S. 265, 23 S. Ct. 771, 47 L. ed. — [affirming 112 Fed. 1004, 50 C. C. A. 661], construing 4 U. S. Stat. at L. 436.

On series of pictures.—A series of four thousand five hundred pictures, representing the launching of a vessel, were marked as copyrighted by attaching a plate at one end bearing the notice of copyright, and it was held that this was sufficient. Edison v. Lubin, 122 Fed. 240.

Variance between date of deposit and notice.—Where the title had been deposited in 1867, it was held immaterial as to third persons that the notice of copyright printed in the work stated that the copyright had been entered in 1866, the proprietor being concluded by such notice as to the time when his copyright expired. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547 [affirming 5 Fed. 726, 10 Biss. 139]. Compare Baker v. Taylor, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 782, 2 Blatchf. 82, in which the title-page of the book was deposited in 1846, and the notice of

(v) PENALTIES FOR INSERTING OR IMPRESSING FALSE NOTICE—(A) In General. The false insertion or impression of a notice of copyright in or upon any article, whether such article be subject to copyright or otherwise, or knowingly to issue, sell, or import any article bearing such false notice of copyright, is prohibited under a penalty of one hundred dollars, recoverable one half for the person who shall sue for such penalty and one half to the use of the United States. The circuit courts of the United States sitting in equity are authorized to enjoin the issuing, publishing, or selling of any article marked or imported in violation of the copyright laws.⁴⁵

entry as printed in the copies of the book stated the entry to have been made in 1847. It was held that the error, whether arising from mistake or not, was fatal to the title, under section 5 of the act of Feb. 3, 1831. See also Schumacher v. Wogram, 35 Fed. 210.

Abbreviation of date.—The words "Copyright 93, by Bolles, Brooklyn," printed on the face of a photograph, are sufficient as the notice of copyright required by 18 U. S. Stat. at L. 78 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3411]. Bolles v. Outing Co., 77 Fed. 966, 23 C. C. A. 594. See also Snow v. Mast, 65 Fed. 995.

Initials of name sufficient.—The inserting into a copyright notice required by 18 U. S. Stat. at L. 78 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3411], of the initial of the christian name and the full surname is a sufficient compliance with the law. Sarony v. Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co., 17 Fed. 591 [affirmed in 111 U. S. 53, 4 S. Ct. 279, 28 L. ed. 349].

Name of proprietor of serial.—A copyright of a book is invalid where the notice printed therein gives the name of the author as having taken such copyright, while the serial numbers of a magazine in which the contents of the book were first published were copyrighted by the publishers, and the notices printed therein showed such copyright in their name. Mifflin v. Dutton, 107 Fed. 708.

Use of trade-name.—The name "Photographische Gesellschaft," being the trade-name created by the owner of a copyright, and extensively used by him for many years in his business, is a sufficient designation of the party by whom the copyright is taken out. Werckmeister v. Springer Lithographing Co., 63 Fed. 808.

Surplusage.—A notice on a map: "Copyright entered according to act of Congress 1889, by T. C. Hefel, Civil Engineer," is sufficient, since it differs from the prescribed formula only by including words which are surplusage. Hefel v. Whitely Land Co., 54 Fed. 179.

The residence of the party taking out a copyright, although a foreigner, need not be stated in the notice. Werckmeister v. Springer Lithographing Co., 63 Fed. 808.

Effect of omission of notice by licensee.—The owner of a copyrighted literary production does not lose the exclusive property therein given by the copyright because a licensee authorized to publish the article on the express condition that he print therewith the usual copyright notice inadvertently omits to do so, and any one who copies and republishes the article so published, although without actual knowledge of the copyright, does so at his peril. American Press Assoc. v. Daily Story Pub. Co., 120 Fed. 766.

In Canada a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements is sufficient. Garland v. Gemmill, 14 Can. Supreme Ct. 321; Bernard v. Berton, 14 Quebec 219.

45. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4963, as amended 29 U. S. Stat. at L. 694 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3413]; Hoertel v. Raphael Tuck, etc., Co., 94 Fed. 844; Rigney v. Dutton, 77 Fed. 173; Rigney v. Raphael Tuck, etc., Co., 77 Fed. 173; Taft v. Stephens Lithograph, etc., Co., 39 Fed. 781; Rosenbach v. Dreyfuss, 2 Fed. 217; Ferrett v. Atwill, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,747, 1 Blatchf. 151.

Construction.—The language of the act authorizing the recovery of the penalty for putting the imprint of a copyright upon a work not legally copyrighted is to be particularly adhered to in the construction thereof. Ferrett v. Atwill, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,747, 1 Blatchf. 151.

Requisites of notice.—A false copyright notice, impressed on a book or other publication, to subject the person so impressing it to the penalty imposed by statute must contain all the essentials of a valid notice, as prescribed by section 4962, and a notice which omits the date of the alleged copyright will not sustain an action for the penalty. Hoertel v. Raphael Tuck, etc., Co., 94 Fed. 844. Compare Rigney v. Raphael Tuck, etc., Co., 77 Fed. 173, where it was held that the notice need not be inserted on one of the pages named in section 4962 of the Revised Statutes.

Personal insertion unnecessary.—The penalty is incurred by one who causes the publication in a trade paper of an uncopyrighted print or cut, with a notice of copyright attached, although he does not himself insert or impress such notice. Rigney v. Dutton, 77 Fed. 176.

Cut or print of copyrighted picture.—It is not a violation of the statute to impress, upon an imperfect miniature, cut, or print of a copyrighted picture, a notice of copyright, although such cut or print is not separately copyrighted. Rigney v. Dutton, 77 Fed. 176.

46. Ferrett v. Atwill, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,747, 1 Blatchf. 151.

(2) JURISDICTION. The circuit courts of the United States as well as the district courts have jurisdiction of actions to recover penalties under the statute.⁴⁷

(3) SUMMONS. The summons, in an action to recover penalties under the statute, should be indorsed with a reference to the statute;⁴⁸ but serving a declaration referring to the statute at the same time process is served on the defendant will be sufficient.⁴⁹

(4) PLEADING. The petition or complaint must allege all the facts necessary to show that the defendant is liable under the statute, if the petition or complaint is true, not merely that he may be liable.⁵⁰

e. Publication.—(i) WHAT CONSTITUTES. Except in the case of dramatic or musical compositions,⁵¹ the acts which will constitute publication are the same in the United States as in England.⁵²

(ii) TIME OF PUBLICATION. Publication must be made within a reasonable time after the deposit of title with the librarian of congress.⁵³

An averment that the book was not copyrighted by defendant is not equivalent to an allegation that he had not obtained a copyright and is demurrable. Rigney v. Raphael Tuck, etc., Co., 77 Fed. 173.

51. A public representation of a dramatic piece at a theater is not such a publication as to deprive the author or his assignee of his right to copyright. Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N. Y. 532, 7 Am. Rep. 480. See also Boucicault v. Fox, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,691, 5 Blatchf. 87; Roberts v. Myers, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,906, Brunn. Col. Cas. 698.

52. See supra, I, E, 1, e, (ii); Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Jewelers' Weekly Pub. Co., 84 Hun (N. Y.) 12, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 41, 65 N. Y. St. 198; Wall v. Gordon, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 349; Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547 [overruling 5 Fed. 726, 10 Biss. 139]; Snow v. Laird, 98 Fed. 813, 39 C. C. A. 311; Larowe-Loisette v. O'Loughlin, 88 Fed. 896; Ladd v. Oxnard, 75 Fed. 703; Pierce, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Werckmeister, 72 Fed. 54, 18 C. C. A. 431 [overruling 63 Fed. 445]; Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 56 Fed. 764; Falk v. Gast Lithograph, etc., Co., 54 Fed. 890, 4 C. C. A. 648; Gottsberger v. Aldine Book Pub. Co., 33 Fed. 381.

A publication, literary or dramatic, may be limited or general. It is general whenever the communication effecting it is not restricted both as to the persons to whom and the purposes for which it is made. Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,644.

The issuance to subscribers, without count as a number of a book of credit ratings and the financial standing of persons and firms engaged in a particular line of business, upon a stipulation that the same is merely loaned to the subscriber, and not sold, and that if found in any hands other than those entitled to use it by permission of the publishers the latter may take possession of it and annul all rights of the subscriber, is a publication sufficient to give the compilers a right to protection if they have taken necessary steps to secure a copyright. Ladd v. Oxnard, 75 Fed. 703.

Contract not to communicate contents.—The selling of copies of a book by the author to all persons paying him for a course of instruction connected therewith, during a number of years, constitutes a publication which deprives him of the right to subsequently obtain a copyright, although each purchaser was bound by contract not to communicate the contents of the book to any one else. Larowe-Loisette v. O'Loughlin, 88 Fed. 896.

Leaving copies of a musical composition with a dealer for sale, but with instructions not to sell any before a specified time, constitutes a publication and dedication to the public of such composition, although a copyright was in fact obtained before the date on which the dealer was authorized to sell. Wall v. Gordon, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 349.

Delivering to the secretary of state, for the use of the state, the number of copies of a volume of law reports required by law to be delivered is a publication of that volume. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547.

A painting which is publicly exhibited is "published," within the meaning of the copyright laws. Pierce, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Werckmeister, 72 Fed. 54, 18 C. C. A. 431.

Sale of replica.—The right of copyright in a painting is not destroyed by a sale of replica or original study or model differing from the painting in size and style. Werckmeister v. Springer Lithographing Co., 63 Fed. 808.

53. Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Jewelers' Weekly Pub. Co., 84 Hun (N. Y.) 12, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 41, 65 N. Y. St. 198; Falk v. Gast Lithograph, etc., Co., 48 Fed. 262; Boucicault v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47; Carillo v. Shook, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,407.

Delay of two months.—A delay of the publication of a photograph for two months and eighteen days after the title was filed with the librarian of congress, as required by the copyright law, is not unreasonable. Falk v. Gast Lithograph, etc., Co., 48 Fed. 262.

(III) PLACE OF PUBLICATION. While the law is silent upon the question, it is apprehended that, following the construction given by the courts to the English statutes,⁵⁴ and in accordance with the evident intent of the present law,⁵⁵ the courts will hold that first or contemporaneous publication must be made within the United States.⁵⁶

F. Dedication or Abandonment—1. PUBLICATION BEFORE DEPOSIT OF TITLE OR COPIES. The publication of a work before the deposit of its title or description, or before the deposit of the copies or photographs required to be deposited with the librarian of congress, renders a subsequent copyright ineffectual.⁵⁷

2. ABANDONMENT. Any clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the proprietor of a copyright⁵⁸ showing an intention not to maintain and exercise his right will

Musical compositions, although published in book form or made by lithographic process, are not included in the requirement as to manufacture in the United States. Oliver Ditson Co. v. Littleton, 67 Fed. 905, 15 C. C. A. 61 [affirming 62 Fed. 597].

As to what constitutes publication generally see supra, I, E, 2, e, (II).

As to the effect of publication upon common-law rights of literary property see LITERARY PROPERTY.

58. Consent of the author to publication abroad places him in the position of a foreign author and is an abandonment of his rights to a copyright here. Boucicault v. Wood, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,693, 2 Biss. 34.

Publication without notice.—An injunction was refused where the author had published the pirated parts of his work in a public newspaper. Miller v. McElroy, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,581. Compare Schumacher v. Schwenke, 30 Fed. 690, where it was held that the owner of a copyrighted painting by publishing lithographic copies thereof did not lose the right to restrain others from copying these copies, although themselves uncopyrighted.

Defective notice.—Publication of a copyrighted work containing a defective notice is an abandonment of the copyright. Miffin v. Dutton, 112 Fed. 1004, 50 C. C. A. 661; Higgins v. Keuffel, 30 Fed. 627.

Miniature samples.—The proprietor of a copyrighted photograph may, without losing his copyright, use a card containing one hundred miniature samples of different copyrighted photographs which has not the word "copyright" impressed thereon, for the sole purpose of enabling dealers to give orders. Such a use is not a publication within the meaning of the copyright laws. Falk v. Gast Lithograph, etc., Co., 54 Fed. 890, 4 C. C. A. 648.

A copyright of a single article bound up in a volume, the bulk of which is publici juris, is valid against an unpermitted reprint of the copyrighted article. Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 56 Fed. 764.

The publication of a novel founded upon a copyrighted drama, by authority of the owner of the drama, is not a dedication of the drama to the public. Shook v. Rankin, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,805.

The performance with the author's consent, and for his benefit, of a play which has not been printed by him, is not an abandonment to the public nor a publication within the Copyright Act. Boucicault v. Fox, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,691, 5 Blatchf. 87; Boucicault v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47; Boucicault v. Wood, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,693, 2 Biss. 34.

Use for instruction.—It is not an abandonment to use one's copyrighted work to instruct others who are permitted to take copies. Bartlette v. Crittenden, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,076, 5 McLean 32, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,082, 4 McLean 300.

Serial publication.—Where a literary work has been published serially with the consent of the author, and a copyright secured in the name of the publisher, whether it be for the publisher alone or in the interests of the publisher and the author, the author cannot subsequently copyright the work; and if subsequently the author republishes it in book form, with a notice of a copyright in his own name, such republication, with such a notice, effects, under the statute, an abandonment of the copyright. Miffin v. Dutton, 112 Fed. 1004, 50 C. C. A. 661.

Evidence insufficient to show.—In a suit constitute an abandonment, and warrant any person in the free and unrestricted use of the work.⁵⁹

G. Extent and Duration of Rights Acquired—1. EXTENT—a. In General. The right secured by the copyright laws is the property in the literary or artistic production—the exclusive right of multiplying and vending copies—and this right is only infringed when other persons produce a substantial copy of the whole or of a material part of the book or thing for which he has secured copyright.⁶⁰

b. Title of Work. The copyright law affords no protection to the mere title as distinguished from the body of the work,⁶¹ although there may be instances where a title is made use of in bad faith, or to promote some imposition, or to inflict a wrong, when a court of justice should interfere to prevent its use or to compensate one who has in consequence sustained an injury.⁶²

c. Subject-Matter. The protection afforded by the copyright laws only for an infringement of a copyright it appeared that the author had type set up, plates taken therefrom, and sheets to the number of two thousand impressions struck off, and some of these were bound, distributed, and sold. A judgment was rendered against him, execution issued, and the plates were levied on and sold to a third person. It was held that the author, as against a purchaser of the plates from the third person, had not abandoned his copyright of the book. Patterson v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co., 119 Fed. 451.

59. Wall v. Gordon, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 349; Miffin v. Dutton, 112 Fed. 1004, 50 C. C. A. 661; Higgins v. Keuffel, 30 Fed. 627; Boucicault v. Wood, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,693, 2 Biss. 34; Miller v. McElroy, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,581. See also Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433, 56 Fed. 764; Falk v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47; Shook v. Rankin, 21 Fed. Cas. 12,805, in none of which were the facts held sufficient to show an abandonment. And see ABANDONMENT; LITERARY PROPERTY.

60. Nature of right secured.—Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 99, 25 L. ed. 841; Perris v. Hexamer, 99 U. S. 674, 25 L. ed. 308; Corbett v. Purdy, 80 Fed. 901; Griggs v. Perrin, 49 Fed. 15; Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1.

The copyright of a book describing a new system of stenography does not protect the system, when considered simply as a system apart from the language by which it is explained, so as to make the illustration by another of the same system in a different book, employing totally different language, an infringement. Griggs v. Perrin, 49 Fed. 15. See also Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 99, 25 L. ed. 841, where it was held that a peculiar system of bookkeeping was not protected by the copyright of the book in which it was explained.

Smith*, 42 Fed. 266; Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Jur. N. S. 1051.

The title is an appendage to the work, and where the latter is not protected by a copyright the former is not. Jollie v. Jaques, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,437, 1 Blatchf. 618.

After expiration of copyright.—The words "Webster's Dictionary," which appeared on the title-page of the edition of 1847, are now public property, by reason of the expiration of the copyright; and any one may reprint that edition and entitle the reprint "Webster's Dictionary." Merriam v. Famous Shoe, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 411.

Words denoting the virtues.—Words which, in their ordinary and universal use, denote the virtues, such as "charity," "faith," cannot ordinarily be appropriated by any one as a title of designation for a book, play, etc., written by him. Isaacs v. Daly, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 511.

extends to the original work of the author, inventor, designer, or proprietor which is properly subject to copyright. It may be of a part as well as of the whole of a production, but does not include mere method, form, size, or arrangement. Each and every part that may be copyrighted is protected by the copyright of the whole.⁶³

2. DURATION—a. England. In England the duration of copyright in the various subjects is regulated by the different statutes granting the right. Copyright commences to run from the date of first publication.⁶⁴

b. United States. In the United States copyrights are granted for the term of twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title;⁶⁵ and the author, inventor, or designer if he be still living, or his widow or children if he be dead, shall have the same exclusive right continued for the further term of fourteen years, upon recording the title of the work or description of the article so secured a second time, and complying with all other regulations in regard to original copyrights, within six months before the expiration of the first term; and such persons shall, within two months from the date of said renewal, cause a copy of the record

The right of an author or a publisher is infringed only when other persons produce a substantial copy of the whole or of a material part of the book or other thing for which he secured a copyright. Where therefore the owner of a copyright for maps of certain wards of "the City of New York, surveyed under the direction of insurance companies of said city, . . . exhibit each lot and building, and the classes as shown by the different coloring and characters set forth in the reference," brought his bill to restrain the publication of similar maps of Philadelphia, it was held that the bill could not be sustained. Perris v. Hexamer, 99 U. S. 674, 25 L. ed. 308.

Form and method.—Complainant conceived and put in operation a scheme for collecting, classifying, and putting in convenient form information as to the financial standing of business men in towns or counties, with a key thereto, the same being intended for the use of business men in the same locality. It was held that it was no infringement that defendant by the same method obtained by his own efforts like information as to the standing of parties in a different county, and published the same for the same purpose. Burnell v. Chown, 69 Fed. 993. See also Merriam v. Famous Shoe, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 411.

And see Brooke v. Clarke, 1 B. & Ald. 396, construing 54 Geo. III, c. 156.

Engravings, prints, and lithographs.—Twenty-eight years from first publication. 7 Geo. III, c. 38, § 6.

Dramatic and musical compositions—Right of representation and performance.—Forty-two years, or the life of author plus seven years, whichever shall be the longer term. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 20.

Paintings, drawings, and photographs.—The natural life of the author and seven years after his death. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, § 1.

Sculptures, models, copies, or casts.—Fourteen years from the first putting forth or publishing the sculpture in question, with a further term of fourteen years if the maker of the original sculpture shall be living at the end of the first fourteen years. 54 Geo. III, c. 56, §§ 1, 6.

Right to republish.—The proprietor of a copyright does not lose his right of republication, although the book may have been out of print and obsolete and of little or no value for any number of years. Weldon v. Dicks, 10 Ch. D. 247, 48 L. J. Ch. 201, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 467, 27 Wkly. Rep. 639.

thereof to be published in one or more newspapers printed in the United States for four weeks.⁶⁶

II. TITLE AND NATURE OF OWNERSHIP.

A. Title to Copyright—1. IN GENERAL. The legal title to a copyright vests in the person in whose name the copyright is taken out. It may, however, be held by him in trust for the real owner, and the question of true ownership is one of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case.⁶⁷

2. TO RENEWALS. The title to the additional term given by the United States statutes is in the author, if living, or if he be dead in his widow or children.⁶⁸

3. OWNER'S RIGHT TO PREVENT UNAUTHORIZED SALES. The owner of a copyright is entitled to restrain the unauthorized sale of genuinely printed copies of his work.⁶⁹ So too he may maintain an action at law for the injury to his reputation as an author arising from false representations as to his authorship of a work⁷⁰ or from the publication of his work in a mutilated form.⁷¹ Where, however, the owner of a copyright has transferred the title to copyrighted books under an agreement restricting their use, he cannot restrain, by virtue of the copyright statutes, sales of such books in violation of the agreement, but must rely upon the ordinary remedies for breach of contract.⁷²

4. SEIZURE FOR DEBT. Since a copyright has no corporeal, tangible existence, it cannot be seized on execution, but it may be reached by a creditor's bill.⁷³

"A trustee in whom a copyright is vested may be registered as the owner and may sue in that character; but it is impossible for one person to be the owner and another person be on the register, and for these two persons successfully to sue." London Printing, etc., Alliance v. Cox, [1891] 3 Ch. 291, 303, 60 L. J. Ch. 707, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 60.

Where a publisher takes a copyright in his own name, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the author, he is the lawful owner, subject to the condition of accounting to the author pursuant to the contract. Pulte v. Derby, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,465, 5 McLean 328.

Title of assignee.—The party to whom an assignment is made, whether for the benefit of another or not, holds the legal interest in the work as assignee of the author, and comes therefore within the very words of the law entitling him to the copyright. Whether a third person has an equitable interest in the work, derived from the author or from the legal assignment, is a question between those parties, in respect to which the public interest or policy is not at all concerned. Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1.

Right of author as against employer.—A person employed to complete a book for a certain sum, who is credited as author on the title-page, the employer giving some suggestions as to the character and form of the work, and taking a conveyance of the copyright, has the sole interest in the additional term allowed to authors. Pierpont v. Estes, 22 Fed. 899. But see Lee v. Gibbings, 67 L. T. Rep. N. "This copyright incident of control over the sale, if I may call it so, as contradistinguished from the power of sale incident to ownership in all property,—copyrighted articles like any other—is a thing that belongs alone to the owner of the copyright itself, and as to him only so long as and to the extent that he owns the particular copies involved." B. Transfers, Licenses, and Contracts — 1. ASSIGNMENTS — a. In General. Copyrights are freely assignable under the statutes of both England and the United States. An assignment may be of the whole right or of a specified interest therein,⁷⁴ and it may as well be to one not entitled himself to the benefit of the statutes as to one within their purview.⁷⁵ Where an assignment is made to more than one they hold as owners in common and not as partners.⁷⁶

b. Requisites and Validity — (i) FORM OF ASSIGNMENT GENERALLY. No particular form of words is necessary to create a valid assignment of copyright.⁷⁷

(ii) NECESSITY OF WRITING — (A) England. Under the now existing English statutes⁷⁸ an assignment of copyright must be in writing, unless made by registry at Stationers' Hall.⁷⁹ Such registration is required in case of dramatic

v. Gunn, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 594, in which it was held that although an author who has obtained a copyright according to the acts of congress cannot be deprived, against his will, and in favor of any of his creditors, of any of the rights secured him by said acts, this protection does not extend, and was not intended to extend, to the proceeds of the sale of his copyright, whether existing in his own hands, in the shape of visible property or choses in action, or held by another for his use.

Mode of procedure.—"In case of such remedy [by a creditor's bill], we suppose, it would be necessary for the court to compel a transfer to the purchaser, in conformity with the requirements of the Copyright Act, in order to vest him with a complete title to the property." Per Nelson, J., in Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. (U. S.) 528, 14 L. ed. 528.

Assignment for specific purpose.—When the owner of the copyright of a painting assigns the copyright for the purpose of producing an engraving of one size, the right of producing copies of the painting in other ways, or by engraving of other sizes, remains in him and can be assigned by him to any other person. Lucas v. Cooke, 13 Ch. D. 872, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180, 28 Wkly. Rep. 439.

Assignment of less than full term.—In Davidson v. Bohn, 6 C. B. 456, 12 Jur. 922, 18 L. J. C. P. 15, 60 E. C. L. 456, it was held, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 13, that the registered proprietor of a copyright may assign his right for less than the full term. See also Howitt v. Hall, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348, 10 Wkly. Rep. 381. Compare Drone Copyright 337, where it is said to be doubtful whether such an assignment can be regarded as other than a mere license.

Limitation as to territory.—The owner of a copyright may assign the exclusive right to sell the copyrighted work in a specified territory. Davis v. Vories, 141 Mo. 234, 42 S. W. 707. Similarly an assignment may be made of the exclusive right of acting and representing a drama in a specified territory for a limited period. Roberts v. Myers, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,906, Brunn. Col. Cas. 698. But such assignments are regarded as mere licenses (Davis v. Vories, 141 Mo. 234, 42 S. W. 707; Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,644; Drone Copyright 335), except in the case of an assignment of the whole right for one or more of several countries (Jefferys v. Boosey, 3 C. L. R. 625, 4 H. L. Cas. 815, 1 Jur. N. S. 615, 24 L. J. Exch. 81). See also Low v. Ward, L. R. 6 Eq. 415, 37 L. J. Ch. 841, 16 Wkly. Rep. 1114; Routledge v. Low, L. R. 3 H. L. 100, 37 L. J. Ch. 454, 18 L. T. Rep. 76. When an assignment is made to more than one the ownership is not that of partners, although they may enter into any contract of partnership inter sese, or between themselves and publishers of their works. Gould v. Banks, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 562, 24 Am. Dec. 90; Pulte v. Derby, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,465, 5 McLean 328; Stevens v. Benning, 6 De G. M. & G. 223, 3 Eq. Rep. 457, 1 Jur. N. S. 74, 24 L. J. or musical compositions,⁸⁰ and of paintings, drawings, and photographs,⁸¹ whether the assignment is made in writing or not. It is also in the case of books a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action for infringement by an assignee.⁸²

(b) United States—(1) BEFORE PUBLICATION. Since under the United States statutes a proprietor as well as an author, inventor, or designer is permitted to copyright a work,⁸³ the rights of an author before publication may be transferred by parol.⁸⁴

(2) AFTER PUBLICATION. In an early case in New York⁸⁵ it was held that an assignment under the copyright act of 1790 must be in writing. A similar construction was subsequently given to the act of 1831⁸⁶ and to the act of 1834.⁸⁷ Under the present law⁸⁸ copyrights are assignable by any instrument in writing, and such assignment must be recorded in the office of the librarian of congress within sixty days after its execution; in default of which it shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice.⁸⁹

c. Construction and Operation—(i) IN GENERAL. The law governing the construction of assignments of copyright is similar to that which obtains in any other case of contract.⁹⁰ An assignment of copyright differs, how-

Jefferys*, 3 Macq. 611, in which the question at issue was as to the necessity of attestation. The dicta of the judges of the lower court (Jefferys v. Kyle, 9 Sc. Sess. Cas. (2d ser.) 906) to the effect that a writing is unnecessary, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, consequently lacks authority. The actual point decided was that a receipt in writing for the price of the copyright operates as an effectual assignment. See also Hazlitt v. Templeman, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 593.

Engravings and prints.—Mr. Drone, in considering the provisions of 8 Geo. II, c. 13, and of 17 Geo. III, c. 57, comes to the conclusion that an assignment of the copyright in an engraving or print need not be in writing. Drone Copyright 317.

ever, from other contracts in that it will be liberally construed in favor of the assignor.⁹¹

(II) SALE OF PLATES. The mere ownership of plates from which a copyrighted work is printed by the owner of the copyright does not attach to the plates the exclusive right of printing and publishing the work or any part thereof. The incorporeal right subsists wholly separate from and independent of the plates and does not pass with them by a sale thereof.⁹²

(III) ASSIGNMENT OF DRAMATIC COMPOSITION. The assignment of the copyright of a book consisting of or containing a dramatic piece does not, in the absence of an express intention that it should do so, pass the right of representing or performing it. This latter right may be the subject of a subsequent assignment to a third person.⁹³ Conversely the assignment of the exclusive right of acting and representing a dramatic composition does not carry with it the copyright of the book.⁹⁴

(IV) WORK DONE IN OFFICIAL CAPACITY. An assignment of work done or to be done by an author in an official capacity as a state reporter is only operative so long as he may remain in office. Consequently the copyright in work done by him after the expiration of his term does not pass to his assignee by virtue of the contract.⁹⁵

(V) WITH REGARD TO RIGHT TO RENEWAL. As has been previously stated,⁹⁶ the right to renew for the additional term provided by statute is in the author, his widow, or children. Whether an assignment by an author, either before or after publication, will be construed to convey his whole interest or only his interest for the first term, will depend upon the terms of the contract.⁹⁷

(VI) RIGHTS OF SALE—(A) Of Assignor After Assignment. In England it has been held, under the statutory definition of copyright,⁹⁸ that in the absence of a special contract to the contrary the assignor of a copyright is entitled, after the assignment, to continue selling copies of the work printed by him before the assignment and remaining in his possession.⁹⁹ Under the

97. A court reporter furnishing reports to certain publishers under an agreement "to furnish, in manuscript, the reports of a court for publication," and that the publishers "shall have the copyright of said reports to them and their assigns forever" vests the absolute right of property of the manuscripts in the publishers, and does not merely assign a copyright of fourteen years. *Paige v. So where, in an action for the infringement of a copyright brought by the assignees, an issue of ownership was raised on the trial, upon which the author and assignor testified that "the intention was to convey deponent's whole interest in the copyright of the work; I supposed the book belong to my assignees, as soon as made, including all that was in it," the legal representatives of the author are estopped from subsequently claiming that the agreement was intended to be confined to the first term of the copyright, especially since the testimony was given after the expiration of such term as to the portion of the work. *Cowen v. (b) Of Assignee After Determination of Assignment. The same doctrines apply both in England² and in the United States³ as to the right of an assignee after the determination of a limited assignment.

(vii) RIGHT TO PRODUCE RIVAL WORK. After assignment the assignor has no right to reproduce the work assigned or to bring out a rival work.⁴

(viii) WARRANTY OF COPYRIGHT. Whether the law will imply a warranty of title on the sale of a copyright seems doubtful; but there is no question that an assignor may bind himself by an express warranty.⁵

"In determining whether a particular transaction is an assignment of a license, the first question is whether, on a true construction of the statute, the right purported to be given can be given by assignment or only by license. If the right is one so limited that it cannot legally be the object of assignment, the transaction must necessarily be a license; but if it can legally be the object of assignment, the further question arises as to what was the intention of the parties as evidenced by what they have said and done. . . . The principal test in such cases is to examine the contract and the circumstances under which it was made, and see whether or not it bears the impress of a reliance by grantor on the personal skill or reputation of the grantee; if it does a license will be presumed rather than an assignment." MacGillivray Copyright 81 [citing *Hole v. b. Contracts of Authors and Publishers—(1) IN GENERAL. The most frequent instances of licenses occur in the case of contracts between authors and publishers. While sometimes loosely called assignments, such contracts are in fact merely licenses,¹⁰ the construction of which is wholly dependent upon their terms. They may be limited or unlimited as to editions, duration, or extent;¹¹ may be revocable or irrevocable during an ascertained period;¹² may or may not be exclusive¹³—in short, may contain any limitations or conditions which the

11. By an agreement between the author and a bookseller, after reciting that the author had prepared a new edition of one of his works and that the bookseller was desirous of purchasing it, it was agreed that a named printer should print two thousand five hundred copies of the work of a certain type and style at the sole cost of the bookseller and that the latter should pay to the author, for the said edition, a certain sum by instalments, the first to be paid as soon as the edition was ready for publication, the work to be divided into three volumes and to be sold to the public at a specified sum. It was held that the bookseller was not merely a purchaser of the two thousand five hundred copies of the work, but was in equity a licensee to the extent that he was to be the sole publisher of it until the whole edition, consisting of two thousand five hundred copies, should be sold. Sweet v. Cater, 5 Jur. 68, 11 Sim. 572, 34 Eng. Ch. 572.

By licensing the use of his song in a general compilation, the author, in the absence of an explicit declaration to the contrary, consents that future editions may be issued containing his song, which may be characterized by omissions and additions of other matter within fair limits. Gabriel v. McCabe, 74 Fed. 743.

Restricted use of annotations.—Under an agreement between the holder of the legal title to copyrights and the editor of a new edition that the former should make no use of the notes in the new edition without the written consent of the editor, and that he should be given the right to make any use of the same that he might see fit, it was held that neither the holder of the legal title nor any one claiming under her had the right to use such notes without the required consent of the editor. Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; 4 Cliff. 1.

Limited first and unlimited second edition.—An author of a work in manuscript contracted with a publisher in writing but not under seal, or attestation, or acknowledgment, that he might publish a first edition of one thousand copies paying the author fifteen cents for each copy sold; and if a second edition should be called for, the author would revise and correct the first edition and the publisher should stereotype it, and might print as many copies as he could sell, paying the author twenty cents for each copy sold. The publisher took out a copyright in his own name, with the knowledge and consent of the author, and the first edition being exhausted stereotyped the corrected manuscript of the second edition, but only printed one thousand five hundred copies of the first impression, and when these were sold proceeded to print more, called a third edition, accounting to the author according to the contract. He then sold the plates to a publisher in another state to account to himself on the same terms. The author thereupon revised a third edition and caused it to be stereotyped and printed, and took out a copyright in his own name, and then sought an injunction against the publishers, who filed their cross bills against him, praying an injunction. It was held that the author had no right to print an edition for himself, and take out a copyright, so long as his licensee complied with his contract. Pulte v. Derby, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,465, 5 McLean 328.

12. In Reade v. Bentley, 4 Jur. N. S. 82, 3 Kay & J. 271, 27 L. J. Ch. 254; 6 Wkly. Rep. 240, an agreement between an author and publisher that the latter should publish at his own expense and risk a work of the former, and after deducting from the produce of the sale the expenses, including a commission on the gross receipts, the profits remaining of every edition should be divided equally, was held not to be an irrevocable license to publish, but a joint adventure, which the author might put an end to at any time after the publication of the first or any subsequent edition. See also Holt v. Silver, 169 Mass. 435, 48 N. E. 837.

13. Where an authoress entered into a verbal agreement with a publisher that he should publish a work at his own expense and pay her a royalty, and the work was accordingly published, but before all the copies were sold, she arranged with another publisher to bring out a second edition of her work, it was held that no agreement could be implied on the part of the authoress not to bring out a new edition until all the first edition was sold, and that a suit against her and the second publisher to restrain such publication could not be sustained. There may, however, be an express agreement giving the licensee an exclusive right during a definite period. Warne v. Routledge, L. R. 18 Eq. 497, 42 L. J. Ch. 604, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 857, 22 Wkly. Rep. 750. See also Willis v. Tibbals, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 220, in which it parties may see fit to insert, and which are not in contravention of the policy of the law as being in restraint of trade.¹⁴

(ii) ASSIGNABILITY. The rights acquired under contracts between authors and publishers are not assignable.¹⁵

(iii) ENFORCEMENT. An express negative covenant in a contract between an author and publisher may be enforced by injunction,¹⁶ but an agreement to write a book cannot be enforced by specific performance.¹⁷ The only remedy is an

was held that in the absence of an established usage a contract whereby a publisher agrees to publish a copyrighted work and pay the author a fixed sum for each copy published does not give an exclusive right of publication.

Exclusive rights in defined territory.—By contract between the owner of a copyright and a firm of publishers, the territory was divided by specified boundaries between them, and the latter were given the exclusive privilege of printing and manufacturing, and were bound to furnish the author at cost price with such copies as he might need to supply the territory allotted to him. A dispute arose as to what was a fair cost price, and the publishers refused to supply the copies required. The owner of the copyright proceeded to reprint the work and to sell it in the territory of complainants as well as in his own. It was held that the breach of contract by complainants did not justify the owner of the copyright in assuming that the contract was canceled. His proper remedy was an action for damages. Baldwin v. Baird, 25 Fed. 293. See also Hudson v. Patten, 1 Root (Conn.) 133.

Exclusive license to perform.—Where a copyrighted play was conveyed on the condition, among others, that the transferee should perform such play at least fifty times within one year from the date of the agreement, the transferee is entitled to an injunction restraining the transferors from assigning the right to a third person, although the transferee has not produced the play and has refused to produce it in connection with a certain other actor, where time still remains within which the transferee may produce the play the requisite number of times. Widmer v. Greene, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 91.

14. An agreement between an author and publisher that a copyrighted work shall not be sold below a certain price is not within the principle of contracts in restraint of trade and will bind a subsequent licensee. Murphy v. Christian Press Assoc. Pub. Co., 38 N. Y. App. Div. 426, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 597. See also Benning v. Dove, 5 C. & P. 427, 24 E. C. L. 638.

Agreement not to publish particular class of work.—An agreement by a publisher not to publish in the future a magazine of a particular description is analogous to an agreement by a tradesman not to deal in a particular article, and like this latter agreement is not void as a too general restraint on trade. Ainsworth v. Bentley, 14 Wkly. Rep. 630. Similarly it is not illegal for an author to agree to write only for a certain

A half-profit agreement cannot be assigned by a publisher's firm to a firm which has succeeded to their business, but which contains none of the partners of the original firm. *Hole v. Agreement to report.—The court of chancery cannot specifically enforce an agreement, whereby A agrees to compose and write reports of cases determined in a court of justice, to be printed and published by a particular individual, for a stipulated remuneration, nor interfere by an injunction to restrain the party from permitting the reports written by him to be published by another person; the remedy if any is at law. *Clarke v. action for breach of contract to which it is not a tenable objection that it is an action by one partner against another to recover partnership property.¹⁸

c. Agreements Between Joint Owners. Joint owners of a copyright may make a contract among themselves as to printing and publishing their work, and one of them cannot set up, as against another, his original rights as a joint owner in violation of such contract.¹⁹

3. EXECUTORY CONTRACTS. An executory contract to assign a copyright is insufficient to pass the right,²⁰ nor will it invalidate a subsequent regular assignment to others.²¹

C. Determination of Title to Copyright or Right to Use Works —

1. JURISDICTION — a. In General. Originally in England courts of equity had no jurisdiction to determine the title to copyright, but in case of doubt, either required the title to be established at law before granting relief,²² or else would grant relief, conditioned upon plaintiff's establishing his title at law.²³ Now, however, in both England and the United States, courts of equity have jurisdiction to determine the title to copyright, or right to use copyrighted works.²⁴

b. State Courts. Where no question of copyright is involved, a state court has jurisdiction of an action to determine the rights of parties to an agreement for the use of copyrighted matter.²⁵

Considerations governing equitable relief — In cases of contested copyright, a court of equity is disposed rather to restrict than to increase the number of cases in which it interferes by injunction before the establishment of the legal title, and it will give great weight to the consideration of the questions, as to which side is more likely to suffer by an erroneous or hasty judgment, and the prejudicial effect the injunction may have on the trial of the action. *McNeill v. 2. EVIDENCE — a. Admissibility. On the trial of an issue out of chancery to determine the title to a copyright, the bill and answer cannot be read in evidence to the jury, unless it be so ordered by the court of chancery when the issue is ordered.²⁶

b. Sufficiency. Mere acquiescence in the publication of a copyrighted work is no proof of an assignment of the copyright.²⁷

III. INFRINGEMENT.

A. What Constitutes — 1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES — a. Term Defined. Infringement is the use of literary property in violation of the legal rights of the owner, and is applied to the unlawful taking of any kind of intellectual property, whether literary, dramatic, or artistic.²⁸

b. Intent or Purpose. When the infringement of a copyright is once established, the question of intent or purpose is immaterial. No animus furandi need be proved,²⁹ nor need the taking be necessarily for profit.³⁰ Where, however, an intent to pirate is shown, actual piracy will be more readily presumed,³¹ and similarly evidence of innocent intention may have a bearing upon the question of "fair use,"³² but it cannot be admitted as a defense where it appears that

What constitutes a "fair use" is often a very difficult question to answer. What would be a "fair use" in one case might not be in another. In determining this question courts often look more to the value of the matter pirated than to the quantity. Simms v. Stanton, 75 Fed. 6 [citing Farmer v. Calvert Lithographing, etc., Co., 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,651, 1 Flipp. 228; Gray v. Russell, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,728, 1 Story 11].

The true principle is "that the Defendant is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which the Plaintiff has been at for the purpose of producing his work—that is, in fact, merely to take the result of another man's labour, or, in other words, his property." Per Hall, V. C., in Hogg v. Scott, L. R. 18 Eq. 444, 458, 43 L. J. Ch. 705, 31

L. T. Rep. N. S. 73, 163, 22 Wkly. Rep. 640. In Cary v. Kearsley, 4 Esp. 168, 170, 6 Rev. Rep. 846, Lord Ellenborough said: "That part of the work of one author is found in another, is not of itself piracy, or sufficient to support an action; a man may fairly adopt part of the work of another; he may so make use of another's labours for the promotion of science, and the benefit of the public; but having done so, the question will be, Was the matter so taken used fairly with that view, and without what I term the animus furandi? . . . Look through the book, and find any part that is a transcript of the other; if there is none such; if the subject of the book is that which is subject to every man's observation; such as the names of the places and their distances from each other, the places being the same, the distances being the same, if they are correct, one book must be a transcript of the other; but when, in the defendant's book, there are additional observations, and in some parts of the book I find corrections of misprinting . . . while I shall think myself bound to secure every man in the enjoyment of his copyright, we must not put manacles upon science."

Examination of previous works.—In Banks v. McDivitt, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 961, 13 Blatchf. 163, 166, Shipman, J., said: "I do not understand that the rule prohibits an examination of previous works by the compiler before he has finished his own book, or the mere obtaining of ideas from such previous works, but it does prohibit a use of any part of the previous book, animo furandi, 'with an intention to take for the purpose of saving himself labor'" [citing Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 Jur. N. S. 1051, 3 Kay & J. 708]. Thus a later writer on an art or science, like physiognomy, although consulting and using the works of an earlier writer on the subject will be held not to have pirated, but to have made a fair use of them, it not appearing that they have been drawn from to a substantial degree, notwithstanding there are some errors common to both, and they have a similar division of systems as a basis, such division being only a somewhat altered form of a division in a work of a previous writer, from which they both had a right to draw material. Simms v. Stanton, 75 Fed. 6.

but includes also the various modes in which the matter of any work may be adopted, imitated, transferred, or reproduced, with more or less colorable alterations to disguise the piracy.³⁷ But on the principle of de minimis non curat lex it is necessary that a substantial part of the copyrighted work be taken.³⁸ The

A copy is that which will provide a substitute for the whole or for a substantial part of the original work. Roworth v. Wilkes, 1 Campb. 94, 10 Rev. Rep. 642.

Any mode of copying, "whether by printing, writing, photographing or by some other method not yet invented would no doubt be copying. So, perhaps, might a perforated sheet of paper to be sung or played from in the same way as sheets of music are sung or played from." Boosey v. Whight, [1900] 1 Ch. 122, 123, 69 L. J. Ch. 66, 81 L. Incorporation in larger work.—It makes no difference in law whether the piracy is a simple reprint of an original work or an incorporation thereof into a larger work. Gray v. Russell, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 5,728, 1 Story 11.

Where the variations are more than colorable and sufficient to make the copyrighted work and that alleged to infringe it very different there is no piracy. Munro v. Smith, 42 Fed. 266.

"The true test of piracy or not is to ascertain whether the defendant has, in fact, used the plan, arrangements, and illustrations of the plaintiff, as the model of his own book, with colorable alterations and variations only to disguise the use thereof; or whether his work is the result of his own labor, skill, and use of common materials and common sources of knowledge, open to all men. and the resemblances are either accidental or arising from the nature of the subject. In other words, whether the defendant's book is, quoad hoc, a servile or evasive imitation of the plaintiff's work, or a bona fide original compilation from other common or independent sources." Per Story, J., in Emerson v. Davies, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,436, 3 Story 768, 793. See also Roworth v. Wilkes, 1 Campb. 94, 98, 10 Rev. Rep. 642, in which Lord Ellenborough said that "it is enough that the publication complained of is in substance a copy, whereby a work vested in another is prejudiced." So an instruction which makes the test of infringement the taking of the "substantial ideas—the distinctive characteristics"—of the original, regardless of intentional variations in minor particulars, is all that defendant is entitled to, and he cannot complain of a refusal to charge that the original and copy must be "substantially identical." Springer Lithographing Co. v. Falk, 59 Fed. 707, 8 C. C. A. 224.

Illustration.—The paging of defendant's volumes of law reports and complainant's was substantially the same throughout. The list of cases preceding each report was the same. Defendant's editors testified that their work was independent of that of complainant's editors, but complainant's volumes were all used in editing and annotating, in some instances words and sentences being followed without change, in others changed only in form. Although there was a considerable difference between the head-notes, it was evident that complainant's had been freely used. There were errors common to both sets of reports. These circumstances were held to constitute an infringement. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547.

The principle of the cases is that "where one man for his own profit puts into his work an essential part of another man's work, from which that other may still derive profit, or from which, but for the act of the first, he might have derived profit, there is evidence of a piracy." A dealer who purchases second-hand school-books, cleans, trims, and rebinds the same, using covers in exact imitation of the originals, and places them in the market to be sold in competition with those of the publisher, although at a reduced price, is guilty of unfair competition, where, by reason of their new appearance, they are likely to be purchased by children in the belief that they are new books, and the product of the original publisher, including the cover and binding;

f. Improvements and Additions. It is of no importance that a work infringing on prior copyrighted work is an improvement on the earlier work and contains additional information, as such improvements do not remove the offense.⁴⁴

2. OF MANUSCRIPTS. The right of property in manuscripts and private letters is protected by the United States statutes;⁴⁵ and if the whole or an important part of a work be taken and printed chancery will enjoin publication on the application of the author or his legal representatives.⁴⁶

3. OF BOOKS OR OTHER LITERARY WORKS — a. In General. Under the English statute to print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any copyrighted book, or to import for sale or hire any such book unlawfully printed from parts beyond the sea, or knowingly to sell, publish, or expose for sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed for sale or hire, or to have in one's possession for sale or hire, any such book so unlawfully printed or imported is forbidden.⁴⁷ In the United States a book is infringed by printing, publishing, dramatizing, translating, or importing, or by knowingly selling or exposing for sale any copy of such book, without the written consent of the proprietor of the copyright, signed in the presence of two or more witnesses.⁴⁸

b. Extracts and Quotations. Quotations and extracts, acknowledged or unacknowledged, if they are fairly made, either for the purpose of criticism or of illustration, are not infringements of copyright.⁴⁹ But if so much is taken that the value of the original is sensibly and materially diminished, or the labors of the original author are substantially, to an injurious extent, appropriated by and a court may properly require a notice to be plainly stamped upon the cover sufficient to prevent such deception. Doan v. American Book Co., 105 Fed. 772, 45 C. C. A. 42.

Difference of object.—It is no justification of a piracy that plaintiff's work was written for a presidential campaign, while defendant's was written for young people. Gilmore v. Anderson, 58 Fed. 846.

Previous use by others.—It is no defense that some of the appropriated parts had been previously used by others, from whose works they were taken by defendant. Gilmore v. Anderson, 58 Fed. 846.

Illustrations.—In Campbell v. Scott, 6 Jur. 186, 11 L. J. Ch. 166, 11 Sim. 31, 34 Eng. Ch. 31, defendant published "The Book of Poets," containing among other things an essay and biographical notice of the poet Campbell and, as defendant said, by way of illustrating the poet's works, a large number of his poems and extracts therefrom were appended to the biographical notice without any particular observations in the way of notes to individual pieces or extracts. It was held an infringement of the poet's copyright. F published a "Life of Washington," containing eight hundred and sixty-six pages, of which three hundred and fifty-three pages were copied from Sparks' "Life and Writings of Washington," sixty-four pages being official letters and documents, and two hundred and fifty-five pages being private letters of Washington, originally published by Sparks, under a contract with the owners of the original papers of Washington. It was held that the work by F was an invasion of the copyright of Sparks. Folsom v. Marsh, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,901, 2 Story 100. In Smith v. Chatto, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 775, 23 Wkly. Rep. 290, where defendants published a book entitled "Thackerayana," which purported to be a critical essay on the life and works of Thackeray, and contained extensive quotations from his writings prefaced and interspersed with comments by the writer of the book, it was held that defendant had inserted the extracts for the purpose of increasing and enhancing the value of their book; and that they had therefore infringed the copyright in Thackeray's books. In Bradbury v. Hotten, L. R. 8 Exch. 1, 42 L. J. Exch. 28, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450, 21 Wkly. Rep. 126, nine cartoons illustrative of the career of Napoleon III were published in Punch in nine separate weekly numbers. Defendants published a volume entitled "Story of the Life of Napoleon, . . . as told by popular Caricaturists of the last Thirty Years," which contained among numerous other illustrations taken from French and English comic journals, the nine cartoons first produced in Punch. This was held to be an infringement of the copyright in Punch.

Illustration.—Where new compilations have been made by two different authors of an unprotected law-book by a third party with some additional matter, notes, and citations, the mere fact that the second compiler has reproduced, in connection with the same subjects, some of the new citations found in the first compilation, will not be held an infringement of the copyright thereon, where in nearly all such cases it appears from internal evidence that he made an independent examination of the authorities so cited. *Mead v. The rule restricting compilers of books which are not original in their character, but are compilations of facts from common and universal sources of information, of which books, directories, maps, guide-books, road-books, statistical tables, and digests are familiar examples, from copying the results of a previous compiler's study, is not to be applied to prohibit an examination of the previous works by the compiler before he has finished his own book, or the mere obtaining of ideas from such previous works. Banks v. McDivitt, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 961, 13 Blatchf. 163.

cases, however, the author must do his own work and go to the common sources of information. That by a little additional labor he would have arrived at the same results is no defense.⁵⁴

(II) DIRECTORIES. Where the publication in controversy is a general directory, the only legitimate use which a subsequent compiler can make of a copyrighted directory already published is for the purpose of directing himself to the persons from whom such information is obtained, and of verifying the correctness of the results reached by his own independent efforts in obtaining information. The compiler is not at liberty to copy any part, however small, of a previous directory, to save himself the trouble of collecting the materials from original sources.⁵⁵

The rights and duties of compilers of books which are not original in their character, but are compilations of facts from common and universal sources of information, of which books, directories, maps, guide-books, road-books, statistical tables, and digests are the most familiar examples, are well settled. No compiler of such a book has the monopoly of the subject of which the book treats. Any other person is permitted to enter that department of literature and make a similar book. But the subsequent investigator must investigate for himself from the original sources, which are open to all. He cannot use the labors of a previous compiler, animo furandi, and save his own time by copying the results of the previous compiler's study, although the same results could have been obtained by independent labor. The compiler of a digest, a road-book, a directory, or a map may search and survey for himself in fields which all laborers are permitted to occupy, but cannot adopt as his own, the products of another's toil. Banks v. McDivitt, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 961, 13 Blatchf. 163. While on the one hand a prior compiler is not permitted to monopolize what was not original in himself, and what must be nearly identical in all such works on a like subject, yet he who uses it subsequently to another must not employ so much of the prior arrangement and materials as to show that the last work is a substantial invasion of the other, and is not characterized by enough new or improved to indicate new toil and talent and new property and rights in the last compiler. Webb v. Powers, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,323, 2 Woodb. & M. 497.

Some similarities, and some use of prior works, even to copying of small parts, are tolerated in some kinds of books, such as dictionaries of all descriptions, gazetteers, grammars, maps, arithmetics, almanacs, concordances, cyclopedias, itineraries, guide-books, and similar publications. Webb v. Powers, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,323, 2 Woodb. & M. 497.

Use of cut slips.—Although the compiler of a new directory is not justified in using slips cut from one previously published for the purpose of deriving information from them for his own work, yet he may use such slips for the purpose of directing him to the parties from whom such information is to be obtained. Morris v. Wright, L. R. 5 Ch. 279, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 78, 18 Wkly. Rep. 327.

Verification of names and addresses.—The later compiler of a directory may use the first compiler's book for the purpose of verifying the orthography of the names or the correctness of the addresses of the persons selected. List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772.

(III) DICTIONARIES. The compiler of a dictionary, or a work in which absolute originality is of necessity excluded, is entitled without exposing himself to a charge of piracy, to make use of preceding works upon the subject, where he bestows such mental labor upon what he has taken and subjects it to such revision and correction as to produce an original result, provided that he does not deny the use made of such preceding works, and the alterations are not merely colorably made.⁵⁶

d. Abridgments. An abridgment in which there is a substantial condensation of the materials of the original work and which requires intellectual labor and judgment does not constitute a piracy of copyright; but an abridgment consisting of extracts of the essential or most valuable portions of the original work is a piracy.⁵⁷

e. Law-Books. Where the author of a law-book collects all the citations available on his subject, including those found in a previously copyrighted work on the same subject, and after examining the reports of the cases cited cites such authorities as he considers applicable in support of his own text—such text being original and in no part copied from the earlier work—such a use is not unfair and will not constitute an infringement.⁵⁸

f. Digests. The opinions of the court can be digested from copyrighted reports, but the compiler is not at liberty to use, either directly or indirectly, the original work of the reporter except for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the digested paragraphs after they have been formulated.⁵⁹

The duplication of erroneous names and addresses in a directory is sufficient to entitle the complainant to a preliminary injunction, and to affect defendant's whole book in the absence of a clear showing to overcome such prima facie case. Trow Directory Printing, etc., Co. v. U. S. Directory Co., 122 Fed. 191.

A fair abridgment of any book is considered a new work, as to write it requires labor and exercise of judgment. It is only new in the sense that the view of the author is given in a condensed form. Such a work must not only contain the arrangement of the book abridged, but the ideas must be taken from its pages. It must be in good faith an abridgment and not a treatise interloaded with citations. To copy certain passages from a book, omitting others, is in no just sense an abridgment of it. Story v. Holcombe, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,497, 4 McLean 306.

In ascertaining what is a bona fide abridgment and what is an invasion of copyright, the value of the selections made and the probable effect on the original work are elements of inquiry. Gray v. Russell, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,728, 1 Story 11. "What constitutes a fair and bona fide abridgment in the sense of the law is, or may be, under particular circumstances, one of the most difficult questions which can well arise for judicial consideration; but it is well settled that a mere selection or different arrangement of parts of the original work into a smaller compass, will not be held to be such an abridgment." Per Clifford, J., in Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1.

If the leading design of a subsequent work is to abridge an earlier one and cheapen its price, and that by mental labor is faithfully done, it is no ground for prosecution by the owner of the copyright of the earlier work; but it is otherwise if the abridgment or similar work be colorable and a mere substitute. Webb v. Powers, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,323, 2 Woodb. & M. 497.

g. Translations—(i) ENGLAND. Independently of the International Copyright Act, which gives the exclusive right of translation to foreign authors, under certain limitations,⁶⁰ it seems that a bona fide translation of a copyrighted book is not an infringement,⁶¹ although this has been doubted and controverted by eminent text-writers.⁶²

(ii) UNITED STATES. It is now expressly provided by statute in the United States that authors or their assigns shall have the exclusive right to translate their copyrighted works.⁶³ Before 1870 there was no exclusive right of translation in the author.⁶⁴

h. Dramatizations—(i) ENGLAND. The dramatization and representation on the stage of a copyrighted work is not an infringement of the copyright in the work,⁶⁵ but the publication of a dramatized version containing substantial passages from the original work does not constitute an infringement.⁶⁶

(ii) UNITED STATES. In the United States authors or their assigns have the exclusive right to dramatize any of their works for which copyright shall have been obtained.⁶⁷

4. OF MAPS OR CHARTS. The copyright in a map or chart is violated when another substantially copies therefrom and avails himself of the labor and skill of the author.⁶⁸ The subsequent maker must go to the original sources of information.⁶⁹

5. OF DRAMATIC OR MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS — a. In General. Dramatic or musical compositions may be infringed in either of two ways—by the unauthorized multiplication and sale of copies,⁷⁰ or by the unauthorized representation or performance of such compositions.⁷¹

b. Test of Piracy. As in the case of copyright in books or other literary works, the part taken must be material, and there must be a substantial identity with the original composition in order to constitute piracy.⁷² But a substantial similarity, founded upon coincidence, and not the result of piracy, direct or indirect, is insufficient to establish infringement;⁷³ nor is the taking of a general idea or scheme sufficient.⁷⁴ An indirect as well as a direct taking constitutes an infringement,⁷⁵ and as in cases of literary piracy when the infringement of a United States.—The public performance of any dramatic or musical composition for which a copyright has been obtained, without the consent of the proprietor of said dramatic or musical composition, or his heirs or assigns, is an infringement of the exclusive right of representation or performance. 29 U. Substantial identity.—Defendant is chargeable with infringement of a dramatic composition, if the appropriated series of events, when represented on the stage, although performed by new and different characters, using different language, is recognized by the spectator, through the medium of the senses, as conveying substantially the same impressions to, and exciting the same emotions in, the mind, in the same sequence or order as the original. *Daly v. So where the theme or melody of music is substantially the same in the copyrighted and the alleged infringing pieces, the measure of the former being followed in the latter, and being somewhat peculiar, and the pieces are so much alike that when played by a competent musician they appear to be the same, the infringement is established, although there are variations in the infringing piece. Blume v. Spear, 30 Fed. 629.

An action was brought by the executors of A to restrain defendant from representing a certain drama in infringement of plaintiffs' stage copyright. A had first published a drama and afterward a novel founded on it. Defendant's drama was dramatized directly from the novel, and not with the help of A's drama. It was held that A having published the drama before the novel, no person had a right to infringe the stage copyright in the dramatic or musical copyright is once shown, the intent or purpose of the infringer is immaterial, and no proof of animus furandi is required.⁷⁶

c. Place of Performance. While the statutes of England and the United States vary in expression,⁷⁷ their meaning is the same. Although the word "public" is not used in the English statute, it has been held that "place of dramatic entertainment" clearly means a place to which the public is admitted.⁷⁸

d. Scenery and Costumes. A public representation will be none the less an infringement by reason of the absence of scenery and appropriate costumes.⁷⁹

e. Causing Representation or Performance—(1) IN GENERAL. In order to hold a person liable for causing or permitting⁸⁰ a dramatic or musical composition to be represented or performed he must be shown either to have actually taken part as an actor or performer,⁸¹ or to have had some initiative in, or control over, the performance.⁸² Whether a mere agent who causes a representation or performance will be held liable seems doubtful.⁸³

(II) SALE FOR PURPOSE OF REPRESENTATION. The sale of an infringing play to another, with a view to its public representation, makes the seller a participant in causing the play to be publicly represented.⁸⁴

f. Reproduction by Means of Mechanical Agency. Reproduction through the drama, even though the passages complained of were taken from the novel and not from the drama of the author, and therefore that plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction. Schlesinger v. Turner, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 764. See also Reade v. Conquest, 11 C. B. N. S. 479, 8 Jur. N. S. 764, 31 L. J. C. P. 153, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 677, 10 Wkly. Rep. 271, 103 E. C. L. 479. Compare Schlesinger v. Bedford, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 762, in which the novel having been published before the drama, it was held that defendant who had dramatized directly from the novel, and without the aid of plaintiff's dramatized version, was not guilty of piracy.

6. OF WORKS OF ART — a. England — (1) ENGRAVINGS — (A) In General. The copyright in an engraving or print is infringed by engraving, etching, working, or in any manner copying and selling the protected work; by printing, reprinting, or importing for sale any pirated copy; by knowingly or innocently publishing, selling, or exposing for sale, any pirated copy, or by knowingly disposing of such copy in any other manner; by making a copy or copies, whether for sale or not; or by causing or procuring any of these acts to be done.⁸⁶

(B) Where Design Is Original With Engraver. Where the design of a print is original with the first engraver, it seems that he will be protected as to that, under the statutes, as well as to that part of his engraving which is the result of his peculiar art.⁸⁷

(c) What Constitutes Piratical Copy — (1) IN GENERAL. The same tests of piracy apply in the case of prints and engravings as in the case of other copyrighted works. To copy or reproduce the original, either in whole or in a material part, is piracy;⁸⁸ and the fact that the original is enlarged or diminished is no defense.⁸⁹ The question is whether the main design of the original has been copied,⁹⁰ and where this is shown to have been done the manner of its accomplishment is wholly immaterial.⁹¹

(2) COPY OF ORIGINAL FROM WHICH ENGRAVING IS MADE. It is no infringement of an engraving for a subsequent artist to make another engraving of the same subject, provided always that he in nowise copies from the earlier engraving.⁹²

Phonograph.—Reproduction through the agency of a phonograph of the sounds of musical instruments playing music, for which a copyright has been granted, is not a violation of the copyright, such reproduction not being publishing or copying within the meaning of the Copyright Act. Stern v. Rosey, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 562.

Perforated sheets.—A sheet of paper perforated so that when it is placed in a mechanical instrument and made to pass under tubes through which air is forced, a copyright tune is reproduced, is not a copy of a sheet of music so as to constitute an infringement of the copyright, within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Boosey v. Whight, [1900] 1 Ch. 122, 69 L. J. Ch. 66, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 571, 48 Wkly. Rep. 228. See also Kennedy v. McTammany, 33 Fed. 584, in which it was held that the manufacture and sale of perforated strips of paper to be used in organettes, and by which a certain tune is produced, are not a violation of the copyrighted sheet music of the same tune.

Wright*, 6 Sim. 297, 298, 9 Eng. Ch. 297, in which A made a copy of a print invented by B, in colors, and of larger dimensions, and exhibited it as a diorama. The court refused to restrain the exhibition until the right had been established at law, on the ground that the act was not intended to apply to a case where there was no intention to print, sell, or publish, but to exhibit in a certain manner. (3) COPIES IN PEN OR PENCIL. While there is no direct adjudication on the question, it seems probable that pen or pencil copies would not be considered an infringement, unless such copies should compete commercially with the engraving by tending to lessen its sale.⁹³

(4) TAKING PRINTS FROM LEGAL PLATES. It is no infringement of the proprietor's copyright to strike prints from his own plates, although the act is unauthorized.⁹⁴

(II) PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, AND PHOTOGRAPHS—(A) In General. For any one other than the proprietor and without his consent to repeat, copy, colorably imitate, or otherwise multiply for sale, hire, exhibition, or distribution; or knowingly or innocently to import, or sell, publish, let to hire, exhibit, or distribute, or offer for sale, hire, exhibition, or distribution, any copy unlawfully made; or to cause or procure any of the above acts to be done is an infringement of the proprietor's copyright in a painting, drawing, or photograph.⁹⁵

(B) What Constitutes a Piratical Copy—(1) IN GENERAL. A copy, in whatsoever manner made, is an infringement of the proprietor's copyright in the original. It may be either a taking of the design, or of the mode of execution, or of both,⁹⁶ and may be indirect as well as direct.⁹⁷ The infringing copy must be something which is itself in the nature of a picture,⁹⁸ and as in

L. 482, in which it is said that "the first engraver does not claim the monopoly of the use of the picture from which the engraving is made; he says, take the trouble of going to the picture yourself, but do not avail yourself of my labor, who have been to the picture, and have executed the engraving." And see Dicks v. Brooks, 15 Ch. D. 22, 49 L. J. Ch. 812, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 71, 29 Wkly. Rep. 87, in which it was held that a printed pattern for wool work was not a piratical copy of the print from which it was taken, said print not being the invention or design of the engraver, but engraved from a painting of another. The statutes only give protection to that which is original with the engraver, and where the design is the composition of another he has no copyright therein.

Causing or procuring infringement.—In Bolton v. London Exhibitions, 14 T. L. R. 550 [cited in MacGillivray Copyright 179], defendants ordered a poster, gave the lithographer a general idea of what was wanted, and told him to do his best. The lithographer infringed plaintiff's photograph of a lion. It was held that as defendants did not authorize the reproduction of the photograph they had not "caused or procured" the infringement complained of.

Innocent agents.—Under section 6 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), the printers, although merely innocent agents, are liable for penalties for an infringement as well as the publishers. Baschet v. London Illustrated Standard Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 73, 69 L. J. Ch. 35, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509, 48 Wkly. Rep. 56.

The making in a foreign country of a copy of a work on which there is a copyright only in England may reasonably be said not to be unlawful, and if so the sale of such a copy in England is not a sale of a copy unlawfully made. *Tuck v. other cases of piracy a material part of the protected work must be substantially taken.⁹⁹

(2) ADOPTION OF GENERAL IDEA. The same general idea which is suggested by a copyrighted work may be expressed by another painting, drawing, or photograph, which is in no sense a copy and does not borrow its design.¹

b. United States—(i) IN GENERAL. The copyright in a work of art is infringed where any person, after the recording of the title or description of the work, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in the presence of two or more witnesses, engraves, etches, works, copies, prints, publishes, or imports, either in whole or in part, or by varying the main design, with intent to evade the law, or knowing the same to be so printed, published, or imported, sells or exposes to sale any copy of such work.²

(ii) WHAT IS A PIRATICAL COPY. In the case of works of art copying in any mode constitutes an infringement,³ where the material features of the original work are substantially taken,⁴ either directly or indirectly.⁵ But it is no infringement for a later artist to work on the same original materials, provided that he does not evasively use those already collected and embodied by the skill, industry, and expenditures of another.⁶

B. Remedies—1. AT LAW—a. Common-Law Remedies. Independently of statute, and even where other remedies are specifically given, an action for damages lies at common law for the infringement of copyright;⁷ but the common-

Sentiment of picture.—Where a picture contains a direct copy of a substantial portion of a copyrighted work, that portion constitutes an infringement, if it is a copy in the ordinary sense, and particularly where the sentiment expressed in the copyrighted picture has also been embodied. Brooks v. Religious Tract Soc., 45 Wkly. Rep. 476.

Reproduction of photograph of painting.—Where illustrations published by defendant, which were alleged to constitute an infringement of the copyright on plaintiff's painting, were reproductions of a copyrighted photograph of such painting, and not of the painting, such illustrations constituted an infringement of the copyright on the photographs only, and not of the copyright of plaintiff's painting. Champney v. Haag, 121 Fed. 944.

Differences which relate merely to size and material are not important. They may affect the question of damages, but not the

Incomplete copies.—A photogravure company, under an agreement with defendants, made copies of copyrighted engravings and etchings, omitting the tint, title, and plate-mark, shipped them to London, and there caused the tint, title, and plate-mark to be put on, and delivered the finished pictures to defendants. It was held that, under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4952 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3406], the copyright was infringed, whether the unfinished copies were marketable or not. Fishel v. Lueckel, 53 Fed. 499.

5. Although the law recognizes a distinction between a painting and a print, a copyright for the former will protect its owner in the sale of copies thereof, even though they may appropriately be called "prints," and a party who copies such copies will be guilty of infringement. Schumacher v. Schwencke, 30 Fed. 690.

Infringement in respect to copyrighted photographs of a stage dancer cannot be sustained merely upon exhibits cut from a daily paper showing a crude illustration or wood-cut of certain poses which the dancer assumes, but which do not appear to be copies of, or have any connection with, the petitioner's photographs. *Falk v. law action of replevin, as it is practised in Pennsylvania, is not an appropriate remedy by which to enforce the forfeiture provided by the United States statutes.⁸

b. Statutory Remedies—(i) ACTION FOR DAMAGES. In England an action on the case for damages lies in all cases of infringement,⁹ and in the United States the same action lies for the infringement of copyright in books or for the infringement of the exclusive right of representing or performing dramatic or musical compositions.¹⁰

(ii) ACTION FOR PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES—(A) England—(1) Books—(a) DELIVERY UP OF COPIES. Copies of books unlawfully printed or imported shall be deemed to be the property of the registered proprietor of the copyright, who may after demand in writing sue in detinue or trover, or if necessary in both combined, to recover the piratical copies, or for damages for their conversion.¹¹ Where the piratical book is not merely a reprint of the copyrighted work, it seems doubtful whether section 23 of chapter 45 of the act of 5 & 6 Victoria will apply,¹² but whether it would or not, the proprietor would be entitled in equity to delivery up for cancellation.¹³

Accrual of right.—The right of action at law as well as in equity, conferred by the copyright acts of 1831 and 1856, may accrue before actual publication of the work, and the author or proprietor may maintain an action for infringement committed after the filing of the title, but before publication. Boucicault v. Wood, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,693, 2 Biss. 34. But see Centennial Catalogue Co. v. Porter, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,546, where it was held that an injunction will not lie to protect a projected publication.

There is no common-law right in the author or proprietor of a book which is pirated to the delivery up of the copies of the illegal work. Colburn v. Simms, 2 Hare 543, 7 Jur. 1104, 12 L. J. Ch. 388, 24 Eng. Ch. 543.

Compensation for cost of production or publication.—The registered owner of a copy-right in a work is entitled to have all the unsold copies of a piratical edition delivered up to him for his own use, without making any compensation for the cost of production or publication. Delf v. Delamotte, 3 Jur. N. S. 933, 3 Kay & J. 581.

Copies made before registration.—In Hole v. Bradbury, 12 Ch. D. 886, 48 L. J. Ch. 673, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 153, 250, 28 Wkly. Rep. 39, it was held that the plaintiffs not having been the registered proprietors at the time the copies were printed were not entitled to have them delivered up under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 23; but that the court had power under its general jurisdiction to order the delivery up for destruction of all articles created in violation of the plaintiffs' rights. Contra, Isaacs v. Fiddemann, 49 L. J. Ch. 412, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 395, in which it was held that books piratically printed before registration become the property of the proprietor after registration.

12. Partial infringement.—See Rooney v. Kelley, 14 Ir. C. L. 158, 171 [cited in MacGillivray Copyright 90], where O'Brien, J., said: "It would be difficult to maintain that under the 23rd section the proprietor of the copyright in a book would acquire the property of all copies of another book which contained printed therein a few pages or passages of his book."

(b) SEIZURE AND FINE. Where one imports a foreign copy or copies, or sells, hires, or has in his possession for sale or hire foreign copies, knowing them to be unlawfully imported, such copies may be seized and destroyed by any officer of customs, and on conviction before two justices, a fine of ten pounds for every offense and double the value of every copy dealt with may be imposed upon the offender.¹⁴

(2) DRAMATIC COMPOSITIONS. The remedy for the infringement of play-right is an action for the statutory penalty of forty shillings for each performance, or the defendant's profits, or the actual damage sustained, whichever be greater.¹⁵

(3) ENGRAVINGS AND PRINTS. For infringement of copyright in engravings and prints an action lies for the statutory penalty of five shillings for every copy published, and for the forfeiture of all plates and sheets to the proprietor of the copyright.¹⁶

Statute construed.—U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4965 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3414]. gives no right of action to recover damages, merely as such, but limits the remedy for an infringement of the owner's right to the forfeiture of the plates on which the infringing article is copied, and "every sheet thereof, either copied or printed"; and to the further forfeiture of one dollar for every sheet of the same found in the possession of the infringer. Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 612, 8 S. Ct. 618, 31 L. ed. 577. An action under the statute to recover the penalties thereby imposed for infringement of a copyrighted cut can only be maintained when the cut has been copyrighted as such. The copyrighting of a newspaper containing such cut as a whole gives no right of action under that section, but the remedy for infringement in that case is prescribed by section 4964. Bennett v. Boston Traveler Co., 101 Fed. 445, 41 C. C. A. 445.

(3) PLAYRIGHT AND MUSICAL PERFORMING RIGHT. An action for penal damages lies for the unlawful representation or performance of a dramatic or musical composition;²¹ and if the unlawful representation or performance is given wilfully and for profit, it is a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year.²²

2. IN EQUITY — a. Nature and Grounds of Relief. The jurisdiction of courts of equity in copyright cases is assumed merely for the purpose of making effectual the legal right, which cannot be made effectual by any action for damages.²³ There is no material difference between the principles and rules applicable to such cases and those applicable to other suits in equity.²⁴

b. Injunction — (1) PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION — (A) IN GENERAL. A preliminary injunction should issue whenever the complaint shows a proper subject of equitable cognizance, when the plaintiff's right and the defendant's violation of it are clear, and when the case exhibits no special facts which would render the process unjust; and it should not issue under any other circumstances.²⁵ forfeiture under Rev. Stat. § 4965, of infringing plates and sheets found in the possession of defendant. Morrison v. Pettibone, 87 Fed. 330.

What is the appropriate procedure where it is sought both to enforce the forfeiture and recover the penalty (whether by a single suit in the nature of replevin, or by separate suits) has not been conclusively determined; but where two suits are brought (one in replevin to recover the sheets, and the other in assumpsit to recover the penalty), the cause of action in the latter suit does not accrue until the infringing sheets have been found in the defendant's possession and seized in the former, and a suit to recover the penalty brought at the same time as the one in replevin is premature. Falk v. Curtis Pub. Co., 102 Fed. 967.

The penalty is recoverable irrespective of any proof of actual damages. Springer Lithographing Co. v. Falk, 59 Fed. 707, 8 C. C. A. 224.

In the case of "a painting, statue, or statutory," there is to be a forfeiture of ten dollars for every copy found in the defendant's possession, or by him sold or exposed for sale. Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 612, 8 S. Ct. 618, 31 L. ed. 577.

The propriety in granting a preliminary injunction rests solely in the sound discretion of the court; and the writ will not therefore be granted where it would operate oppressively, inequitably, or contrary to the real justice of the case. The courts decline to lay down any rule which shall limit their discretion to grant or withhold the writ as respects particular cases. Scribner v. Stoddart, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,561.

Considerations governing granting.—In case of contested copyright, the court is disposed rather to restrict than to increase the number of cases in which it interferes by injunction before the establishment of the legal title, and it will give great weight to the consideration of the questions, which side is more likely to suffer by an erroneous or hasty judgment, and the prejudicial effect the injunction may have on the trial of the action. McNeill v. Williams, 11 Jur. 344. In Hanson v. Jaccard Jewelry Co., 32 Fed. 202, application was made by the plaintiff for an order pendente lite restraining the defendant from circulating a guide-book containing matter infringing upon the copyright of the plaintiff, and it was held that the question of the damage that might be sustained by the defendant upon granting the order, as compared with that to the plaintiff by denying it, the financial ability of the defendant to respond to any damages assessed against him, the fact that there was no intent on the part of the defendant to appropriate the property of the plaintiff, and that it was done without the knowledge of the defendant by one employed to compile the work, are all considerations which it is proper for the court to weigh in determining the question of granting or denying the application. In Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,644, a preliminary injunction was refused, although the court was satisfied of the plaintiff's right and the defendant's infringement, because it believed the extent of the plaintiff's injury to be sustained prior to the final hearing could readily be measured and be compensated in money, and the danger of loss to the defendant be thus avoided.

In doubtful cases a preliminary injunction should be refused. Thus where it was a matter of much doubt whether the plaintiff's engravings, published with a price-list of the articles described in his book as an advertisement of those articles, were intrinsically valuable as works of art the injunction was denied. Lamb v. Grand Rapids School Furniture Co., 39 Fed. 474.

Plaintiff must show compliance with law.—A temporary injunction will not be granted unless complainant shows affirmatively, beyond any doubt, that he has complied with the copyright law. American Trotting Register Assoc. v. Gocher, 70 Fed. 237.

Works of a transitory nature.—Unless the court is quite clear as to what are the legal rights of the parties, it is much the safest course to abstain from exercising its jurisdiction till the legal right has been determined, where the controversy arises over works of a transitory nature, such as almanacs. "In such a case, if the plaintiff is right, the court has some means, at last, of indemnifying him, by making the defendant keep an account; whereas, if the defendant be

been committed to an extent which is likely to be seriously prejudicial to the plaintiff, without waiting till all the parts which have been pirated can be distinctly specified;²⁶ but if it appears that the piratical parts of the defendant's book can be distinguished from that which is original, this will be done in the injunction.²⁷

(c) MOTION TO DISSOLVE. Denials of complainant's title or right upon information and belief are not sufficient to dissolve an injunction.²⁸

right, and he be restrained, it is utterly impossible to give him compensation for the loss he will have sustained. And the effect of the order in that event will be to commit a great and irremediable injury." Spottiswoode v. Clark, Coop. Ch. 254, 10 Jur. 1043, 2 Phil. 154. See also Cox v. Land, etc., Journal Co., L. R. 9 Eq. 324, 39 L. J. Ch. 152, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 548, 18 Wkly. Rep. 206; Mathewson v. Stockdale, 12 Ves. Jr. 270.

Where action for penalty is pending.—An injunction to prevent infringement of a copyright may be granted, although a qui tam action for the penalty allowed by law is pending. Schumacher v. Schwencke, 25 Fed. 466, 23 Blatchf. 373.

Those decisions were doubtless correct as applied to the facts and circumstances under which they were made."

The question of minuteness in value of the original matter extracted from a work for purposes of criticism will have great weight with the court in influencing its decision on the application for an injunction. Bell v. Whitehead, 3 Jur. 68, 8 L. J. Ch. 141.

(E) Form of Injunction. The form of the injunction is dependent upon the nature and extent of the piracy, and may be either general or particular in its terms, and extend to the whole or to specified portions of the piratical work.³⁶

c. Discovery. On a bill for the infringement of copyright, discovery may be compelled in aid of the action,³⁷ unless it is sought to enforce penalties and forfeitures.³⁸ So too the court will permit interrogatories as to the sale of the plaintiff's work to be administered to the plaintiff for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages sustained, and of enabling the defendant to pay a sufficient sum into court to meet it.³⁹

d. Account of Profits—(i) IN GENERAL. The right to an account of profits is incident to the right to an injunction, and will not be ordered when the case for an injunction fails.⁴⁰

(ii) ACCOUNT PENDING INJUNCTION. Defendant may be ordered to keep an literary matter with his own, he must be restrained from publishing the literary matter which belongs to me; and if the parts of the work cannot be separated, and if by that means the injunction, which restrained the publication of my literary matter, prevents also the publication of his own literary matter, he has only himself to blame." Defendants may be compelled to produce their books and papers on the accounting before the master, in a suit in equity for an infringement, although complainant has brought replevin against them to forfeit the copies of the infringing works in their possession. Since the forfeiture cannot be enforced in the equity suit, defendants are not thus compelled to produce evidence against themselves in aid thereof. Callaghan v.

(III) WHAT PROFITS TO BE ACCOUNTED FOR—(A) In General. In regard to the general question of the profits to be accounted for by the defendant in an action for infringement, the only proper rule is to deduct from the selling price the actual and legitimate manufacturing cost;⁴² but if these profits prove insufficient to recoup the plaintiff for the damages he has suffered, an inquiry of damages may be ordered to supplement his recovery.⁴³

(B) In Case of Partial Infringement. Although the entire copyrighted work is not copied in an infringement, but only portions thereof, if such portions are so intermingled with the rest of the piratical work that they cannot well be distinguished from it, the entire profits realized by the defendant will be given to the plaintiff.⁴⁴

(C) Commissions. Commissions received from the sales of a pirated work are profits which must be accounted for on a bill by the proprietor of the copyright.⁴⁵

(IV) MODE OF ASCERTAINMENT. The usual mode of ascertaining profits is by reference to a master to take evidence and report,⁴⁶ although they may be ascertained from affidavits filed by the defendant.⁴⁷

e. Effect of Decree as Bar to Action. That the plaintiff asks in his injunction suit for an accounting is no bar to a subsequent action for statutory damages, where no accounting of profits is in fact sought or obtained.⁴⁸

C. Procedure—1. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT TO RIGHT OF ACTION—a. Registration. As has been previously stated, it is a condition precedent to the right of

But see Pike v. Nicholas, L. R. 5 Ch. 251, 39 L. J. Ch. 435, 18 Wkly. Rep. 321, in which it was held that the defendant is to account for every copy of his book sold as if it were a copy of complainant's book, and to pay the complainant the profit which the latter would have received from the sale of so many additional copies.

Charges and allowances.—An infringing firm will not be allowed on an accounting to charge the cost for stereotyping the infringing volumes, the amount paid for editing them, nor an amount paid to different members of the firm for their services as salaries during the period of the infringement; nor will they be allowed a credit for the cost of producing volumes which remain unsold, and they will be charged with the profits of re-sales of the infringing volumes which they had purchased as second-hand books. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. ed. 547 [affirming 24 Fed. 636]. While a court will not presume that all the money received by a piratical publisher on the sale of his books is profit, still, as the proof as to the cost of producing the work is wholly in the control of the defendant, the complainant makes a prima facie case of right to recover by showing the selling price and the usual manufacturers' cost. Myers v. Callaghan, 24 Fed. 636.

action under the English statute for the infringement of copyright in a book that the book be duly registered at Stationers' Hall.⁴⁹

b. Demand. A demand in writing is a condition precedent to an action of detinue or trover under the English statute,⁵⁰ but is not required in the United States in case of an action for forfeitures and penalties under the statute.⁵¹

2. JURISDICTION — a. England. The high court of justice, either in the king's bench or chancery division, has jurisdiction of all actions for the infringement of copyright.⁵²

b. United States — (i) IN GENERAL. The circuit courts of the United States have original jurisdiction of all suits at law or in equity arising under the copyright laws,⁵³ and the circuit courts, and the district courts having jurisdiction of circuit courts, have jurisdiction upon bill in equity to grant injunctions to prevent the violation of any right secured by the laws respecting copyrights.⁵⁴ This jurisdiction of the federal courts is exclusive in all cases arising under the statutes;⁵⁵ but in cases arising under the common law they only acquire jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship, or where an injunction is asked to restrain the unauthorized publication of manuscripts, in neither of which is the jurisdiction exclusive.⁵⁶

(ii) TO ADJUDGE PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES. The jurisdiction to adjudge penalties and forfeitures under the copyright acts is in the federal courts sitting as courts of law.⁵⁷

3. PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE — a. In General. The legal proprietor of copyright, whether the author, inventor, or designer of the work, or his legal representative, either by act of law or of the parties, is entitled to sue for an infringement thereof;⁵⁸ but an author who has pirated a large part of his work from

b. Joint Proprietors.—(i) RIGHT OF ALL TO SUE. Joint proprietors of copyright may sue jointly for its infringement;⁶⁰ but persons not having a common interest in the subject of the suit cannot be joined as co-plaintiffs.⁶¹

(ii) RIGHT OF ONE TO SUE. Although the joint owners of copyright take as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants,⁶² yet any one or more of them may maintain an action against a stranger for an infringement of the entire copyright.⁶³

c. Equitable Owner. While it is necessary in an action at law that the plaintiff have a valid legal title, the same is not true in equity, which will interfere to protect an equitable owner.⁶⁴

4. PERSONS LIABLE—a. England—(i) BOOKS. Any person printing or causing to be printed a piratical copy, or importing or selling any such copy, is liable.⁶⁵

(ii) DRAMATIC OR MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Any person who represents or performs, or causes to be represented or performed, any dramatic or musical composition in which there is a subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the author or other proprietor first had and obtained, at any place of dramatic entertainment, may be sued under the statute.⁶⁶

The contention has, however, been rejected.⁶⁹

b. United States — (i) BOOKS, ETC. The printer, publisher, dramatizer, translator, or importer of a piratical copy, or a vendor of such a copy who knows the same to be unlawful, is liable under the statute.⁷⁰ A principal, however, is not liable to penalty or forfeiture for an infringement of which his agents have been guilty without his knowledge,⁷¹ although he may be liable in damages.⁷²

(ii) MAPS, CHARTS, DRAMATIC OR MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS, AND WORKS OF ART. Any person who shall engrave, etch, work, copy, print, publish, dramatize, translate, or import a piratical copy, or who shall sell such copy knowing it to be unlawful, is liable to an action for infringement.⁷³ As in the case of the infringe-

gether with the services of the corps dramatique, band, lights, and accessories. The performer who so had the use of the theater represented therein a dramatic piece, the sole right of representing which had been assigned to the plaintiff. It was held that the proprietor of the theater caused the piece to be represented, and consequently was guilty of an infringement of the plaintiff's right, and liable to the penalty imposed by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 15, § 2. Marsh v. Conquest, 17 C. B. N. S. 418, 10 Jur. N. S. 989, 33 L. J. C. P. 319, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717, 12 Wkly. Rep. 1006, 112 E. C. L. 418. Compare *Lyon v. Rep. 1083, 117 E. C. L. 751].

One who merely lets a room to the offender is not liable, even though he supplies the benches and lights, or sells a ticket of admission, himself deriving no other profit than that arising from the letting of the room. Russell v. Briant, 8 C. B. 836, 14 Jur. 201, 19 L. J. C. P. 33, 65 E. C. L. 836.

Since the musical compositions act of 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 17) the proprietor, tenant, or occupier of any place of dramatic entertainment or other place at which any unauthorized representation or performance of any musical composition shall take place is not liable, unless he shall wilfully cause or permit such representation or performance, knowing it to be unauthorized.

Unauthorized sale of lawful copies.—The statute (17 Geo. III, c. 57) applies only to impressions of engravings pirated from other engravings, and not to prints taken from a lawful plate. Murray v. Heath, 1 B. & Ad. 804, 9 L. J. K. B. O. S. 111, 20 E. C. L. 698.

One who prints an infringing book under a contract with the publisher is liable, with the publisher, to account for the profits realized. Belford v. Scribner, 144 U. S. 488, 12 S. Ct. 734, 36 L. ed. 514.

Vendors are liable for the sale of a book which invades a copyright, and the owner of the copyright is not bound to seek redress against the author or publishers. Greene v. Bishop, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,763, 1 Cliff. 186.

Officer of corporation.—The managing officer of a corporation which has infringed copyright without his knowledge and against his express instructions cannot alone be held personally responsible merely because he is an officer of the corporation. Stuart v. Smith, 68 Fed. 189.

A corporation is liable to the statutory penalties and forfeitures as well as a natural person. Falk v. Curtis Pub. Co., 98 Fed. 989.

ment of books, an innocent principal is not liable to penalty or forfeiture for an infringement by his agent.⁷⁴

(iii) PLAY-RIGHT. The sale of an infringing play to another, with a view to its public representation, makes the seller a participant in causing the play to be publicly performed.⁷⁵

5. PLEADING — a. Bill, Declaration, or Complaint — (i) IN GENERAL. A bill, declaration, or complaint for the infringement of copyright must set out in detail a substantial compliance with the various requirements of the copyright laws,⁷⁶ and distinctly aver the plaintiff's title⁷⁷ and the fact that the defendant has been guilty made is liable. Fishel v. Lueckel, 53 Fed. 499.

Having control as business manager of sheets of a photograph does not give a person such possession as to render him liable to the penalty imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4965, which provides that, when any one snall copy a photograph which has been copyrighted, he shall forfeit one dollar for every sheet of the same found in his possession. Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 612, 8 S. Ct. 618, 31 L. ed. 577.

Former judgment a bar.—Judgment against the lithographer who made the prints for the infringer of a copyright is a bar to further recovery by the proprietor of the copyright against the infringer for the value of the prints. Sarony v. Ehrich, 28 Fed. 79, 23 Blatchf. 556.

Allen Co.*, 43 Fed. 680; Trow City Directory Co. v. Curtin, 36 Fed. 829; Falk v. Howell, 34 Fed. 739; Stover v. Lathrop, 33 Fed. 348; Chicago Music Co. v. J. W. Butler Paper Co., 19 Fed. 758; Boucicault v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47; Parkinson v. Laselle, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,762, 3 Sawy. 330.

It is necessary for the complainant to allege and show that he has deposited with the librarian of congress on or before the day of publication, a printed copy of the title-page of his book, and also two copies of his book, and that he has given the lawful copyright notice; but further than this complainant is not required to go in making out a prima facie case of legal copyright, and consequently it is not incumbent on him in the first instance to allege or prove that his copyrighted books were printed from type set within the limits of the United States as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4956 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3407]; Osgood v. A. S. Aloe Instrument Co., 69 Fed. 291.

Averments which follow the language of the statute are sufficient. Consequently a bill which avers that two copies of the book were deposited in the librarian's office in Washington within ten days after publication is sufficient, without alleging that the book was published within a reasonable time after the deposit of the copy of the title. Scribner v. Henry G. Allen Co., 49 Fed. 854. See also Burnell v. Chown, 69 Fed. 993, 994, where it was held that the deposit of copies within ten days after publication must be affirmatively averred, and that an averment that "within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, your orator did all the things required by law to be done in order to secure to himself the full enjoyment of all the rights and privileges" granted by the copyright laws was not sufficient.

Delivery and mailing of copies — Conjunctive statement.—U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4956 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3407], allowing a person seeking a copyright to deliver at the office of the librarian of congress the copy of the title of the book and the two copies of the book which the statute requires to be deposited, and also permitting the deposit of such copies in the mail, addressed to such librarian, does not prevent both the delivery and mailing of the copies; and, where a complaint for infringement avers that both these acts were done, complainant will not be required to elect which averment he will undertake to prove at the trial, and to abandon the other. Scribner v. Henry G. Allen Co., 43 Fed. 680 [distinguishing Falk v. Howell, 34 Fed. 739, where a disjunctive statement that the complainant mailed or delivered copies to the librarian of congress, although in the language of the statute, was held insufficient].

The statement of the legal conclusion that "the copyright was taken out by [plaintiff] previous to the publication thereof, in full accordance with the requirements of the laws of the United States" is insufficient. Trow City Directory Co. v. Curtin, 36 Fed. 829. See also Burrell v. Chown, 69 Fed. 993.

77. Lillard v. Sun Printing, etc., Assoc., 87 Fed. 213; Falk v. Seidenberg, 48 Fed. 224; Falk v. Schumacher, 48 Fed. 222; Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 640, 2 Blatchf. 39; Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1; Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217, 12 Jur. 723, 17 L. J. Q. B. 225, 64 E. C. L. 217.

But it is not necessary to set out the facts showing proprietorship (Falk v. Schumacher, 48 Fed. 222; Falk v. Seidenberg, 48 Fed. 224), or the plaintiff's chain of title (Lillard v. Sun Printing, etc., Assoc., 87 Fed. 213).

of infringement.⁷⁸ In addition to these there should also be averments of citizenship,⁷⁹ authorship,⁸⁰ and the existence of the facts of originality, intellectual production, thought, and conception.⁸¹ On the other hand matters of evidence,⁸² or facts which might subject the defendant to penalties and forfeitures,⁸³ should not be stated. Nor, unless knowledge is an essential statutory element of the offense, is it necessary to aver that the defendant knowingly invaded the right.⁸⁴ Similarly, in a suit for relief against violation of the "sole liberty of printing," etc., it is unnecessary either to allege or prove the absence of the written consent of the proprietor, as would be necessary in an action for statutory penalties and for forfeitures.⁸⁵ Penalties and forfeitures need not be waived in the bill of complaint seeking an injunction,⁸⁶ but unless they are the defendant cannot be compelled to make discoveries which would subject him thereto.⁸⁷

(II) IN ACTION TO RECOVER FORFEITURES. In an action to recover a forfeiture it is sufficient to allege the copying, printing, publishing, and exposing for sale of the infringing copies by the defendant, and that such copies were made within two years next before the commencement of the suit, and were found in Alternative conclusions from facts showing title.—A bill to restrain an infringement, which sets out the terms of the agreement between the author and his co-plaintiffs, the publishers, and states that if such agreement is not an assignment it is an exclusive license, correctly pleads publishers' title to the copyright by thus alleging the facts and stating the conclusions therefrom in the alternative. Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433.

Description of offense.—In an action for penalties for the representation of a dramatic piece at a place of dramatic entertainment it is sufficient to describe the offense in the words of the act. Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871, 4 D. & L. 666, 11 Jur. 127, 16 L. J. C. P. 105, 54 E. C. L. 871.

Averment of knowledge of infringement.—Where the bill positively avers the infringement of the copyright, it is sufficient, although it is not stated to be within the knowledge of affiant. Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433.

Where a statement of claim in a suit under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4965 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3414] properly alleges the copying, printing, publishing, and exposing for sale of the infringing copies of defendant, either of which constitutes an infringement, it need not allege that defendant was actually engaged in any such acts at the time copies of the infringing publication were found in his possession. Falk v. Curtis Pub. Co., 100 Fed. 77.

79. Webb v. Powers, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,323, 2 Woodb. & M. 497, where it was held that where the bill alleges the plaintiffs to be citizens of the United States and this is not denied in the answer, it must be considered as admitted, although no other evidence of citizenship is offered.

Sufficiency of averment.—Where the certificate from the librarian of congress described the person taking out a copyright as "of New York," and such person testifies that he is now a resident in New York, and that he mailed the two copies in the city of New York, it was held a sufficient averment to show that he is "a citizen of the United States or a resident therein." Patterson v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co., 119 Fed. 451.

80. Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 640, 2 Blatchf. 39.

Inconsistencies of allegations as to authorship in a bill for infringement of copyright are no ground of objection on general demurrer, if other allegations are sufficiently explicit as to the authorship. Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 640, 2 Blatchf. 39.

Specification of parts pirated.—Where a party seeks to restrain an infringement of his copyright, it is not necessary for him to specify, either in his bill or affidavit, the parts of his work which he considers to have been pirated, although he does not claim copyright in all the passages which are the same in both works. Sweet v. Maugham, 4 Jur. 479, 9 L. J. Ch. 323, 11 Sim. 51, 34 Eng. Ch. 51. But see Liddell v. Copp-Clark Co., 19 Ont. Pr. 332, where it was held that the defendants were entitled to particulars showing what part of defendant's book infringed plaintiff's right.

the defendant's possession prior to the time it was brought. It need not be alleged by whom the copies were found, nor, where the defendant is a corporation, is it necessary to state what officer or agent had them in custody, nor the authority under which he was acting.⁸⁸

(iii) JOINDER OF COMMON-LAW AND STATUTORY COUNTS. In an action for an infringement of copyright it is not permissible to join a count founded upon a common-law right with counts under the statute upon the same cause of action.⁸⁹

(iv) PRAYER FOR RELIEF—(A) For General Relief. Under a prayer for general relief, the court can decree an account of profits, since such account is a right incident to an injunction in copyright cases.⁹⁰

(B) For Enforcement of Penalties and Forfeitures. A bill in equity that prays the enforcement of penalties and forfeitures is demurrable.⁹¹

(v) EXHIBITS. It is proper to attach to a bill praying an injunction against the infringement of a copyright, copies of the infringed and infringing works.⁹²

(vi) VERIFICATION. A bill praying for an injunction and which is not to be used as evidence need not be verified at the time it is signed.⁹³

b. Plea or Answer—(i) IN GENERAL. A plaintiff in a suit to restrain breach of a copyright and for an accounting is entitled to an answer, not only with a view to an accounting, but also for the purpose of establishing his title.⁹⁴

(ii) GENERAL ISSUE. In the United States the defendant may plead the general issue in all actions arising under the laws respecting copyrights, and give the special matter in evidence.⁹⁵

(iii) NOTICE OF OBJECTIONS UNDER ENGLISH PRACTICE—(A) In General. In any action brought under the English statute the defendant, on pleading thereto, must give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely at the trial.⁹⁶ Where the objection is that the plaintiff is not the author, first publisher, or proprietor, the notice must give the name of the person whom the defendant alleges to be the author or first publisher of the book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, together with the title of such book, and the time when and the place where such book was first published.⁹⁷

No. 13,395, 2 Curt. 200, where there was a prayer for an injunction and the delivery up of the copperplate and copies of the piratical map, and it was held that an account of profits could not be decreed as incidental to the relief by injunction, but should have been prayed for in the bill.

Specification of day and month.—In case of an old publication first made abroad, it was held sufficient for the defendant to state the year of the first publication, and that it was not necessary that he should specify the day and month. Boosey v. Davidson, 4 D. & L. 147.

Illustration.—A defendant is not entitled to object that "some person, whose name is to the defendant unknown, and not the plaintiff, was the proprietor of said copyright;" nor "that the plaintiff was not himself the author;" nor "that the work was not first printed or published in the British dominions;" nor "that the plaintiff never acquired any title by assignment 'or otherwise' to

But where the plaintiff's claim is defeated by defects of title disclosed by his own evidence, the action may be dismissed, although the notice of objections has not been delivered before issue joined.⁹⁸

(B) Objection Must Be Specific. A general notice of objections is insufficient. The notice must be specific, and fully inform the plaintiff of the grounds of defense relied on.⁹⁹

(c) Amendment. The defendant may be allowed, within the sound judicial discretion of the court, to amend his notice of objections.¹

6. ASCERTAINMENT OF INFRINGEMENT — a. In General. Originally all questions of fact in proceedings for infringement of copyright were determinable only by a jury,² which is still the proper tribunal for the determination of such questions in all actions at law.³ At the present day questions of fact in equitable actions are ascertained either by the court,⁴ or, and this is the prevailing practice in the United States, by reference to a master.⁵

the copyright; nor that there was no 'valid' assignment;" nor "that there is no copyright in a work first published out of the British dominions, under such circumstances as the books in question were published." Boosey v. Davidson, 4 D. & L. 147.

It is a sufficient compliance with the statute to allege a definite publication of the disputed work at some particular place by some definite party, either before or simultaneously with the publication by the plaintiff, or with a publication in another place. Boosey v. Purday, 10 Jur. 1038.

A denial of the plaintiff's title, and the statement that the proprietor "is some person unknown, but not the plaintiff," is insufficient. There must be a definite statement as to who is the true proprietor. Hole v. Bradbury, 12 Ch. D. 886, 48 L. J. Ch. 673, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 153, 250, 28 Wkly. Rep. 39; *Boosey v. Registration.—A notice of defense, which stated, "The Defendant denies that the song has been duly registered. The time of the first publication thereof is not truly entered on the register," is insufficient. The notice must state specifically what the objection to the registration is. Collette v. Goode, 7 Ch. D. 842, 47 L. J. Ch. 370, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 504.

Printing and publication.—An objection that the books in question were not first printed or published in the British dominions should be struck out as too general. Boosey v. Purday, 10 Jur. 1038.

b. Evidence—(i) IN GENERAL. Infringement of copyright may be shown by all kinds of evidence, and especially by the resemblances between the two works.⁵ It is said, however, to be much more important, where a suit is brought for the violation of copyright, that the existence of facts of originality, of intellectual production, of thought and conception on the part of the author should be proved, than in case of the infringement of a patent right.⁷

(ii) JUDICIAL KNOWLEDGE. The court will not interpose its judicial knowledge to the extent of finding on demurrer against the allegations of the bill touching the questions of originality.⁸

(iii) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF—(A) Presumptions—(1) FROM COPYRIGHT. The copyright is prima facie evidence that the plaintiff was the author, and the burden of proof is upon the defendant to show the contrary;⁹ and similarly the record of copyright made in the prescribed form is prima facie evidence of the due deposit of title.¹⁰

(2) FROM RESEMBLANCES—(a) IN GENERAL. Marked resemblances between the original and alleged infringing works raise a presumption of piracy against the defendant.¹¹

(b) COMMON ERRORS. The existence of common errors and inaccuracies in the original and alleged piratical works raises a presumption of infringement so strong that it can only be overcome by the clearest and most convincing proof;¹² and when a considerable number of passages are proved to have been copied,

Before granting a preliminary injunction on a charge of an infringement of copyright, the court will generally refer the matter to a master, with instructions to report the extent of the infringement, if any, that the court may act on the case. Story v. Derby, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,496, 4 McLean 160.

To ascertain nature and extent of piracy.—An equity suit for infringement will be referred to a master to examine as to the nature and extent of the infringement, although infringement has been established on the principal hearing. Lawrence v. Dana, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,136, 4 Cliff. 1.

In case of compilations of facts and statis-

Where it is clearly apparent from inspection that in a city directory compiled for publication by defendant, matter has in numerous instances been pirated from a copyrighted directory published by complainant for a preceding year, complainant is entitled to an injunction restraining the publication of defendant's directory as a whole although portions of it appear to be free from the charge of piracy, unless defendant can eliminate the portions which he has unlawfully appropriated. *Williams v. Jr. 269; Spiers v. Brown, 6 Wkly. Rep. 352; Cadieux v. Beauchemin, 31 Can. Supreme Ct. 370 [affirming 10 Quebec Q. B. 255]. Compare Cary v. Kearsley, 4 Esp. 168, 6 Rev. Rep. 846, where it was held that a count for pirating generally is not supported by evidence that there are in the original work particular errors and mistakes, with

by the copying of blunders in them, other passages which are the same with the passages in the original book must be presumed prima facie to be likewise copied, although no blunders occur in them.¹³

(3) FROM UNFAIR USE OF PART. When it is conclusively shown from internal evidence that a subsequent digester has made an unfair use of any part of a copyrighted syllabus, the presumption is that he made use of the whole.¹⁴ And the mere addition of original work is not sufficient to purge an infringing work of the charge of infringement.¹⁵

(4) FROM EMPLOYMENT. When an artist is commissioned to execute a work of art not in existence at the time the commission is given, the burden of proving that he retains a copyright in the work of art executed, sold, and delivered under the commission, rests heavily upon the artist himself.¹⁶

(B) Burden of Proof—(1) TO SHOW COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE. The burden of showing a literal compliance with each and every statutory requirement in the nature of conditions precedent to the acquisition of a valid copyright is upon the plaintiff.¹⁷

(2) TO SHOW INFRINGEMENT. The burden is upon the plaintiff to show infringement of his copyright.¹⁸

(IV) ADMISSIBILITY—(A) Certificate of Librarian. A certificate of the librarian of congress is admissible in evidence to show compliance with requirements of the Copyright Act;¹⁹ but an unsigned statement that copies were deposited attached to a certificate of the librarian is no evidence of the deposit.²⁰

(B) Expert Testimony. While expert testimony as to the comparisons between the copyrighted book and the alleged infringing book is admissible, it is in the nature of secondary evidence and does not relieve the court from the necessity of making a personal examination of the books on the question of infringement.²¹

(C) Opinion Evidence. Testimony of witnesses who have compared the copyrighted work with the alleged infringing work as to their general conclusions on the question of infringement is not competent; but where they point out similarities of language and other indicia of infringement, the testimony may be used to assist the court in its examination.²²

(D) Parol Evidence—(1) OF ASSIGNMENT. Parol evidence of the assignment of an interest in a copyright is sufficient, unless objected to or rebutted.²³

(2) OF SIMILARITIES. On the trial of a suit for infringement of a copyright a witness cannot testify as to identities between the parts of the alleged infringing which the pirated edition corresponds verbatim.

Knowledge of copyright.—In England it has been held that in an action for an infringement of copyright by merely publishing a work printed or caused to be printed by others, knowledge of the copyright so infringed must be proved. Leader v. Strange, 2 C. & K. 1010, 61 E. C. L. 1010.

19. Belford v. Scribner, 144 U. S. 488, 12 S. Ct. 734, 36 L. ed. 514.

Evidence of register.—The certificate of registration of a copyright is prima facie evidence that the requirements of law previous to its issuance have been complied with (Bernard v. Berton, 14 Quebec 219); and where the register of copyrights certifies that he has made search and cannot find any copies of the books on file, evidence that the author had mailed two copies of the book, addressed to the librarian of congress, is sufficient to show filing (Patterson v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co., 119 Fed. 451).

work and the original work, where the works themselves are not produced in court or their absence accounted for.²⁴

(E) Statement of Co-Defendant. In an action for damages for the infringement of a copyright a statement by one of the defendants that he had disposed of a certain number of copies of their work is not available against the other defendant, a corporation, although he is an officer of such corporation.²⁵

(F) Evidence of Authorship. The fact that the plan, arrangement, and combination of a copyrighted work originated in the brain of its author may be proved by some person other than such author.²⁶

(G) Experimental Tests. Where the relative rate of speed with which the original and alleged infringing works have been compiled is relied on as evidence tending to show that an unfair use must have been made of the earlier work, it is within the discretion of the court to allow the defendant in rebuttal to give an ocular demonstration of the speed with which its editors can do such work.²⁷

(H) Affidavits in Rebuttal. On the question of infringement, a complainant may read affidavits in rebuttal, although in support of his title he must depend upon the affidavits filed with his bill.²⁸

(V) SUFFICIENCY—(A) To Show Infringement—(1) IN GENERAL. In order to show piracy it is not sufficient to show that parts of the defendant's work may have been suggested by that of the plaintiff, or that some parts of it have resemblances in methods and details to the plaintiff's. It must be further shown that such resemblances are so close, full, uniform, and striking as fairly to lead to the conclusion that the one is a substantial copy of the other or mainly borrowed from it;²⁹ but where this is shown, a simple denial by the defendant that he made use of the plaintiff's work is insufficient to overcome the prima facie case so made.³⁰

27. As tending to show an unfair use of its syllabi, complainant showed that defendant's regular and experienced editors digested from twenty to forty cases per day, while complainant's own editors, working from the opinions alone, averaged only from four to seven cases a day. An independent witness, the official reporter of the court of appeals of New York, with twenty-one years' experience, testified that he had not been able to do over seven cases a day, and that his average was about four. Thereupon defendant offered to produce some of its editors who, in the master's presence, with cases of average length to be selected by him, would, under conditions insuring fairness, show their rate of speed in original work. It was held that it was in the discretion of the court to reject this offer, on complainant's objection; that the rate of speed attained under such conditions would not fairly represent the average speed for weeks and months continuously, under varying conditions, mental and physical; and that on the whole not much weight was to be attached to the argument from the rate of speed as, to be of much value, the character of the digest paragraphs would have to be carefully investigated. West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-operative Pub. Co., 79 Fed. 756, 25 C. C. A. 648, 35 L. R. A. 400 [affirming 64 Fed. 360, 25 L. R. A. 441].

Similarity of arrangement.—In connection with other evidences of infringement, the court will consider the arrangement of the books infringing the original edition, and such evidence will be entitled to weight in judging of the fact of infringement. Myers v. Callaghan, 20 Fed. 441.

In a suit for infringement of the copyright of a directory, proof that defendant had in its office three pages concededly taken from the complainant's book, cut, pasted, and edited apparently for the purpose of being used as copy for defendant's book, is sufficient to entitle complainant to a preliminary injunction, unless a denial of the intention to use such pages as copy is supported by a clear showing of the methods used by defendant, and the sources from which his copy was obtained. Chicago Directory Co. v. U. S. Directory Co., 122 Fed. 189.

30. West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-operative Pub. Co., 79 Fed. 756, 25 C. C. A. 648, 35 L. R. A. 400, where, however, it appeared that defendant's principal editor had digested some seven thousand of the entire thirteen thousand three hundred cases digested from complainant's pamphlets. Two of these cases were found to contain suggestive verbal identities, but no errors in common with the syllabi, and it was held that the denial of such editor that he had made use of the syllabi

(2) PROOF OF ANIMUS FURANDI. When in addition to the resemblance between a copyrighted book and one which is claimed to infringe it, there is an intent on the part of the author of the second work to appropriate the labors of the author of the first work, the presumption which results therefrom constitutes proof of infringement.³¹

(3) INFRINGEMENT OF OTHER WORK. Since it is immaterial where an alleged infringer obtains suggestions for making variations in a copyrighted work, another work offered in evidence to show that a certain feature was taken from it is irrelevant.³²

(4) SEGREGATION OF INFRINGING MATTER. It is not necessary, in an action for infringement of copyright, to segregate the matter which is claimed to have been infringed, where the defendant or his employee has so mingled the matter contained in its publication with that contained in the original work that no one except the defendant himself or his employee can segregate the pirated matter from the original matter.³³

(5) FALSE DENIAL OF INFRINGEMENT. For a defendant falsely to deny that he has copied or taken any idea from another work is a strong indication of animus furandi.³⁴

(b) To Rebut Infringement—(1) KNOWLEDGE OF INFRINGEMENT. Evidence that the plaintiff knew that the defendant was infringing his copyright and did not object to it is not sufficient to warrant the inference that the plaintiff assented to the infringement.³⁵

(2) WANT OF NOTICE OF COPYRIGHT. The prima facie case that notice of copyright was inscribed on all copies, made by affidavits of those in charge of preparing the copies, is not overthrown by evidence that the original was without the statutory notice when it came into the defendant's possession, but it must be shown that it lacked such notice when it left the plaintiff's possession.³⁶

(3) PRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT. It has been held to be of greatest importance as evidence of bona fides that the defendant should produce his original manuscript.³⁷

(c) To Show Date of Publication. The date on the title-page of a book is not conclusive evidence of the time of its publication;³⁸ nor is the fact that a person on a certain date heard a piece of music performed from printed sheets evidence that the music had been published as a book at that date.³⁹

(d) To Show Assignment. A receipt for the purchase-money of a copyrighted work is no evidence of its assignment.⁴⁰

7. DAMAGES—a. In General. Damages as well as profits cannot be recovered in equity for an infringement of copyright.⁴¹ Nor can substantial damages be allowed where it appears that the matters charged have not worked any prejudice to the plaintiff.⁴²

Nominal damages.—In an action to recover penalties for several infringements of copyright under section 6 of the fine arts copyright act of 1862, the court can award a sum of money which, in relation to each of the several offenses, may represent only a frac-

b. For Literary Piracy—(i) IN GENERAL. In case of literary piracy the defendant is to account for every copy of his book sold as if it had been a copy of the plaintiff's, and to pay the plaintiff the profit which he would have received from the sale of so many additional copies;⁴³ but where the defendant uses only part of the matter of the original, and his edition is a much cheaper one and sold at a very much lower price, the measure of damages is the amount of profits realized by the defendant, and not the amount of profits that would have been realized to the copyright owner by the sale of an equal number of copies of the copyright edition.⁴⁴ This latter rule also maintains in an action of trover,⁴⁵ under the English statute.⁴⁶

(ii) VINDICTIVE DAMAGES. In Canada, where there is clear proof of counterfeiting, the damages will not be measured merely by the price realized through the sale of the counterfeit, but vindictive damages will be allowed.⁴⁷

c. For Infringement of Play-Right. In a common-law action for damages for the invasion of play-right there is no limit, as in the statute, to the amount of damages. That is a question of proof, to be determined by the evidence in the case, and in relation to which the jury are to form their own conclusions.⁴⁸

8. PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES. The penalties and forfeitures provided in case of maps, plats, charts, dramatic or musical compositions, and works of art, are penal in character, and highly punitive in effect, and must be strictly construed.⁴⁹ The provision imposing a penalty of one dollar per sheet applies only to such sheets as have been found in the defendant's possession for the purpose of forfeiture and condemnation, and until the sheets have been so found, no right of action to recover such penalty accrues.⁵⁰

tional part of the lowest coin in the realm as the penalty for each offense, and is not bound to award such a sum as will represent a farthing at the least in respect of each offense. Hildesheimer v. Faulkner, [1901] 2 Ch. 552, 70 L. J. Ch. 800, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 322, 49 Wkly. Rep. 708.

Technical infringement.—Where the great bulk of matter which might be copyrighted seemed to be made up independently of the infringed volume, and in many instances where a similarity could be clearly traced such similarity was trivial and unimportant, although there was technically an infringement of plaintiff's copyright, defendant was required to pay a small royalty, and a forfeiture of the whole edition was denied. *Myers v. 50. The penalty imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4965 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3414] extends only to sheets found in his possession, for the purpose of forfeiture and condemnation, and does not extend to sheets which are merely proved to have been in his possession at some time within two years before the action began. Bolles v. Outing Co., 175 U. S. 262, 20 S. Ct. 94, 44 L. ed. 156 [affirming 77 Fed. 966, 23 C. C. A. 594]. See also cases cited supra, note 49.

Corporations—Possession of agent.—The provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4965 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3414], which subjects "any person" to the forfeitures therein prescribed for having in his possession, etc., unauthorized copies of a copyrighted publication, apply as well to corporations as to natural persons; and the possession of such copies by agents of the corporation, acting in its behalf, is the possession of the corporation. Falk v. Curtis Pub. Co., 98 Fed. 989.

9. COSTS — a. England — (i) BOOKS. In actions for the infringement of literary copyright the allowance, disallowance, or apportionment of costs is a matter within the sound discretion of the court.⁶¹ The plaintiff may be refused his costs, even though successful, if by his conduct he has induced the defendant to incur expense,⁶² or if, after acquiescence and delay, he brings an action without fair notice.⁶³ Similarly the costs of unnecessary proceedings,⁶⁴ those of an action which should never have been brought, and in which only nominal damages are recovered,⁶⁵ or those in an action brought merely for the purpose of making money out of it,⁶⁶ may be refused. So too if the plaintiff has increased the expenses by raising other questions in which he has failed the costs will be apportioned.⁶⁷ On the other hand a successful defendant may be refused his costs where his defense is merely technical,⁶⁸ where the court is of the opinion that he has brought the action on himself, either by his conduct,⁶⁹ or by an unfair and unjust use of plaintiff's work, which does not amount to piracy.⁶⁹

(ii) PLAY-RIGHT. In case of infringement of play-right the statute provides for a full and reasonable indemnity as to costs which, being given by statute, are not in the discretion of the court, but must be awarded the successful plaintiff.⁶¹

(iii) ENGRAVINGS AND PRINTS. The plaintiff in an action for the infringement of copyright in an engraving or print is entitled to "full costs," which has been construed to mean the ordinary costs as between party and party.⁶² Being given by statute, they are probably not within the discretion of the court.⁶³

b. United States. In the United States there are no statutory provisions as

The amount of the forfeiture is determined solely by the number of sheets, without regard to the number of copies of the work that may be printed on the sheet. Falk v. Heffron, 56 Fed. 299.

Copies beyond control of defendant — Recovery of value.— When the infringing copies are out of the possession and beyond the control of the infringer, the proprietor of the copyright cannot recover of him their value in an action at law. Sarony v. Ehrich, 28 Fed. 79, 23 Blatchf. 556.

The copies must be so far perfected as to constitute an imitation of a substantial part, and as to establish identity. Consequently sheets seized in defendant's possession, after the first or outline impression only of the photograph had been taken, are not forfeitable, although it was the defendant's intention to complete the copies. Morrison v. Pettibone, 87 Fed. 330.

10. LIMITATIONS AND LACHES—a. Limitations—(i) ENGLAND—(A) Literary Copyright. All actions, suits, bills, indictments, or informations for any offense committed against the act shall be brought, sued, and commenced within twelve calendar months next after such offense is committed, or else the same shall be void and of no effect.⁶⁵

(c) Engravings and Prints. Under 8 Geo. II, c. 13, and the supplemental and amendatory statute of 7 Geo. III, c. 38, actions for penalties must be brought within three months after the discovery of the infringement, and within six months after the offense. These statutes, however, do not apply to an action for damages under 17 Geo. III, c. 57, to which the limitation for actions on the case generally is applicable.⁶⁷

(d) Sculpture. An action for the infringement of copyright in sculpture must be brought within six months of the discovery of the offense.⁶⁸

(E) Paintings, Drawings, and Photographs. No special limit having been fixed by statute, an action for the infringement of a painting, drawing, or photograph will not be barred for six years.⁶⁹

(ii) UNITED STATES. No action can be maintained for a penalty or forfeiture unless it be brought within two years after the cause of action arises,⁷⁰ and this is held to include damages under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4964 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3413] in respect to books.⁷¹

b. Laches—(i) ACQUIESCENCE AND CONSENT. Consent, whether express or implied, or long acquiescence in an infringement, will prevent relief in equity.⁷²

64. See, generally, COSTS. See also Emerson v. Davies, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,436, 3 Story 768, where the defendant was given the right to elect a trial by jury of the issue of infringement on payment of the ordinary taxable costs up to such time, the expense of printing the record to be divided between the parties, and the future costs to abide the result of the verdict and decree of the court.

Meaning of "offense."—It has been held that the words "for any offense committed" refer only to actions to enforce penalties, and that therefore the limitation does not apply to actions for damages. *Clark v. (II) DELAY. Mere delay in bringing suit is no defense to the suit when brought, where there is no proof of acquiescence in, or failure to object to, the acts constituting infringement, and the defendant's conduct has not been induced by any act or omission of those interested in the copyright.⁷³ Where, however, the plaintiff has been guilty of culpable negligence in seeking redress, relief will be refused in equity, although the legal right may be acknowledged.⁷⁴

IV. INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

A. England—1. IN GENERAL. Works first produced in a foreign country with which England has a treaty for the mutual protection of literary and artistic works are protected from infringement in the British dominions under the domestic legislation of the United Kingdom;⁷⁵ but works first published in a foreign country with which there is no treaty, or to which the provisions of the international copyright acts have not been extended by order in council are in no way protected from infringement.⁷⁶

2. WORKS PROTECTED—a. In General. In order to claim protection in England the work must be such as is protected in the country of its origin, and also such as is entitled to copyright in the United Kingdom.⁷⁷

at least one of three propositions: viz., either that the Plaintiff authorized what was done by the Defendants, or that his conduct conduced to what was done by them; or that there is enough to displace the prima facie proof of the Plaintiff's copyright." Morris v. Ashbee, L. R. 7 Eq. 34, 38, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 550.

Delay in prosecuting earlier suits.—The failure of the publishers of a foreign encyclopedia to press to completion suits for infringement of copyrights of certain volumes does not estop them from prosecuting suits for infringement of parts of later volumes. Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 56 Fed. 764.

[III, C, 10, b, (ii)]

Delay while law doubtful.—The copyright of work of an alien was sold to a British subject, who published it in this country in 1844. The copyright was infringed in 1849, but the state of the law then rendered it very doubtful whether the copyright was protected, and the purchaser merely protested against the infringement; but in 1851, within a reasonable time after the decision of a case in the exchequer chamber had established the general question of copyright in an alien, he filed his bill and moved to restrain the publication of the pirated work. It was held that there had been so much delay as to disentitle him to an injunction. Buxton v. James, 5 De G. & Sm. 80, 16 Jur. 15.

75. MacGillivray Copyright 193.

76. No order in council has been made extending the provisions of the international copyright acts to the United States. Consequently an American author or artist can only obtain English copyright under the provisions of the copyright acts, that is, those relating to domestic copyright, which require a first or simultaneous publication in Great Britain and that the author, at the time of publication, be within the British dominions. Boucicault v. Delafeld, 1 Hem. & M. 597, 9 Jur. N. S. 1282, 33 L. J. Ch. 38, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 709, 12 Wkly. Rep. 101; Boucicault v. Chatterton, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 541 [affirmed in 5 Ch. D. 267, 46 L. J. b. Translations. A translation of a foreign play, in order that it may be protected under the law of international copyright, does not necessarily require to be an absolutely literal translation. It is sufficient if it is substantially a translation, from which the character of the original work may be understood.⁷⁸

c. Works Published Before Dec. 6, 1887. Works published before Dec. 6, 1887, are protected except in so far as such protection may prejudice rights or interests arising from or in connection with such works which are subsisting and valuable at that date.⁷⁹

3. PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN — a. Registration and Delivery of Copies. Where an order in council respecting any foreign country is made under the international copyright acts, the provisions of those acts with respect to the registry and delivery of copies of works shall not apply to works produced in such country except so far as is provided by the order.⁸⁰

b. Notice of Copyright. A foreign print cannot claim copyright unless the date of publication and the name of the proprietor are engraved thereon.⁸¹

4. DURATION OF COPYRIGHT. The international copyright act of 1886 limits the duration of the term of copyright to that prescribed by the law of the country of origin of the proprietor.⁸²

5. INFRINGEMENT — a. Importation of Copies. Where an international copyright is owned by different persons in different countries, the owner in one country has not the right to import his books into the other's country.⁸³

b. Remedies. The remedies for infringement of copyright are governed by the law of the country in which the infringement takes place.⁸⁴

B. United States. By the act of congress of March 3, 1891, the provisions of the copyright laws are extended to citizens and subjects of a foreign state or nation only when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens, or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international

There is much evidence in the record as to the general character of these contracts and the manner in which they are executed and discharged. It appears that delivery is always contemplated, not as a thing which will be necessarily insisted upon, but as a thing which the purchaser may insist upon. It sufficiently appears that this is the one thing which gives vitality to such contracts and which enables those who, during a particular month are on the successful side of them, to get up what is known as a 'corner.' This happens when a much greater amount of any given commodity has been sold for future delivery within a given period than can be purchased in the market. The buyers, who are called in the slang of the exchanges the 'longs,' then insist upon delivery, and by this means succeed in running up the prices to a fictitious point, at which the 'deals' are 'rung out,' between the dealers by the payment of differences, or, where the purchasers insist upon it, by actual delivery"); Kirkpatrick v. I. DEFINITION.

Coroners are ancient officers by the common law, so called because they deal principally with the pleas of the crown, and were of old time the principal conservators of the peace within their county.¹ In modern times they are county or municipal officers whose main duty is to hold inquests on the bodies of those who are supposed to have died violent deaths; with the additional ministerial duty, in many cases, of acting as a substitute for the sheriff in case of his incapacity to act.²

II. HISTORY AND FUNCTIONS AT COMMON LAW.

The office of coroner is a very ancient one at common law, and is said to be of equal antiquity with that of sheriff, the two having been ordained together to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardship of their counties.³ The incumbent of the office was called coroner, or coronator, because he had principally to deal with pleas of the crown or those in which the king was immediately concerned.⁴ Viewed in this light, the lord chief justice of the king's bench was by virtue of his office the chief coroner of England, and might if he pleased exercise the jurisdiction of a coroner in any part of the realm.⁵ There were, however, other coroners in each county, usually four, but sometimes six or only two,⁶ who were chosen by all the freeholders in the county court by virtue of the king's writ de coronatore eligendo.⁷ They were supposed to be men of means and influence, and indeed it was provided by an early statute that "through all shires sufficient men shall be chosen to be coroners, of the most loyal and wise knights which know, will, and may best attend upon such offices, and which lawfully shall attach and present pleas of the crown."⁸ And it was afterward provided that no coroner should be chosen unless he had land in fee in the same county sufficient to make him answerable to all manner of people for his miscon-

"A coroner is an officer of great antiquity at the common law, whose powers and duties, like those of the sheriff, were both judicial and ministerial. By virtue of his office, like the sheriff, he was a conservator of the peace; and he has always had other duties attached to his office which do not pertain to that of sheriff. But his ministerial office is, and always has been, both in England and the United States, to act as the sheriff's substitute, in the execution of process, when the latter cannot act." Powell v. Wilson, 16 Tex. 59, 60 [citing 1 Bl. Comm. 346, 350; Burrill L. Dict.].

"Coroners also (by the common law) are conservators of the peace within the county where they be coroners; but they (as also all other the conservators of the peace by the common law) have power for the keeping of the peace only as the constables have to this day, to wit, they may take surety for the peace by obligation." Dalton Sherr. 3 [quoted in Davis v. Pembrokeshire Justices, 7 Q. B. D. 513, 514].

2. See the statutes of the several states.

By sections 1570 and 1571 of the Charter of the Greater City of New York (N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 378), the office of county coroner was abolished within the limits of the greater city, and it is provided that a certain number of coroners shall be elected in the different boroughs of the consolidated cities, who shall possess all the powers and perform all the duties vested in or imposed on coroners by any law of the state, or of the city as therefore constituted. By this legislation the office of county coroner, within the territory of the new city, came to an end on Jan. 1, 1898. People v. Blair, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 213, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 495 [affirmed in 154 N. Y. 734, 49 N. E. 1102]; Tuthill v. New York, 29 Misc. 555, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 968.

duct in office;⁹ and if he was not possessed of property sufficient for this purpose, his fine was levied on the county as a punishment for electing an unsuitable officer.¹⁰ Coroners, being thus required to be men of dignity and means, formerly served without compensation.¹¹ They were chosen for life, but were subject to removal either by being appointed to an incompatible office or by the king's writ de coronatore exonerando upon sufficient cause shown.¹² By an ancient statute, which is said to be wholly directory and declaratory of the common law, the duties of the coroner are either judicial or ministerial, but principally judicial.¹³ His judicial powers and duties relate to inquiries after the manner of the death of any person who is slain, who dies suddenly, or who dies in prison, with the aid of a jury, super visum corporis, for if the body is not found the coroner cannot sit. In this capacity he is also to inquire concerning treasure-trove and shipwrecks.¹⁴ His ministerial duties consisted only in acting as the sheriff's substitute when for any reason the sheriff was incapacitated to act.¹⁵

III. APPOINTMENT AND ELECTION.

At common law, as has been seen, the chief justice of the king's bench was coroner virtute officii, who by virtue of his office was the chief coroner of the realm.¹⁶ So also there were certain coroners by charter, commission, or privilege, and these were ordinarily made by grant or commission without election, such as the coroners of particular lords of liberties and franchises, who by charter had power to create their own coroners or to be coroners themselves.¹⁷

As the chief intent of these statutes was to prevent the choosing of persons, of mean ability and circumstances, it was deemed sufficient if the coroner was a man of such substance and credit as would enable him to maintain the dignity of his office, although he were not a knight, especially as it was generally found impracticable to find knights enough who were willing to undertake the office. 2 Bacon Abr. tit. Treasure-trove.—The jurisdiction of the coroner with regard to treasure-trove is confined to an inquiry as to who were the finders and who is suspected thereof; it is not necessary to hold an inquest for the purpose of informing the crown as to its rights. Atty.-Gen. v. Moore, [1893] 1 Ch. 676, 62 L. J. Ch. 607, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 574, 3 Reports 213, 41 Wkly. Rep. 294.

Again, in case of death through misfortune, the coroner was to inquire of the deodand, its value, and in whose hands it was, and to seize and deliver the same to the township to be answerable to the crown for it. Reg. v. Polwart, 1 Q. B. 818, 1 G. & D. 211, 6 Jur. 190, 10 L. J. M. C. 118, 41 E. C. L. 792; Atty.-Gen. v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 3 R. & Can. Cas. 145; 2 Hale P. C. 62. Forfeiture in respect to deodands was abolished by 10 Vict. c. 62.

Anciently the coroner had some other judicial duties to perform, such as taking appeals of murder, robbery, rape, and mayhem; taking the accusation of an approver; taking the confession of felony by a felon; and taking his abjuration. 2 Hale P. C. 67, 68.

Thus the mayor of London was by charter coroner of London; the bishop of Ely had, by

And again there were two great precincts that by royal grant had power to create coroners of their own, namely, the jurisdiction of the admiralty and of the verge.¹⁸ But the general coroners of the counties are elected by the freeholders of the counties in the county court, by virtue of the king's writ de coronatore eligendo, issuing out of chancery and afterward returnable to the same, and consequently their authority does not terminate upon the demise of the king, as that of all judges acting only under the king's commission and not by virtue of an election.¹⁹ The writ for the election of a coroner first recites the death or discharge of a former coroner, and then commands the sheriff to cause another to be chosen in full county court, by the assent of the county, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided; who having taken his oath in the usual manner may do all things which belong to the office of a coroner, etc.; and then it concludes with commanding the sheriff to certify to the court the name of the person chosen.²⁰ In holding such court and making a return to the writ, the sheriff exercises judicial functions, and therefore a quo warranto does not lie to inquire into the validity of votes cast at the election.²¹ In the United States coroners are usually elected in the same manner as sheriffs and other county officers.²²

IV. OFFICIAL BOND.

Instead of the common-law property qualification, coroners are now usually required to execute and file a statutory bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned well and faithfully to perform all the duties appertaining to their office.²³ And such bond may, by assignment or otherwise, be put in suit by persons injured by the official misconduct of the coroner.²⁴ The sureties on the coroner's bond are bound for the faithful performance of his duties as sheriff where he is authorized to act as such in case of the sheriff's death or disability.²⁵ But as such statutes are usually directory the want of an official bond does not impair the validity of the charter of Henry VII, power to appoint coroners within the isle of Ely; and Queen Catherine had authority under a charter from Henry VIII to nominate coroners for the hundred of Cobridge. See 2 Bacon Abr. tit. Coroners.

18. The coroner of the admiralty was appointed by the lord high admiral for inquisitions of deaths that occurred on the high seas. The coroner of the king's house, usually called the coroner of the verge, it seems, was anciently appointed by the king's letters patent; but by statute in the time of Henry VIII his appointment was settled in perpetuity in the lord steward or lord great master of the king's house for the time being. 2 Bacon Abr. tit. Coroners; 2 Hale P. C. 54; 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12.

Adjournment of election.—Where the sheriff received the writ for the election of a coroner more than six days before the next county court, it was held that he had no authority to postpone the election to an adjourned term fourteen days afterward, and that an election at such adjourned term was void. Matter of Stafford County, 5 L. J. Ch. O. coroner's acts as a de facto officer.²⁶ Nor does the fact that the statute has not been strictly complied with relieve the sureties from their liability on such bond.²⁷ Where the bond has been executed, and the coroner has acted officially, it may be presumed that the sureties have been approved.²⁸

V. DEPUTIES.

In the absence of statutory authority, a coroner, who is a judicial as well as a ministerial officer, has no power to appoint a deputy to hold an inquest;²⁹ but in some jurisdictions there are statutes providing for the appointment of deputy or assistant coroners to perform the duties of the office in case of the illness or unavoidable absence of the coroner.³⁰ And where the jury is sworn, and the inquest is properly and lawfully commenced before a deputy, he should continue holding the inquest to its conclusion, although in the course of the proceedings the principal coroner may be present accidentally.³¹

VI. JUSTICE OF THE PEACE ACTING AS CORONER.

Under the constitutions and laws of some of the states justices of the peace are empowered to exercise the ordinary duties of coroners.³² In other states they may do so only when there is no coroner in office, when the coroner is absent from the county,³³ is unable to attend,³⁴ or cannot be had in due time to hold the inquest,³⁵ or where the office of the coroner is a great distance from the place

The bond is admissible in evidence against the coroner and his sureties, although it has not been recorded as required by statute. Young v. Com., 6 Binn. (Pa.) 88.

Where the statute requires a recognizance as well as a bond, no recovery can be had on the bond if no recognizance has been given, for in that case the coroner's commission and all his acts colore officii are void. Young v. Com., 6 Binn. (Pa.) 88.

Necessity of writing.—Such an appointment should be in writing or at least should

Holding another inquest.—It is a lawful and reasonable cause of absence that the coroner is holding another inquest at the time. Reg. v. Perkin, 7 Q. B. 165, 9 Jur. 686, 14 L. J. M. C. 87, 53 E. C. L. 165.

Question of law.—The question of the lawful or reasonable cause for the absence of the coroner is for the court and not for the jury. Reg. v. Johnson, L. R. 2 C. C. 15, 12 Cox C. C. 264, 42 L. J. M. C. 41, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 801.

34. Dubois County v. Wertz, 112 Ind. 263, 13 N. E. 874; Stevens v. Harrison County, 46 Ind. 541.

The meaning of this is that when there is an emergency for holding an inquest, and the coroner for any cause is so far out of the way as to be unable to reach the body and hold an inquest within a reasonable time, under all the circumstances, the proper justice of the peace may do so, and perform all the coroner's duties in connection therewith. *Dubois County v. where the death occurred or the body was found.³⁶ However, in the absence of statutory authority, a justice of the peace has no right to hold an inquest over a dead body, inasmuch as that power is vested in the coroner alone.³⁷

VII. PRIVILEGES.

A coroner is clothed with certain judicial powers; and for error, mistake, or even misconduct, while acting in his judicial capacity, he is not liable to an action.³⁸ Thus an action will not lie against a coroner for defamatory words spoken by him while holding an inquest.³⁹ Nor will trespass lie against him for turning a man out of a room in which he is about to hold an inquest.⁴⁰ So also a coroner is privileged from arrest on civil process, while on his way to hold an inquest, and this privilege extends also to a deputy coroner, and if he is arrested under such circumstances the court will order his discharge.⁴¹ But a coroner is also authorized to exercise ministerial and executive duties; and when he acts in this capacity he is answerable to those who are injured by any excess or abuse of his official powers.⁴²

VIII. THE INQUEST.

A. Nature of Proceeding. The principal duty of a coroner is to hold inquests over the dead bodies of those who may reasonably be supposed to have come to their death by violence or through some cause which involves a violation of law, and in the performance of this duty he acts in a judicial capacity.⁴³

B. Necessity For Holding. The object of an inquest is to seek information and to obtain and secure evidence in case of death by violence or other unlawful means; and if there is reasonable ground to suspect that it was so caused, it becomes the duty of the coroner to act,⁴⁴ especially where he has abundant cause

36. Where the statute authorizes a justice of the peace to hold an inquest over a dead body where the office of the coroner is more than ten miles distant, such justice may hold an inquest over a body found more than ten miles from the coroner's office, although the coroner has a deputy resident within ten miles of the place. In re Reitnauer's Inquest, 14 Pa. It is the duty of the coroner to hold an inquest over the body of a deceased person, upon the receipt of information of the circumstances of his death which indicate that some one might be criminally liable; for the killing being known, the presumption is that the slayer is guilty of a crime, in the ab-

to believe that death was the result of violence or that the deceased was feloniously destroyed.⁴⁵ And where the cause of death is unknown, and a physician refuses to give a certificate of the cause of death, the coroner has, in the absence of other information, no discretion to refuse to hold an inquest upon the ground that it is unnecessary;⁴⁶ for while it is true that coroners ought not voluntarily to obtrude themselves into private houses, when they have received no notice from the police or other authority that death has occurred under circumstances which appear to them to call for an inquest,⁴⁷ it is also true that when a coroner receives from the proper police authorities information of a sudden death, in order that an inquest may be held, and when there is no medical certificate of death from any natural cause, or other ground on which he can reasonably form an opinion as to the actual cause of death, it is his duty to hold an inquest.⁴⁸ But a coroner may lawfully hold an inquest on the bodies of such persons only as may reasonably be supposed to have died by unlawful means,⁴⁹ or where the cause of death is unknown.⁵⁰ And where it is a clear case of suicide,⁵¹ and the cause of death is not doubtful, and there is no reason to suspect that it implicates any person, an inquest should not be held.⁵² The coroner should make a reasonable inquiry into the circumstances of the death before proceeding to summon a jury and hold an inquest;⁵³ for he has no authority to hold an inquest except for strictly public purposes,⁵⁴ and where there are no circumstances to arouse suspicion he is not justified in holding an inquest merely because a reputable citizen requests him to do so for his protection.⁵⁵ A coroner has no ex officio jurisdiction at common law to hold any other inquest than one on a dead body, super visum corporis.⁵⁶ He cannot therefore hold an inquest to inquire into the origin of a fire by which no death has been occasioned.⁵⁷

C. Time of Holding. It is the duty of the coroner upon receiving notice that a person within his jurisdiction has died by violence or through some unknown or unnatural cause to summon a jury and hold an inquest upon the body within a reasonable time.⁵⁸

D. Place of Holding. Generally the inquest should be held in the county where the body is found.⁵⁹ And where, after a body has been removed from the county where the death occurred to another county, suspicions arise as to the cause of the death, an inquest may properly be held in the county to which the body has been removed.⁶⁰

E. Summoning Jury. At common law when notice is given to the coroner of a misadventure calling for an inquest, he should issue a precept to the constable to return a competent number, twelve at least, of good and lawful men to make an inquisition touching that matter;⁶¹ and if the constable makes no return, or the jurors returned do not appear, the default should be returned by the coroner, and the parties in default are liable to be amerced.⁶² Or, as has been held, the coroner's power to summon a jury of inquest includes the incidental means of rendering that power efficient, and he may himself impose a fine on a juror who refuses to attend.⁶³

Where the cause of death and the death occurred in the county of Surrey, and the body after death was removed to the city of London, it was held that the inquest was properly held by the coroner of London. Reg. v. Ellis, 2 C. & K. 470, 61 E. C. L. 470. But see Rentschler v. County, 1 Leg. Rev. (Pa.) 289, where it was held that a coroner has no jurisdiction to hold an inquest where the death occurred in another county, even though the body has been brought into his county.

61. 2 Hale P. C. 59.

The coroner should issue his warrant to a constable to summon a jury of inquest; and where a juror is summoned by the coroner in person the summons is illegal. City Coroner v. Cunningham, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 454. In Georgia, however, it seems that the coroner may summon the jury himself, but if he does so he is not entitled to any fees for doing it. Davis v. Bibb County, (Ga. 1902) 42 S. E. 403.

Constable as a juror.—In Reg. v. Winegarner, 17 Ont. 208, it was held that the constable to whom the coroner delivered the precept to summon a jury to serve on an inquest was not precluded from acting as a juror.

The number of jurors has in many jurisdictions been reduced—usually to six. See the local statutes. See also forms of inquisitions signed by the coroner and six jurors in U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Vocke, 129 Ill. 561, 22 N. E. 467, 6 L. R. A. 65; Reg. v. Farley, 24 U. C. Q. B. 384.

F. Swearing Jury. The jury is to be sworn and charged to inquire upon the view of the body how the person came to his death, whether by murder by any person, by misfortune, or as felo de se; ⁶⁴ but it seems that it is not necessary that the jurors should be sworn super visum corporis, that they should all be sworn at the same time, or that they should all view the body at the same time, ⁶⁵ although it is doubtless the better practice for the coroner to swear the jury in the presence of the body. ⁶⁶

G. View of Body. The inquest to be valid must be held super visum corporis, that is, the coroner and jury must have a view of the body. ⁶⁷ And where an inquisition has been quashed and sent down to the coroner for a fresh inquiry before a new jury, such fresh inquiry must be made super visum corporis; ⁶⁸ but the coroner has no power, after holding an inquest and recording the verdict, to hold a second inquest on the same body, the first not having been quashed, and no writ of melius inquirendum having been awarded. ⁶⁹ And as the inquest must be held super visum corporis the coroner should take up the body for that purpose, in case it has been buried before his arrival. ⁷⁰

H. The Autopsy. A coroner may order an autopsy to be made, when in his judgment that is the appropriate means of ascertaining the cause of a person's death; ⁷¹ and this he may do without the consent of the family of the

A coroner is a public officer charged with the duty of holding inquests, and is clothed with general powers for that purpose, among which is the power to summon physicians to make a scientific examination of the body when the jury shall deem such examination necessary. admissible to show that he was employed by the coroner;⁷⁷ but it seems that authority to employ a physician to make an autopsy does not authorize the coroner to charge the county, by the employment of a chemist to make a chemical analysis for the detection of poison.⁷⁸

I. Attendance and Examination of Witnesses. The coroner when holding an inquest is a judicial officer and has the same power to compel witnesses to attend and answer pertinent questions that other judicial officers possess;⁷⁹ and he has power to punish a recalcitrant witness in like manner as may be done under a subpoena from a justice of the peace.⁸⁰ The witnesses should be sworn and examined under oath touching the matters inquired of at the inquest;⁸¹ and they should be sworn by the coroner himself. A justice of the peace has no power or authority to administer an oath at an inquest held by the coroner.⁸² A juror may properly be sworn and give evidence as a witness.⁸³ An accused person has no right to be confronted with the witnesses called to testify before the coroner at an inquest;⁸⁴ nor has he the privilege of producing witnesses in his own behalf;⁸⁵ and the coroner has no power to take testimony to establish the innocence of the prisoner and then discharge him contrary to the finding of the jury.⁸⁶ It is, however, the duty of the coroner to present before the jury all the material testimony within his power touching the death or wounding, as to the manner whereof the jury are to certify, and that which makes for as well as against the party accused.⁸⁷ And in a case of murder or manslaughter, it is his duty to bind over all witnesses who prove any material fact against the person accused.⁸⁸

J. The Inquisition or Return — 1. GENERAL REQUISITES. At common law the inquisition was required to be written on parchment and not on paper.⁸⁹ It should show on its face the date when the inquest was held;⁹⁰ and if there has been an adjournment it is better to set it out in the caption of the inquisition, but it is sufficient to describe the inquest as being held on the first day of the sitting.⁹¹

Innes, 26 Pa. St. 156; Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. St. 269; Allegheny County v. Watts, 3 Pa. St. 462. It has been held, however, that where a physician renders his professional services at an inquest, at the request of the coroner, with no special agreement that he shall look to any other source than the coroner for payment, the coroner himself is liable for the fee. Van Hoevenbergh v. Hasbrouck, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 197. But this case was decided before the act of 1874 was passed, making the physician's services in such case a charge against the county. See People v. Niagara County, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 680, 38 N. Y. St. 964. In Rutherford v. Harris County, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 114, it was held that the county was liable for such fees, although there was no statute declaring such liability; but the supreme court of Texas has established the contrary rule, and it is held that a physician cannot recover a fee from the county for making a post mortem examination, unless the statute imposes the expense upon the county. It should also appear that the findings were made under oath;⁹² and it should be stated where and when the death happened and where the body was found,⁹³ unless there is a statute making such statement unnecessary;⁹⁴ and where a crime is charged the inquisition should identify the body viewed as that of the person who was slain.⁹⁵ Where an inquest is held by a justice of the peace acting as coroner, the return is defective if it does not show upon its face that the justice had jurisdiction.⁹⁶ The return must of course include any additional matters required by statute.⁹⁷

2. SIGNATURE OF CORONER AND JURORS. The inquisition should be signed by the coroner and all the jurors;⁹⁸ and they should sign their full names unless they are set out at length in the caption or body of the inquisition;⁹⁹ and if any do sign with their marks, such marks should be verified by an attestation.¹

3. SEAL. It appears that there is no express authority requiring the inquisition to be sealed,² but the practice of sealing is well-nigh universal and would better not be departed from.³

4. QUASHING INQUISITION. If the inquisition or return is defective by reason of a failure to state any one or more of the requisite particulars it may be quashed;⁴ and the court may quash an inquisition in which the facts of the case are stated if the verdict found is not warranted by those facts;⁵ but the

Where the jury found that a boy had committed suicide, and further expressed the opinion that the boy's master had not done justice to him in the matter of clothing and the labor to be performed, the court refused to quash the inquisition on account of the latter finding. Matter of Miller's Inquest, 15 U. C. Q. B. 244. For an analogous case see Reg. v. Farley, 24 U. C. Q. B. 384.

court will not receive extrinsic evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of the jury;⁶ for the court will not quash an inquisition unless it appears bad on the face of it or fraud is shown.⁷ It is not every defect, however, that will warrant the quashing of the inquisition, for minor defects may be cured by amendment;⁸ but where the defect is one of substance the inquisition cannot be amended and should be quashed.⁹

K. Return of Evidence. At common law the coroner is not bound to put in writing the effect of the evidence given upon an inquest, unless the offense be found to be murder or manslaughter;¹⁰ but in a case of murder or manslaughter it is his duty to read over to every witness examined on the inquest the evidence he has given, and then procure his signature to the same and return it with the inquisition in order that the deposition may be used in the prosecution of the offender.¹¹ Where the statute requires the coroner to make a return of the testimony with the inquisition, he should certify that the witnesses named were sworn before him and that their testimony is correctly stated.¹²

L. Disposition of Property. The disposition of the property of a decedent by the coroner is generally a statutory proceeding which must be strictly pursued in order to avoid personal liability. If money or other property be found on the body, it is the obvious duty of the coroner to make an inventory of the same and take it into his possession, after which he must turn it over to the public officer appointed by law to be the custodian thereof.¹³

M. Disposition of Body. Ordinarily, when the coroner holds an inquest upon the body of a stranger or a pauper, and no friend or relative appears to claim the body for burial, he should cause the same to be plainly and decently buried at the expense of the county wherein the body was found.¹⁴

N. Fees and Mileage of Jurors and Witnesses. In the absence of a statute authorizing their payment, the jurors and witnesses at a coroner's inquest are not entitled to fees or mileage;¹⁵ but in many cases these are allowed by

O. Liability For Costs and Expenses. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the county, and not the estate of the deceased, is liable for the lawful costs and expenses of a coroner's inquest, including the fees of the coroner, constable, jurors, and witnesses;¹⁹ but in some jurisdictions by statute the county is liable for such expenses only in case the estate of the deceased is insufficient to pay them.²⁰

P. Arrest and Detention of Persons Implicated. In England the finding of a coroner's jury is equivalent to a bill of indictment, and persons implicated may be tried on the inquisition;²¹ but in the United States the rule is otherwise,²² and a coroner's inquest is no part of a criminal prosecution, although it may result in the discovery of facts which will lead to one,²³ for the coroner has the power to have arrested and held for trial in the proper court persons who are by the inquest implicated in the crime of murder or manslaughter;²⁴ but he issues his process for the apprehension of the accused, when not in custody, solely upon the

Q. Admissibility of Record in Evidence. In a civil action²⁶ the record of a coroner's inquest upon a dead body is competent, although not conclusive, evidence of the cause of death;²⁷ but the rule applies only where an inquest has been duly held according to law. A report made by the coroner without holding an inquest stands on another footing and is not admissible in evidence.²⁸ It has been held that even the verdict of the coroner's jury is not admissible in evidence to establish the cause of death, where such cause is a controverted question.²⁹ And it has been further held that the verdict of a coroner's jury imputing negligence to a party cannot be received in evidence against him in an action to recover damages for injuries resulting in death.³⁰

IX. COMPENSATION AND FEES OF CORONER.

A. At Common Law. At common law coroners were entitled to no compensation for their services; nor was it supposed that they would condescend to accept any, inasmuch as they were required to be knights or men of sufficient estate to be made knights.³¹

B. By Statute. By statute, however, coroners were for a time allowed fees for their attendance;³² and now, in England, the fee system is abolished by statute and coroners are paid by salary.³³ In the United States this matter is regulated by statute; in some cases, allowing the coroner fees and mileage for his attendance, in others, allowing him a fixed salary in lieu of all fees.³⁴

C. Inquest Must Have Been Necessary. A coroner is not entitled to fees unless there was reasonable ground for holding the inquest for which they are claimed.³⁵ And his claim should be rejected where it does not appear that any ground existed for suspecting that the death inquired of was not a natural one,³⁶ or where it is obviously impossible to ascertain who the deceased was, how long since death ensued, or in what manner it was caused.³⁷ And the presumption that the coroner acted in good faith and upon sufficient cause is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by evidence that he acted in bad faith and without sufficient cause or reason;³⁸ but a coroner acts and ought to act upon information, not upon conclusive evidence. The inquest itself is an inquiry into the cause of death, and dollars for each inquest, unless he has already received more than fifteen hundred dollars during the year in which the inquest is taken. Davis v. Bibb County, (Ga. 1902) 42 S. E. 403.

Ind. Rev. Stat. (1881), § 5892, relating to the payment of fees for holding inquests was repealed by the fee and salary act of March 12, 1875, and should not have been included in the revision of 1881. Dubois County v. Wertz, 112 Ind. 268, 13 N. E. 874; Pfaff v. State, 94 Ind. 529.

There are cases holding that a coroner is not entitled to mileage. In re Coroner's Inquests, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 677; In re Coroner's Inquests, 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 446. But now in some counties at least they are allowed mileage from the court-house to the place of view. Echard v. Fayette County, 5 Pa. Dist. 371, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. A coroner is not entitled to extra fees for taking minutes of the testimony at the inquest (People v. Niagara County, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 680, 38 N. Y. St. 964), or for doing the writing required by the statute (Sanford v. Lee County, 49 Iowa 148).

C. 382, the author states that the court on two several occasions within his own memory blamed the coroners of Norfolk and Anglesea for holding repeated and unnecessary inquests, for the sake of enhancing their fees, on bodies and parts of bodies of persons unknown who were cast upon the seashores, without the smallest probability or suspicion of the deaths having been in any other manner than by the unfortunate perils of the sea.

Under the Missouri statute providing that no coroner's fees shall be allowed unless it appears to the court that the coroner had reasonable cause to believe that the body was that of a person who had come to his death by violence or casualty, such allowance is discretionary with the county court, and for a refusal mandamus will not lie. State v. Marshall, 82 Mo. 484. But see Boisliniere v. St. Louis County, 32 Mo. 375, where it is said that the coroner is the sole judge of the propriety of holding an inquest.

Where the coroner's fees were not fixed by statute, it was held that the county court might fix the amount at discretion and that the order was not reviewable by the supreme court. Cook v. Multnomah County, 8 Ore. 170.

it is not necessary that the coroner should be certain of such cause before he ventures to hold his inquest.³⁹

D. Inquest Must Have Been Duly Held. The due taking of an inquisition by a coroner is a condition precedent to his being entitled to compensation under a statute allowing him fees.⁴⁰ Consequently fees cannot be allowed a coroner for a preliminary examination to determine whether an inquest is necessary, where it is found that an inquest is not necessary;⁴¹ and he is not entitled to any fees for the inspection and examination of the body of a person found dead in his county, unless he impanels a jury, as the word "viewing" means an inquiry by a coroner and a jury.⁴²

E. Inquest Upon Several Bodies at One Time. One inquisition may be taken on the bodies of several persons who were killed by the same cause and died at the same time;⁴³ but in such case the coroner is entitled to mileage as in only one case.⁴⁴ It has been held, however, that where a coroner holds separate inquests over the bodies of several persons who were killed by the same cause, and qualifies the jury separately in each case, he is entitled to the regular fees in each case.⁴⁵

X. REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

By the ancient law of England the lord chancellor had jurisdiction over coroners, and it was his duty to listen to any complaint that might be made against them in the discharge of their duty;⁴⁶ and now it is provided by statute that it shall be lawful for the lord chancellor, if he shall think fit, to remove any coroner for inability or misbehavior in his office.⁴⁷ Upon an order for the removal of a coroner from office it was the old practice, which still prevails, to issue writs de corona tore exonerando and de coronatore eligendo at the same time.⁴⁸

49. By Charter of New York City, § 1769, it is provided that each coroner of said city shall, on assuming office, appoint a qualified physician who shall be a resident in said city, and shall be known as a "coroner's physician." Any vacancy in the office of coroner's physician shall be filled by the board of coroners. The board of coroners, for cause, may remove the physician appointed by them. This is adopted from the N. Y. Laws (1878), c. 256, § 3. Under this statute it has been held that the tenure of a coroner's physician continues subject to removal during the term. People v. Zucca, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 260, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 311.

But one coroner cannot remove an incumbent officer, although he appointed him; that must be done by the board of coroners. People v. Zucca, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 260, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 311.

"'Corporal oath' and 'solemn oath' are equivalent, and either is sustained by proof of swearing with uplifted hands." 2 Wharton Crim. L. §§ 2205-2206 [quoted in Com. v. Jarboe, 89 Ky. 143, 146, 12 S. W. 138, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 344]. "However it may have been in somewhat olden time, in Europe, we think that now, at least, in our state, 'corporal oath' and 'solemn oath' are used synonymously, and that an oath taken with the uplifted hand, may be properly described by either term." Jackson v. State, 1 Ind. 184, 185 [quoted in Com. v. Jarboe, 89 Ky. 143, 146, 12 S. W. 138, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 344]. See also Com. v. Jarboe, 89 Ky. 143, 145, 12 S. W. 138, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 344, where it is said: "What is termed a corporal oath was anciently administered by touching the cloth that covered the consecrated elements, or, as some suppose, from the fact that the party taking it was required to lay his hand upon the Bible; but a corporal oath, as latterly understood, means merely a solemn oath, although the name is derived from the ancient usage just mentioned."

It is set in contradistinction to a fine; which latter may, in the discretion of the court, be awarded in the absence of the defendant."
